Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 1364.

Three mots on this bugle will, I am assured, bring round, at our need, a jolly band of yonder honest yeomen.
Scott, Ivanhoe, xl.

mot[4] (mot), n. [See moat[1].] 1. An obsolete or dialectal form of moat.—2. A mark for players at quoits. Halliwell.

motacil (mot′a-sil), n. [= F. motacille = Sp. motacila = Pg motacilla, < L. motacilla, the white water-wagtail, < motus (with dim. suffix), pp. of movere, move: see move. The L. word is commonly explained as lit. 'wagtail,' as if irreg. < L. motare, move (freq. of movere, move), + cilla*, assumed to mean 'tail.'] A wagtail. See Motacilla.

Motacilla (mō-ta-sil′ä), n. [NL., < L. motacilla, the white water-wagtail: see motacil.] A genus of chiefly Old World oscine passerine birds, typical of the family Motacillidæ or wagtails. The name has been used with great latitude and little discrimination for many small singing birds of all parts of the world, as the true Sylviidæ or Old World warblers, various Muscicapidæ or Old World flycatchers, many of the American Sylvicolidæ or wood-warblers, and for all the Motacillidæ, including the pipits or titlarks of the subfamily Anthinæ. It is now restricted to the black-and-white or pied wagtails, as M. alba, of lithe form, with massed coloration of black, white, and ashy, long vibratile tail of twelve weak narrow feathers, pointed wings whose tip is formed by the first three primaries, and whose inner secondaries are long and flowing, and long slender feet without specially lengthened or straightened hind claws. There are many species, widely distributed in Europe, Asia, and other parts of the Old World, one or two of which sometimes straggle to America. Thus, M. alba has been found in Greenland and M. ocularis in California.

Motacillidæ (mō-ta-sil′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Motacilla + -idæ.] A family of oscine birds of the order Passeres, typified by the genus Motacilla; the wagtails. The bill is shorter than the head, straight, slender, acute, and notched; the primaries are nine in number; the inner secondaries are lengthened; the feet are long and slender, with scutellate tarsi and usually long and straightened claw; and the tail is usually as long as the wings. The Motacillidæ are small insectivorous birds of terrestrial habits, resembling larks (Alaudidæ) in some respects, but widely separated by the laminiplantation of the podotheca. Two subfamilies are generally recognized, Motacillinæ and Anthinæ, or wagtails proper and pipits or titlarks.

Motacillinæ (mō″ta-si-lī′nē), n. pl. [< Motacilla + -inæ.] 1. The Motacillidæ as a subfamily of some other family, as Sylviidæ.—2. A subfamily of Motacillidæ. It contains the wagtails proper as distinguished from the pipits or Anthinæ, having the point of the wing formed by the first three primaries, the tail as long as the wing or longer, and the coloration either pied with black and white or varied with yellow and green. There are some 50 species, chiefly of two leading genera Motacilla and Budytes. See wagtail.

motacilline (mō-ta-sil′in), a. Pertaining to or resembling the Motacillinæ.

motation† (mō-tā′shon), n. [< LL. motatio(n-), < L. motare, keep moving, freq. of movere, move: see move.] The act of moving; mobility. Bailey, 1731.

motatorious (mō-ta-tō′ri-us), a. [< LL. motator, a mover, < L. motare, pp. motatus, move: see motation.] Vibratory; mobile: said of the legs of an insect or arachnid which, on alighting, has the habit of moving them rapidly, keeping the body in a constant state of vibration. This habit is found especially among certain long-legged spiders and crane-flies.

Motazilite (mō-taz′i-līt), n. [< Ar. mu'tazil, a seceder, a separatist.] One of a numerous and powerful sect of Mohammedan heretics, who to a great extent denied predestination, holding that man's actions were entirely within the control of his own will. They held extremely heretical opinions with reference to the quality or attributes of Deity. They appeared a few generations after Mohammed, and became one of the most important and dangerous sects of heretics in Islam.

mote[1] (mōt), n. [Formerly also moat; < ME. mot (dat. mote), < AS. mot, a particle, atom, = D. mot, dust; cf. D. moet, a knob, speck, mark; Sp. mota, a bur in cloth. Cf. moat[1].] 1. A small particle, as of dust visible in a ray of sunlight; anything very small.

Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Vocation.

Motella (mō-tel'ä), n. [NL., < F. motelle, the eel-pout (cf. mustelle, the whistlefish); < L. mustela, a fish, the eel-pout: see Mustela.] A genus of gadoid fishes; the rocklings. They are of small size, with elongate body, small scales, two dorsal fins, and one anal. There are several species, of northern seas, as M. mustela. Properly Gaidropsarus.

motere†, v. A Middle English form of mutter. Prompt. Parv., p. 30.

motet (mō-tet'), n. [Also motett, mottett; = F. motet = Sp. Pg. motete, < It. mottetto (ML. motetum), a motet, dim. of motto, a word, saying: see mot[2], motto.] In music: (a) A vocal composition in somewhat strict polyphonic style, having a Biblical or similar prose text, and intended to be sung in a church service. Originally the motet was designed as a contrast to the plain-song of the remainder of the service, and probably it often possessed something of the graceful intricacy of the madrigal. The earliest motets date from about 1300. The use of an instrumental accompaniment is usually limited, and often avoided altogether. (b) Any vocal work in harmony intended for use in a church service; an anthem. Strictly speaking, a motet is in medieval style, and an anthem in modern style; but the distinction is often ignored.

motettist (mō-tet'ist), n. [< motet, motett, + -ist.] A composer or singer of motets.

motetus (mō-tē'tus), n. [ML., also motetum.] In medieval music, a middle voice or voice-part; ★a mean.

moth[1] (môth), n. [< ME. mothe, moththe, < AS. moththe = MD. motte, D. mot = MLG. LG. mutte = MHG. motte, matte, G. motte = Icel. motti, a moth, = Sw. mott, a moth; also E. dial. mought, < ME. moughte, mowghte, moughthe, < AS. mohthe. Perhaps akin to mad[2], made[2], whence maddock, mawk, a maggot. The forms are somewhat discordant; perhaps two or more orig. diff. words are involved.] 1. A nocturnal or crepuscular lepidopterous insect; a member of the order Lepidoptera and suborder Heterocera. Moths resemble butterflies, but for the most part fly by night instead of by day, and their antennæ, though exhibiting great diversity of size and shape, are not rhopalocerous or clubbed at the end like those of butterflies. There are many families and very numerous genera and species. Aside from numberless specific names, moths are distinguished by the leading families under English names. Hawk-moths are Sphingidæ and related families; butterfly hawk-moths, Uraniidæ (various popular names), Zygænidæ; clear-winged hawk-moths, Sesiidæ; swift-moths, Hepialidæ; lappet-moths or silkworm-moths, Bombycidæ; tiger-moths, Arctiidæ; lackey-moths, Lithosiidæ; rustic moths, Noctuidæ; geometrid moths, Geometridæ; meal-moths, Pyralidæ; leaf-rolling moths, Tortricidæ; ermine-moths, Yponomeutidæ; leaf-mining moths, Tineidæ; plume-moths, Alucitidæ (or Pterophoridæ). The tineids include the various small moths injurious to carpets and other woolen fabrics. The smaller moths, of several families, are often collectively designated Microlepidoptera. Various small white mealy moths are called millers. See the above names, and cuts under sphinx, Bombyx, Cidaria, Eacles, Carpocapsa, and Agrotis.

An vnredy reue thi residue shal spene,
That menye moththe was maister ynne, in a mynte-while.
Piers Plowman (C), xiii. 216.

2. Any larva that destroys woolen fabrics.—3. Figuratively, one who or that which gradually and silently eats, consumes, or wastes anything.

If I be left behind,
A moth of peace, and he go to the war.
Shak., Othello, i. 3. 257.

Bee-hawk moth. See bee-hawk.—Buffalo moth, a popular misnomer of the dermestid beetle Anthrenus scrophulariæ, derived from the brown hairy humped larva. mother-of-pearl (muᴛʜ′ėr-o͝v-pėrl′), n. The nacreous inner layer of the shell of various bivalve mollusks, as of the pearl-oyster, when hard, silvery, iridescent, or otherwise sufficiently beautiful to have commercial value; nacre. It is the substance of which pearls consist, a pearl being a mass of it instead of a layer. The large oysters of the Indian seas secrete this nacreous layer of sufficient thickness to render their shells available for purposes of trade. The genus Meleagrina furnishes the finest pearls as well as mother-of-pearl. These shells are found in the greatest perfection round the coasts of Ceylon, near Ormuz in the Persian Gulf, and in the Australian seas. Mother-of-pearl is procured from many different shells, univalve as well as bivalve, and is extensively used in the arts, particularly in inlaid work, and in the manufacture of knife-handles, buttons, toys, snuff-boxes, etc.—Mother-of-pearl work, a kind of embroidery in which many small pieces of mother-of-pearl are sewed to the background, small holes being bored in them for the purpose. The outlines of the flowers, leaves, etc., made by the thin mother-of-pearl are indicated by silk or gold thread, in which material are also made the light sprays, stems, etc.

mother-of-thousands (muᴛʜ′ėr-o͝v-thou′-zandz), n. The Kenilworth or Colosseum ivy. See ivy[1]. The name is less frequently applied to a few other plants, especially Saxifraga sarmentosa, the strawberry-geranium, of similar habit. [Prov. Eng.]

mothership†, n. [ME. moderschipe, moderchep*; < mother[1] + -ship.] Motherhood.

He hathe seyde as myche ther ageyns as he dar do to have hyr gode moderchep. Paston Letters, I. 258.

mothersome (muᴛʜ′ėr-sum), a. [< mother + -some.] Careful or anxious, as a mother is. Mrs. Trollope, Michael Armstrong, xv.

mother-spot (muᴛʜ′ėr-spot), n. A congenital spot and discoloration of the skin; a birth-mark. See nævus.

mother-tongue (muᴛʜ′ėr-tung′), n. 1. One's native language.—2. A tongue or language to which other languages owe their origin.

mother-vessel (muᴛʜ′ėr-ves″el), n. A souring-vat used in the manufacture of wine-vinegar.

mother-water (muᴛʜ′ėr-wâ″tėr), n. In chem. and phar., and in chemical industries, water which has contained dissolved substances, and which remains after a part or the whole of these substances has crystallized or has been precipitated in an amorphous condition. Also called mother-liquor, mother-lye, and mothers.

mother-wit (muᴛʜ′ėr-wit′), n. Native wit; common sense.

For whatsoever mother-wit or arte
Could worke, he put in proofe.
Spenser, Mother Hub. Tale, l. 1138.

Kath. Where did you study all this goodly speech?—
Pet. It is extempore, from my mother-wit.
Shak., T. of the S., ii. 1. 265.

mothery (muᴛʜ′ėr-i), a. [< mother[2] + -y[1].] Containing or of the consistence of mother (see mother[2]); resembling or partaking of the nature of mother: as, the mothery substance in liquors.

Is it not enough to make the clearest liquid in the world both feculent and mothery? Sterne, Tristram Shandy, ii. 19.

moth-gnat (môth′nat), n. A dipterous insect of the family Psychodidæ.

moth-hawk (môth′hâk), n. The nightjar.

moth-hunter (môth′hun″tėr), n. 1. A lepidopterist.—2. A goatsucker or moth-hawk; any bird of the family Caprimulgidæ. See cut under goatsucker.

mothing (môth′ing), n. [< moth[1] + -ing[1].] The catching of moths. [Rare.]

He [the entomologist] need not relax his endeavors day or night. Mothing is night employment.
A. S. Packard, Study of Insects, p. 84.

moth-mullen (môth′mul″en), n. See mullen.

moth-orchid (môth′ôr″kid), n. Same as moth-plant.

moth-patch (môth′pach), n. A term loosely applied to various patches of increased pigmentation in the skin.

moth-plant (môth′plant), n. A plant of the genus Phalænopsis.

moth-sphinx (môth′sfingks), n. A moth of the family Castniidæ.

moth-trap (môth′trap), n. In bee-keeping, a device to capture the moths whose larvæ prey upon the bees in the hive, or to capture the larvæ themselves.

mothy (môth′i), a. [< moth[1] + -y[1].] Containing moths; eaten by moths.

An old mothy saddle. Shak., T. of the S., iii. 2. 49.

motif (F. pron. mō-tēf′), n. 1†. A Middle English form of motive.

Freres fele sithes to the folke that thei prechen
Meuen motifs meny tymes insolibles and fallaces,
That both lered and lewed of here byleyue douten.
Piers Plowman (C), xvii. 230.

2. [F.] A datum, theme, or ground for intellectual action: used as French.

The motifs or data which give to the mind its guidance in achieving its more difficult tasks are the spatial series of muscular and tactual sensations which are caused by the motions of the eye for parallel turning, for accommodation, and for convergence in near vision.
G. T. Ladd, Physiol. Psychology, p. 463.

3. [F.] In music: (a) A figure. (b) A subject or theme, particularly one that recurs often in a dramatic work as a leading subject.

motific (mō-tif′ik), a. [< L. motus, motion (see mote[5]), + facere, make.] Producing or inducing motion; motor or motorial. Good. [Rare.]

motile (mō′til), a. and n. [< L. as if motilis*, < movere, pp. motus, move: see move.] I. a. Capable of spontaneous motion; executing automatic or apparently voluntary movements: as, a motile flagellum; motile cilia, spores, etc.

II. n. One in whose mind motor images are predominant or especially distinct.

This division of men into visuals, audiles, motiles, . . . [i. e., cases where motor representations are the favorite furniture of the mind]. Mind, XI. 415.

motility (mō-til′i-ti), n. [= F. motilité = Pg. motilidade, < L. as if motilita(t-)s*, < motilis*, motile: see motile.] The quality of being motile; capability of moving; capability of automatic or spontaneous motion: the opposite of stability.

★motion (mō′shon), n. [< ME. motion, mocion, < OF. motion, F. motion = Sp. moción = Pg. moção = It. mozione, < L. mōtio(n-), a moving, an emotion, < movere, pp. motus, move: see move.] 1. Change of place; transition from one point or position in space to another; continuous variation of position: used both concretely, for a single change of position, and abstractly, to denote such change considered as a character belonging to the moving body, and also generally for a class of phenomena.

There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubins.
Shak., M. of V., v. 1. 61.

Encouraged thus, she brought her younglings nigh,
Watching the motions of her patron's eye.
Dryden, Hind and Panther, i. 533.

The atomists, who define motion to be a passage from one place to another, what do they more than put one synonymous word for another? For what is passage other than motion? Locke, Human Understanding, III. iv. 3.

All that we know about motion is that it is a name for certain changes in the relations of our visual, tactile, and muscular sensations.
Huxley, Sensation and Sensiferous Organs.

Consider for a moment a number of passengers walking on the deck of a steamer. Their relative motions with regard to the deck are what we immediately observe, but if we compound with these the velocity of the steamer itself we get evidently their actual motion relatively to the earth.
Thomson and Tait, Nat. Philos., § 45.

2†. The power of moving; ability to change one's position.

As long as there is motion in my body,
And life to give me words, I'll cry for justice!
Fletcher, Valentinian, iii. 1.

Swallow'd up and lost
In the wide womb of uncreated night, Devoid of sense and motion. Milton, P. L., ii. 151.

3. Style or manner of moving; carriage. [Rare.]

A true-bred English Beau has, indeed, the Powder, the Essences, the Tooth-pick, and the Snuff-box, and is as Idle; but the fault is in the Flesh, he has not the motion, and looks stiff under all this.
C. Burnaby, The Reform'd Wife (1700), p. 32, quoted in [N. and Q., 7th ser., V. 334.

4. In astron., angular velocity; amount of angular movement, especially the rate of movement of a heavenly body in longitude: as, the mean daily motion of the sun is 3548″.—5. In mech., any mechanism for modifying the movement in a machine, or for making certain parts change their positions in certain ways; also, the action of such mechanism: as, the slide-valve motion of an engine; heart-motion in spinning-machines, etc.—6†. A puppet, or a similar figure mechanically moved; also, a puppet-show.

Like dead motions moving upon wires.
Beau. and Fl., Woman-Hater, iii. 1.

They say there is a new motion of the city of Nineveh, with Jonas and the whale, to be seen at Fleet-bridge.
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, ii. 3.

Like the masters of a puppet-show, they despise those motions which fill common spectators with wonder and delight. Swift, Change in Queen's Ministry.

7. In philos., any change: a translation of κίνησις. There are four kinds of motion, according to Aristotelians—generation and corruption, alteration, augmentation and diminution, and change of place. Bacon distinguishes nineteen kinds of simple motions, which seem to be something like elementary forces.

8. A natural impulse, as of the senses, but especially of the mind or soul; tendency of desires or passions; mental agitation.

When we were in the flesh, the motions of sins, which were by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death. Rom. vii. 5.

Hee found more motions of Religion in him than could be imagined. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 59.

The people, exorbitant and excessive in all thir motions, are prone oftimes not to a religious onely, but to a civil kind of Idolatry in Idolizing thir Kings.
Milton, Eikonoklastes, Pref.

Catch, in the pauses of their keenest play,
Motions of thought which elevate the will.
Wordsworth, Sonnets, iii. 40.

Woman's pleasure, woman's pain—
Nature made them blinder motions bounded in a shallower brain. Tennyson, Locksley Hall.

9†. Animal life; the faculty of automatic movement and sensation or feeling; the exercise of such faculty; something which usually belongs equally to soul and body, though occasionally confined to one or the other.

Ay, but to die and go we know not where;
To lie in cold obstruction and to rot;
This sensible warm motion to become A kneaded clod. Shak., M. for M., iii. 1. 120.

10. Inclination; disposition; impulse; will: as, of one's own motion.

In 16 Edw. IV., 1476, . . . [the Lynenwevers] . . . "of thaire fre mocion and will have bounden thayme and thayre craft perpetually to kepe . . . upon Corpus Cristi day a pageant. . . ." (Council Book III. fo. 20° v.)
York Plays, Int., p. xxvii.

11. Proposal; instigation; incitement.

Then he said to hys cardynals, Sirs, make you redy, for I woll to Rome. Of that mocyon his cardynalles were sore abashed and displeased, for they loued nat the Romaynes.
Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron., I. cccxxvi.

Between the acting of a dreadful thing
And the first motion, all the interim is Like a phantasma, or a hideous dream.
Shak., J. C., ii. 1. 64.

12. A proposal or proposition formally made; specifically, a proposal formally submitted in a deliberative assembly, with a view to its discussion and adoption; also, the act of submitting such a proposal: as, the motion to appoint a committee was carried.

The motion aboute setting forth ye fishing ship (caled ye Frindship) came first from ye plantation.
Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 286.

Valentine and Hollis held the Speaker down in his seat by main force, and read the motion amidst the loudest shouts. Macaulay, Nugent's Hampden.

13. In law: (a) An application to a court or judge, usually in the course of a legal proceeding. Whatever is asked of a court by a suitor is asked by a motion. (b) More narrowly, an application which is incidental to the progress of a cause, as distinguished from the trial or investigation of the issue: as, a motion for an injunction; a motion to open a default. Still further distinctions are made in common parlance. Thus, applications on the trial incidental to its progress, such as to strike out testimony or to grant a non-suit, are called motions, though, being on the trial, and the result being included in the judgment, they are not motions within the rules regulating the formalities required for making motions, the record of the decision, the award of costs, or the mode of review. (c) In some of the United States, the paper drawn up by the attorney of the moving party, saying, "now comes the plaintiff (or defendant)," etc., "and moves," etc. (much in the same way that an application to the court would be entered in the minutes), and filed with the clerk in advance of applying to the court, and usually also served on the other party.—14. In music: (a) The melodic change of a voice or voice-part from one pitch to another; melodic progression. It is concrete, conjunct, or conjoint when it consists of a single step, discrete or disjunct when of a skip. (b) The melodic progression of any two voice-parts in harmonic writing in relation to each other. It is similar when both voice-parts rise or fall at the same time, parallel when they together rise or fall by the same interval, contrary or opposite when one rises and the other falls, oblique when one rises or falls while the other remains stationary, and mixed when all varieties occur at once in several parts. In general, between important or conspicuous parts, contrary motion is sought. Parallel motion in perfect fifths or octaves is regularly forbidden; and similar motion to a perfect fifth or octave is employed sparingly.
15. In the fine arts, the change of place or position which, from the attitude represented, a figure is portrayed as making. It can only be implied from the attitude which prepares the subject for the given change, and therefore differs from action.
16. In med., evacuation of the intestine; alvine discharge.

Shall I lose my doctor? no; he gives me the potions and the motions. Shak., M. W. of W., iii. 1. 105.

17. In milit. tactics, one of the stages into which each movement prescribed in the manual of arms is divided to facilitate instruction. —Absolute motion, change of absolute place.—Accelerated motion. See accelerate.—Active motion, in kinesitherapy, motion of the limbs or other parts of the patient produced by his own exertion, in contradistinction to passive motion, where the limbs are moved by the attendant.—Angular motion. See angular.—Brunonian motion. Same as Brownian movement (which see, under Brownian).—Center of motion. See center[1].—Ciliary motion. See ciliary.—Consensual motions. See consensual.—Contrariety of motion. See contrariety.—Differential motion. See differential.—Direct motion. (a) In astron., increase in the longitude of a star. (b) In music. See direct.—Disjunct motion. See def. 14 (a).—Diurnal motion of a planet, elliptic motion, equable motion. See the adjectives.—Energy of motion. See energy, 7.—Equation of motion. See equation.—Focus of mean motion, of true motion. See focus.—Harmonious motion. See harmonious.—Heart-motion, in spinning, winding, and analogous machines, a motion produced by means of a heart-shaped cam.—Horary motion, the space moved through by a heavenly body in an hour.—Hourly motion, in astron., the change of position which takes place in an hour.—Intestinal, irrotational motion. See the adjectives.—Lateral motion, in a railroad-car, the end-play or freedom of movement of an axle in its boxes, or the freedom of movement between a swing-bolster and a truck.—Laws of motion, specifically, Newton's three laws of motion, which are as follows: First Law. Every body continues in its state of rest, or uniform motion in a straight line, except so far as it may be compelled by force to change that state. Second Law. Change of motion is proportional to force applied, and takes place in the direction of the straight line in which the force acts. Third Law. To every action there is always an equal and contrary reaction; or, the mutual actions of any two bodies are always equal, and oppositely directed.—Line of motion. See line[2].—Local motion. See local.—Lost motion, in mech., any difference of motion between the driving parts of a motor and the driven machine, or between the parts of a machine that communicate motion from one to another. It results from faulty construction of the parts, or from looseness of the boxes of axles or shafting or of a belt, which is thus permitted to slip.—Natural motion, an involuntary movement of the body, as the beating of the heart.—Overhead motion, a mechanism, consisting of countershafts and speed-pulley arrangements of gears or any other contrivances, for increasing speed or force, interposed between some prime mover or main line of power-transmission and a machine with which it communicates. It is so called because, for convenience in transmission, or that it may not occupy working-space, it is placed over the machine affected by it. Also called overhead work.—Paracentric motion, motion to or from an attracting center.—Parallel motion. (a) See parallel. (b) In music. See def. 14 (b).—Passive motion. See under active motion.—Perpetual motion. (a) A machine which should do work without exhausting any power of doing work—that is, its work must not be accompanied by any displacement (such as the fall of a weight, or the uncoiling of a spring) or transformation (such as the combustion of fuel) which could not be undone by a replacement or counter-transformation without the expenditure of as much work as the machine has done. Such a machine is impossible, and contrary to all experience; for power of doing work is never increased nor diminished. Nevertheless, very many pretended perpetual motions have been put forth by deluded or knavish inventors. Most of them are of two classes—1st, those which depend upon gravity or magnetism, and, 2d, those which depend upon centrifugal force or other pressure mistaken for moving power. (b) The mode of motion of such a machine. (c) By a popular abuse of the term, a movement or machine which could go on indefinitely by its own self-generated power. Thus, if a man should pretend to have a wheel which turned upon its bearings without resistance, so that it would go on moving indefinitely, or to have a fluid which, though viscous, was frictionless, so that its motion, though continually decreasing, never came to rest, neither claim would be a claim to a perpetual motion, nor (however unfounded) would it violate any fundamental principle of mechanics. On the other hand, a machine (such as has actually been proposed) which would not go on moving of itself forever, but would require a little external force to overcome friction, but which with that little force should be capable of doing an indefinite amount of work, would, properly speaking, be a perpetual motion.—Positive motion, in mech., an arrangement of apparatus connecting related parts of a machine in such manner that, as one moves, the other must move in accordance with the law of the relation. For example, the system of gearing which takes motion from the lathe-spindle, and imparts motion to the lead-screw of a lathe, is a positive motion. On the other hand, any mechanism which moves a part of a machine in a manner that permits the possibility of some subsequent motion, or variation of the motion, of the part, through the action of any force not directly transmitted by such mechanism, is not positive. Examples of motions not positive are—the mechanism actuating a tilt-hammer, which falls by its gravity; a spring which by its elasticity recoils; and pulleys driven by belts in which the motion may be varied through slip.—Positive-motion loom. See loom[1].—Primary motion, the diurnal motion of a fixed star.—Proper motion, in astron., the apparent angular motion of a star after allowing for precession, nutation, and aberration, due to real motions of the star and of the sun.—Quantity of motion, momentum, the sum of the velocities of all the particles each multiplied by the mass.—Rectilinear, parabolic, or circular motion, motion in a rectilinear, parabolic, or circular path.—Relative motion, change of relative place.—Retrograde motion, in astron., decrease in the longitude of a star.—Rotational motion. See vortex-motion.—Simple harmonic motion, an oscillatory motion like that performed by the projection of a point, moving uniformly in a circle, upon a diameter of the circle. "When a point Q moves uniformly in a circle, the perpendicular QP drawn from its position at any instant to a fixed diameter AA′ of the circle intersects the diameter at a point P, whose position changes by a simple harmonic motion." Thomson and Tait.—Slide-valve motion, in a steam-engine, broadly, the valve-gear; any one of a great variety of devices for imparting to a slide-valve its proper motion for induction, cut-off, exhaust, and compression or cushioning of steam at the end of the piston-stroke; specifically, the motion of a slide-valve produced by the valve-gear. The link-motion is one of the most important of valve-gears. In the majority of slide-valve motions the primary movement is derived from an eccentric keyed to the crank-shaft. In other cases motion is taken from the cross-head. In the Joy valve-gear the primary movement is obtained from the connecting-rod. See induction, cut-off, exhaust, eccentric, and valve-gear.—Take-up motion, in a loom, the mechanism which takes up and winds the woven cloth on the cloth-beam as fast as the warp is unwound from the warp-beam. The name is also given to analogous mechanism in many other kinds of machines.—Violent motion†, in older writers, a motion impressed upon a body by an external force.—Voluntary motion, motion ensuing on an act of will, in contrast with reflex action or motion. = Syn. Motion, Movement, Move. Motion may be considered separate from that which moves, movement is always connected with the person or thing moving: hence we speak of the laws of motion; of heat as a mode of motion; and of perpetual motion — not of movement in any of these cases; hence, also, motion is the more scientific and technical term. Motion is more general and more voluntary; movement, more particular and occasional: hence we speak of a motion with the hand; a movement of troops; involuntary movements; the movements of the heavenly bodies; the rate of motion or of movement. The figurative uses of the two correspond to the literal. The chief uses of move are founded upon the idea of moving a piece, in chess or a similar game, for winning the game.

motion (mō′shọn), v. [ME. mocionen; < motion, n.] I. trans. 1. To guide by a significant motion or gesture, as with the hand or head: as, to motion a person to a seat.—2. To propose; move.

Here's Gloucester, a foe to citizens,
One that still motions war and never peace.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., i. 3. 63.

II. intrans. 1. To make a significant movement or gesture, as with the hand or head: as, to motion to one to take a seat.—2. To make a proposal; offer plans. [Rare.]

Rychard Stratton told me that whyll he was in servyse with Whethyll, John Redwe moeyond hym onys myche aftyr this intent, etc. Paston Letters, III. 158.

Well hast thou motion'd, well thy thoughts employ'd.
Milton, P. L., ix. 229.

motional (mō′shọn-al), a. [< motion + -al.] Of or pertaining to motion; characterized by (certain) motions: specifically applied to particular imitative diseases exhibiting peculiar muscular actions, as tarantism.

motion-bar (mō′shọn-bär), n. In a steam-engine, a guide-bar or -rod. E. H. Knight.

motion-distortion (mō′shọn-dis-tôr″shọn), n. A distortion of a line of a spectrum due to relative motions of the parts of the source of light.

motioner† (mō′shọn-ėr), n. [< motion + -er[1].] A mover.

Without respecte of any worldly rewarde or thanke, to referre the fruiet and succesee of his labours to God the mocioner, the autour, and the woorker of all goodness.
Udall, To Queen Catherine.

motion-indicator (mō′shọn-in″di-kā-tọr), n. An apparatus for showing the speed or the number of revolutions of any machine or part of a machine in a given time. It differs from a counter in that the latter merely registers movement, independently of time.

motionist† (mō′shọn-ist), n. [< motion + -ist.] One who makes a motion.

Milton [uses] motionist. F. Hall, False Philol., p. 57.

motionless (mō′shọn-les), a. [< motion + -less.] Without motion; being at rest.

motion-man† (mō′shọn-man), n. An exhibitor of a puppet-show. See motion, n., 6.

And travel with young Goose the motion-man.
B. Jonson, New Inn, i. 1.

motivate (mō′ti-vāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. motivated, ppr. motivating. [< motive + -ate[2].] To motive; act as a motive or as the inciting cause of; induce.

The expulsions from Southern Russia have not been motivated by any new circumstances.
American Hebrew, XXXVI. 38.

motivation (mō-ti-vā′shọn), n. [< motivate + -ion.] The act or manner of motivating; the act or process of furnishing with an incentive or inducement to action.

motive (mō′tiv), a. and n. [I. a. = Sp. Pg. It. motivo, < ML. motivus, serving to move, motive, < L. movere, pp. motus, move: see move. II. n. < ME. motif, < OF. motif, F. motif = Sp. Pg. It. motivo, < ML. motivum, a motive, moving cause, neut. of motivus, serving to move: see I.] I. a. Causing motion; having power to move some one or something; tending to produce motion.

Generals, even in spiritual things, are less perceived and less motive than particulars.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 67.

Motive power or force. (a) The whole power or force acting upon any body or quantity of matter to move it. (b) Moving or impelling force in a figurative sense.

Such men as Spenser are not sent into the world to be part of its motive power.
Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 166.

II. n. 1. A mental state or process which induces an act of volition; a determining impulse; specifically, a desire for something; a gratification contemplated as the final cause of an action. The term motive is also loosely applied to the object desired. The noun motive, in this sense, was brought into general use by writers influenced by Hobbes (though he uses the adjective only), who held that men's actions are always governed by the strongest motive, and denied the freedom of the will. It is now, however, in common literary and conversational use, apart from any theory.

What moves the mind, in every particular instance, to determine its general power of directing to this or that particular motion or rest? And to this I answer, the motive, for continuing in the same state or action is only the present satisfaction in it; the motive to change is always some uneasiness.
Locke, Human Understanding, II. xxi. § 29.

Without another life, all other motives to perfection will be insufficient. Bp. Atterbury, Sermons, I. xi., Pref.

By motive, I mean the whole of that which moves, excites, or invites the mind to volition, whether that be one thing singly, or many things conjunctly.
Edwards, On the Freedom of the Will, i. 2.

When the effect or tendency of a motive is to determine a man to forbear to act, it may seem improper to make use of the term motive; since motive, properly speaking, means that which disposes an object to move. We must, however, use that improper term, or a term which, though proper enough, is scarce in use, the word determinative.
Bentham, Introd. to Morals and Legislation, x. 3, note.

2. The design or object one has in any action; intention; purpose; the ideal object of desire.

The conversion of the heathen was the motive to the settlement. Bancroft, Hist. U. S., I. 20.

We must measure morality by motives, not by deeds.
H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 250.

3. One who or that which is the cause of something; an originator.

It hath fated her to be my motive
And helper to a husband.
Shak., All's Well, iv. 4. 20.

Nor are they living
Who were the motives that you first went out.
Shak., T. of A., v. 4. 27.

4†. Movement.

Her wanton spirits look out
At every joint and motive of her body.
Shak., T. and C., iv. 5. 57.

5. Prevailing design. Specifically—(a) In music, same as subject. (b) In the fine arts—(1) the prevailing idea in the mind of an artist, to which he endeavors to give expression in his work; or (2) a subject or example prominently characteristic of any work or part of a work, and elaborated or often repeated with more or less variation.

The Panathenaic procession furnished Pheidias with a series of sculptural motives, which he had only to express according to the principles of his art.
J. A. Symonds, Italy and Greece, p. 218.

6†. Motion; proposition.

Suche motyues thei moeue this maistres in her glorie,
And maken men in mysbileue that muse moche on her wordes. Piers Plowman (B), x. 113.

Leading motive. See leading[1]. =Syn. 1. Motive, Reason, Inducement, Incentive, Impulse, consideration, prompting, stimulus. The differences among the first five of these words are suggested by the derivations. A motive is that which moves one to act, addressing the will, as though directly, and determining the choice; it is the common philosophical term, and may be collective: as, the whole field of motive. A reason is that which addresses the rational nature by way of argument for either belief or choice. An inducement leads one on by his desire for good: as, to hold out an additional inducement. An incentive urges one on like martial music. An impulse drives one on, but is transitory.

motive (mō′tiv), v. t.; pret. and pp. motived, ppr. motiving. [< motive, n.] To act on as a motive, or with the force of a motive; prompt; instigate. [Recent.]

When he has satisfied himself . . . that it was made by such a person as he, so armed and so motived, . . . the problem is solved. Emerson, Essays, 1st ser., p. 10.

motiveless (mō′tiv-les), a. [< motive + -less.] Having no motive or aim; objectless.

Though inconceivable, a motiveless volition would, if conceived possible, be conceived as morally worthless.
Sir W. Hamilton.

motivelessness (mō′tiv-les-nes), n. The character of being motiveless.

That calm which Gwendolen had promised herself to maintain had changed into sick motivelessness.
George Eliot, Daniel Deronda, xxiv.

★motivity (mō-tiv′i-ti), n. [< motive + -ity.] The power of moving; form of motion or locomotion.

The active power of moving, or, as I may call it, motivity. Locke, Human Understanding, II. xxiii. 28.

motley (mot′li), n. and a. [Formerly also motly; < ME. motteleye, mottelay, mottelee, motle, a mixture of colors, a party-colored dress; of uncertain origin. According to Skeat, < OF. mattelé, clotted, curdled, cf. equiv. mattonné, curdled, < mattes, curds, < G. dial. (Bav.) matte, curds; but the sense does not suit. In meaning the word motley is like medley; but the forms disagree. The supposed derivation from W. mudliw, a changing color, < mud, change, + lliw, a stain, hue, and that from W. ysmot, a patch, spot, do not suit the conditions. Hence mottle.]
I. n. 1. A habit made of pieces of cloth of different colors in glaring contrast: the usual dress of the jester or professional fool.

A worthy fool! motley's the only wear!
Shak., As you Like it, ii. 6. 34.

Hence—2. A jester; a fool.

Will you be married, motley?
Shak., As you Like it, iii. 3. 79.

3. Any mixture, as of colors.

With notes to each and all, interlacing the pages into a motley of patchwork.
D. G. Mitchell, Wet Days at Edgewood.

A motley of white and gray on the head, neck, shoulders, and back. Amer. Nat., May, 1889, p. 449.

Man of motley†, a man dressed in motley; a fool.

Never hope,
After I cast you off, you men of motley.
Fletcher, Wit without Money, iii. 4.

II. a. 1. Party-colored; variegated in color; consisting of different colors: as, a motley coat.

Expence and after-thought, and idle care,
And doubts of motley hue, and dark despair.
Dryden.

2. Composed of or exhibiting a combination of discordant elements; heterogeneous in composition; diversified.

Inquire from whence this motley style
Did first our Roman purity defile.
Dryden, tr. of Persius's Satires, i. 158.

Motley color, in ceram., a kind of metallic luster given to some kinds of English pottery, in the eighteenth century and later, by dusting them with powdered lead and manganese.

motley† (mot′li), v. t. [< motley, n. Cf. mottle.] To variegate; give different colors to.

The course of th' holy Lakes he leads,
With thousand Dies hee motleys all the meades.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., Eden.

motley-minded (mot′li-mīn″ded), a. Having a mind or character like that of a professional fool or clown; exhibiting incoherence in thought; having thoughts of a motley character.

This is the motley-minded gentleman.
Shak., As you Like it, v. 4. 41.

motly†, n. and a. An obsolete spelling of motley.

motmot (mot′mot), n. [Also momot; said to be so named from the bird's note, which sounds like mot-mot, slowly repeated.] A bird of the family Momotidæ or Prionitidæ, a sawbill. These birds are peculiar to America, inhabiting tropical and subtropical forests, and ranging north nearly or quite to Texas. The average size is about that of the jays, to which they have some superficial resemblance; but they are more like the bee-eaters of the Old World, Meropidæ, having a similar slender form, with long tail, of which the middle feathers project beyond the rest and are spatulate, forming a kind of racket. The bill is serrate, the coloration is variegated, chiefly greenish and bluish. These birds are of solitary habits, like kingfishers, to which they are closely related; they feed upon reptiles, insects, and fruits. See cut under Momotus.

moto (mō′tō), n. [It., = Pg. moto, < L. motus, motion: see mote[5].] In music: (a) Motion; the direction in which the harmonic parts move: as, moto contrario (contrary motion). See motion, 14. (b) Energetic or spirited movement; spirit: as, con moto (with spirited movement).

motograph (mō′tō-gràf), n. [< L. motus, motion, + Gr. γράφειν, write.] A form of telegraph or telephone-receiver, invented by Edison, depending for its action on the variation of the friction between two conductors in relative motion, when a current of electricity is passed from one to the other across the surface of contact. A revolving drum is interposed in the circuit, one of the electrical connections being made through a movable terminal in contact with the surface of the drum. This contact-piece is connected to a recording lever or to a telephonic diaphragm, and, in consequence of the variations of the friction produced by the electric currents, causes the lever to record, or the diaphragm to repeat, the message.

motographic (mō-tō-graf′ik), a. [< motograph + -ic.] Of or pertaining to the motograph.

There are models of . . . the automatic and autographic telegraph, the motographic translator and repeater.
Elect. Rev. (Amer.), XIV. 5.

moton[1]†, n. An obsolete form of mutton.

moton[2]† (mō′ton), n. [OF. (?).] A piece of armor of the fifteenth century, forming part of the defense of the arm and shoulder. Perhaps (as thought by Meyrick) it was a gusset for the armpit.

motoner†, n. See muttoner.

motophone (mō′tō-fōn), n. [< L. motus, motion, + Gr. φωνή, voice.] A sound-engine actuated by aërial sound-waves, invented by Edison. Vibrations of a diaphragm, produced, as in the phonograph, by sound-waves, are converted into motion of rotation by a stylus and ratchet-wheel.

★motor (mō′tor), n. and a. [= F. moteur = Sp. Pg. motor = It. motore, a motor, < LL. motor, one who moves (applied to one who rocks a cradle), < L. movere, pp. motus, move: see move.]
I. n. 1. One who or that which imparts motion; a source or originator of mechanical power; a moving power, as water, steam, etc.

These bodies likewise, being of a congenerous nature, do readily receive the impressions of their motor.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg Err., ii. 2.

Specifically—2. In math., an operator or a quantity which represents the displacement of a rigid body. It involves the designation of a particular line in space, and the association with it of a length and an angle.

This is in complete analogy with his [Clifford's] introduction of the word motor to embrace the species twist and wrench. The Academy, June 29, 1889, p. 452.

3. In mach., a prime mover; a contrivance for developing and applying mechanically some natural force, as heat, pressure, weight, the tide, or the wind; a machine which transforms the energy of water, steam, or electricity into mechanical energy: as, an electric motor. See machine, 2.—4. A motor-car.—5. In anat., specifically, a motor nerve.—Air-motor. (a) A machine driven by compressed air. Such machines are constructed like steam-engines, and use the air expansively or non-expansively, according to the character of the engine. They are, strictly speaking, heat-engines, in which the heat naturally existing in air, or this in connection with heat derived from the work of compression, is converted into outer work. When the air is used expansively, the expansion is regulated by cut-off valve-gear, as in a steam-engine. Expansion is, however, not generally so available as with steam, on account of the chilling of the air during the period of expansion and consequent freezing of precipitated aqueous vapor, which clogs the valve-ports with ice, and seriously interferes with the working of such engines. This difficulty is avoided by heating the air prior to its induction to the cylinder of the engine. Hot water under pressure is the most convenient storage reservoir for such heat for street-car motors, or a saturated solution of a soda salt with high boiling point. (b) A motor-car driven by an air-motor.—Domestic motor, a small motor used for pumping water, or running a sewing-machine, etc.—Electric motor. See electric.—First motor, a prime motor.—Hydraulic motor. See hydraulic.—Motor oculi, the third pair of cranial nerves, giving motor impulse to most of the muscles of the eye. Also called oculomotor. See second cut under brain.
II. a. 1. Giving motion; imparting motion.

Asceticism throws away a great power given by God to help and improve us. It abandons to evil what might be a vast motor force leading to good.
J. F. Clarke, Self-Culture, p. 392.

2. In physiol., conveying from the center toward the periphery an impulse that results or tends to result in motion, as a nerve: opposed to sensory.—3. Of or pertaining to or acting through the motor nerves or tracts.

A vigorous motor system, ready to act, and to act energetically, is a condition of a rapid development of will.
J. Sully, Outlines of Psychol., p. 598.

Motor dynamo, a dynamo used as a motor. When one dynamo is being driven by another the driver is sometimes called the motor dynamo.—Motor nerve, any nerve whose function is to excite muscular contraction, and thus effect movement in an animal body. Most nerves are of mixed character, or sensorimotor, effecting both motion and sensation. See vasomotor.—Motor printer, a printing telegraph in which the mechanism is moved by electric, steam, or other motive power.

★motor-car (mō′tor-kär), n. A car which carries its own propelling mechanism, as an electric motor, pneumatic engine, steam-engine, etc., and is therefore a locomotive. Many such cars have sufficient power to draw other cars attached to them. See the supplement.

motor-cycle (mō′tor-sī′kl), n. A bicycle driven by an electric or other motor; an automobile bicycle.

motorial (mō-tō′ri-al), a. [< LL. motorius, motory (see motory), + -al.] Of or pertaining to motion; specifically, of or pertaining to a motor nerve; motor, as a nerve: as, motorial nerve-fibers; a motorial impulse.

motorium (mō-tō′ri-um), n.; pl. motoria (-ä). [NL., < LL. motorium, the power of motion, neut. of motorius, moving: see motory.] That part of an organism which moves or is moved, as distinguished from that which feels, senses, or perceives: the opposite of sensorium. Since a sensorium has no determinable physical location, the motorium is the entire physical organism.—Motorium commune, a hypothetical common center in the brain for motor impulses.

motorius (mō-tō′ri-us), n.; pl. motorii (-i). [NL., < LL. motorius, moving: see motory.] In anat. and physiol., same as motor, 4.—Motorius oculi. Same as motor oculi or oculomotor. More fully called nervus motorius oculi.

★motorman (mō′tor-man), n. One whose business it is to drive a motor-car, or automobile vehicle. [Recent.]

motorpathic (mō-tor-path′ik), a. [< motorpath-y + -ic.] Of or belonging to motorpathy or the movement-cure; kinesitherapeutic.

motorpathy (mō-tôr′pa-thi), n. [Irreg. < L. motor, a mover (see motor), + Gr. -παθεια, < πάθος, suffering: see pathos.] In med., the movement-cure; kinesitherapy.

motory (mō′tō-ri), a. [= Pg. motorio, < LL. motorius, moving, < L. motor, mover: see motor, n.] Same as motor or motorial.

mott[1]†. An obsolete preterit of mete.

mott[2]†, n. An obsolete form of mot[2].

motteley†, n. and a. An obsolete form of motley.

mottetto (mot-tet′tō), n. [It.: see motet.] Same as motet.

mottle (mot'l), v. t.; pret. and pp. mottled, ppr. mottling. [< motley, taken as mottly.*] To mark with spots or blotches of different colors or shades of color; blotch; variegate; cloud.

Boughs grotesque
Mottle with mazy shades the orchard's slope.
Southey, Roderick, xv.

★ mottle (mot'l), n. [< mottle, v.] The pattern or arrangement of spots and cloudings forming a mottled surface, especially in marble or in the natural veining of wood.

mottled (mot'ld), p. a. 1. Spotted; variegated; marked with blotches of color, of unequal intensity, passing insensibly into one another.

The strong peculiarity of Harvey's style: . . . thought pressed on thought, sparkling with imagery, mottled with learned allusions, and didactic with subtle criticism.
I. D'Israeli, Amen. of Lit., II. 111.

Bless the mottled little legs of that there precious child (like Canterbury brawn, his own dear father says).
Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, xlix.

Specifically—2. In entom., marked with irregular spots, generally formed of hairs of a different color from the ground; having two or more colors irregularly mingled in spots, but not running into one another.—3. In metal., an epithet noting the appearance of pig-iron when in a stage intermediate between the stages designated as the white and the gray. In mottled iron the whiter parts of the metal are disseminated through the grayer, so that the whole has a spotted or mottled appearance. The grayest iron contains the largest amount of graphitic carbon; the whitest iron the least graphitic and the most combined carbon.—Mottled calf. See calf[1].

mottle-faced (mot'l-fāst), a. Having a mottled face.

The mottle-faced gentleman spoke with great energy and determination. Dickens, Pickwick, xliii.

mottling (mot'ling), n. [Verbal n. of mottle, v.] 1. Variegation of a surface by irregular spots.—2. pl. In entom., the marks of a mottled surface.

motto (mot'ō), n.; pl. mottos or mottoes (-ōz). [< It. motto (= F. mot), a saying, motto: see mot[2].] 1. A short pithy sentence or phrase, sometimes a single word, used to indicate the tenor of that to which it is attached (as an essay or a treatise), or adopted as expressive of one's guiding idea or principle, or appended to a device or a coat of arms. In heraldry the motto is carried on a scroll, alluding to the bearing or to the name of the bearer, or expressing some principle or tenet. The heraldic motto, strictly considered, is not hereditary, but personal; but it is frequently used by successive bearers of the escutcheon to which it belongs, especially when, as is often the case, it refers to some part of the achievement. 2. The poetry or verse contained in a motto-kiss or paper cracker.

Then we let off paper crackers, each of which contained a motto. W. S. Gilbert, Ferdinand and Elvira.

3. A motto-kiss. [U. S.]—Motto indention. See indention[2].

mottoed (mot'ōd), a. [< motto + -ed[2].] Having a motto; bearing a motto: as, a mottoed scroll.

motto-kiss (mot'ō-kis), n. A candy or sweetmeat wrapped in fancy paper and having a scrap of love-poetry or a motto inclosed with it, used for the amusement of children. In the United States called motto simply.

mottramite (mot'ram-īt), n. [< Mottram (see def.) + -ite[2].] A hydrous vanadate of lead and copper occurring as a crystalline incrustation of a velvet-black color on sandstone at Mottram in Cheshire, England.

motty (mot'i), a. [< mot[1], mote[1], + -y[1].] Containing motes. [Scotch.]

The motty dust-reek raised by the workmen. H. Miller.

mou (mö), n. A Scotch form of mouth.

mouch (mouch), v. i. [Also mooch; var. of miche[1], q. v.] 1. To skulk; sneak; move slowly and stupidly. See miche[1]. [Slang.]

These hedge fellows are slow and dull; they go mouching along as if they were croaking themselves.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 472.

2. To live a sort of semi-vagabond life, without a fixed place of abode, selling water-cresses and other wild produce. See moucher. [Slang.]

moucharaby (mö-shar'a-bi), n. [F., < Ar. mashrabieh.] In arch.: (a) A balcony inclosed with latticework in a customary Oriental fashion, in such a manner that a person upon it can see the street without being seen. See cut under lattice-window. (b) A balcony with a parapet and with machicolations, often embattled, projecting from the face of a wall over a gate, to contribute to the defense of the entrance. See cut in next column.

Moucharaby.—Carisbrooke Castle, Isle of Wight.

mouchard (mö-shär'), n. [F., a police-spy, < mouche, a fly, spy, esp. a police-spy: see mouche.] In France, a police-spy.

★ mouche (mösh), n. [F., lit. a fly, < L. musca, fly: see Musca.] A patch worn as an ornament.

moucher (mou'chėr), n. [Var. of micher.] 1. One who mouches: same as micher.—2. One who lives a semi-vagabond life, selling watercresses, wild flowers, blackberries, and other things that may be obtained in country places for the gathering. [Slang.]

The moucher sells the nests and eggs of small birds to townsfolk who cannot themselves wander among the fields, but who love to see something that reminds them of the green meadows. As the season advances and the summer comes he gathers vast quantities of dandelion leaves, parsley, sow-thistle, clover, and so forth, as food for the thousands of tame rabbits kept in towns.
Pall Mall Gazette.

mouchoir (mö-shwor'), n. [F. (= Sp. mocador = It. moccatore (see moccador, muckender), < moucher, < ML. muccare, blow the nose, < L. muccus, mucus, mucus (of the nose): see mucus.] A pocket-handkerchief.

Whenever the dear girl expected his Lordship, her mouchoirs, aprons, scarfs, little morocco slippers, and other female gimcracks were arranged.
Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xlviii.

moudiwarp†, moudiwart†, n. Obsolete variants of moldwarp.

mouflet, n. An obsolete form of muffle[1].

mouflon, moufflon (möf'lon), n. [Also mufflon; < F. mouflon (see def.), poss. < G. muffel, a dog or other animal with large hanging lips: see muff[1], muffle[1].] A wild sheep; an animal of the genus Ovis, particularly the musimon, O. musimon. This is a species inhabiting the mountains of Sardinia and Corsica, and now becoming rare. Though the fleece is not woolly, the animal is closely related to the common sheep, O. aries, with which it breeds freely, and to various other kinds, as the argali, the bighorn, etc.—Ruffed mouflon. Same as aoudad.

mought[1] (mout). An obsolete or dialectal form of might[2], preterit of may[1].

mought[2], n. An obsolete or dialectal variant of moth[1].

mouhair†, n. An obsolete form of mohair.

moujik, n. Same as muzhik.

mould, mouldability, etc. See mold, etc.

moulet, v. An obsolete form of mold[2].

moulin (mö-laṅ'), n. [< F. moulin, a mill, = Sp. molino = Pg. moinho = It. molino, < LL. molinum, molina, a mill: see mill[1].] A nearly vertical shaft or cavity worn in a glacier by the running down of water, which sometimes in the hot days of summer, on the large glaciers, forms considerable rivulets on the surface of the ice. These run until they reach a crevice, down which they descend and gradually wear a more or less cylindrical cavity, through which the water pours in a subglacial cascade.

A remarkable phenomenon, seen only on the greater glaciers, is that presented by the so-called moulins.
Ball, Alpine Guide, [Introd., lxiv.

Crossbow (Arbalist), and Moulinet for bending the bow, 14th and 15th centuries.

a, arbalist with moulinet in place and adjusted, ready to bend the bow; b, arbalist without the moulinet, side view; c, moulinet on a larger scale, as it looks when the bow is bent.

moulinage (mö'lin-āj), n. [F., < mouliner, mill silk, throw, < moulin, a mill: see moulin.] The operation of reeling off, twisting, and doubling raw silk.

moulinet (mö'li-net), n. [< F. moulinet, a millstone, drum, capstan, dim. of moulin, a mill: see moulin.] 1. The drum or roller of a capstan, crane, etc.—2. A form of windlass used for bending the great crossbow. See cranequin, and cut in preceding column.—3. A kind of turnstile.—4. A circular swing of a sword or saber.

moult[1], moulten†, etc. See molt[2], etc.

moult[2], a. [< F. moult, much, < L. multus, much: see multitude.] Much; many. [Rare.]

On the eve we went to the Franciscans' Church to hear the academical exercises; there were moult and moult clergy. Walpole, Letters (1739), I. 39.

moun[1]†, v. i. [< ME. mown, mowen, pl. pres. ind. of may: see may[1].] To be able; may; must. See mow[3].

Moun ye drynke the cuppe whiche I schal drinke? . . .
Thei seyn to him, we moun. Wyclif, Mat. xx. 22.

moun[2] (moun), v. i. [Sc. also maun; < ME. mowen, mounen, < Icel. munu, will, shall, must; a preterit-present verb.] Must. [North. Eng. and Scotch.]

mouncel†, n. [ME., < OF. moncel, monsel, muncel, etc., a little hill, a heap, < LL. monticellus, dim. of monticulus, a little hill or mountain, dim. of mon(t-)s, a hill, mountain. see mount[1]. Cf. monticle, monticule.] A group of animals.

Thei lepe to fight with the crowned lyon that hadde his bestes departed in to xviij mouncels.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 413.

mounch†, v. An obsolete form of munch.

mound[1] (mound), n. [< ME. mound, a protection, a helmet, might, < AS. mund, the hand, a hand (as a measure), hence (like the equiv. L. manus, hand) power, protection, guardianship, esp. in comp., in legal use; not found in sense of 'hill,' but cf. mund-beorh, a protecting hill; = OFries. mund, mond = OHG. munt = Icel. mund, protection; perhaps ult. related to L. mon(t-)s, a hill, mountain, > E. mount[1], with which mound[1] has been somewhat confused: see mount[1].] 1†. A protection; restraint; curb.

Such as broke through all mounds of law.
South, Sermons.

2†. A helmet. Weber, Metr. Rom., I.—3†. Might; size.

Fourti thousand men thai founde,
To bataile men of grete mounde.
Arthour and Merlin, p. 138. (Halliwell.)

4. An artificial elevation of earth, as one raised as a fortification or part of a fortification, or as a funeral monument; a bank of earth; hence, a bulwark; a rampart or fence.

This great gardin compast with a mound.
Spenser, F. Q., II. vii. 56.

God had thrown
That mountain as his garden mound high raised.
Milton, P. L., iv. 226.

I thought of a mound in sweet Auburn,
Where a little headstone stood.
Lowell, First Snow-fall.

5. A natural elevation presenting the appearance of having been raised artificially; a hillock; a knoll.

He pointed to the field,
Where, huddled here and there on mound and knoll,
Were men and women staring and aghast.
Tennyson, Geraint.

6. In civil engin., in excavations, a piece of the original ground left at intervals to show the depth.—Indian mounds, earthworks erected by the aborigines of North America, the so-called mound-builders. They are especially numerous in that part of the United States which lies between the Great Lakes on the north and the Gulf of Mexico on the south, and is bounded on the west by the States lining the western bank of the Mississippi river, and on the east by a line drawn through the middle of the States of New York and Pennsylvania and extending southward so as to include the greater part of the two Carolinas and the whole of Georgia and Florida. They are of at least four kinds: (1) platforms or "pyramids"; (2) burial-mounds; (3) "effigy" or animal-form mounds; (4) inclosures. The largest is the famous Cahokia Mound, about 6 miles east of St. Louis, in Illinois. The base is 998 feet north and south, and 721 feet east and west. The height is 99 feet. Effigy-mounds vary in length up to 500 feet and are sometimes 5 feet high. Inclosures sometimes contain 100 acres. The mounds are mainly prehistoric and some of them must be given a date not less than two or three centuries before the beginning of the Columbian era. They were the work of tribes of culture similar to that of the historic period—in other words, of North American Indians—and probably of the ancestors of the tribes found in possession by the whites. Many of them were situated in the river-valleys.

I venture the assertion that not only has there not, as yet, been anything taken from the mounds indicating a higher stage of development than the red Indian is known to have reached, but that even the mounds themselves, and under this head are included all the earthworks of the Mississippi Valley, were quite within the limits of his efforts. L. Carr, Mounds of the Mississippi Valley, p. 3.

★mound[1] (mound), v. t. [< mound[1], n.] To fortify with a mound; add a barrier, rampart, etc., to.

We will sweep the curled vallies,
Brush the banks that mound our alleys.
Drayton, Muses' Elysium, iii.

A spacious city stood, with firmest walls
Sure mounded and with numerous turrets crown'd.
J. Philips, Cider, i.

A sand-built ridge
Of heaped hills that mound the sea.
Tennyson, Ode to Memory, v.

mound[2] (mound), n. [< F. monde = Sp. Pg. mundo = It. mondo, < L. mundus, the world, the universe, cosmos, lit. ornament, decoration, dress; hence ult. E. mundify, etc., mundane, etc. Cf. mappemounde.] A figure of a globe, taken as an emblem of sovereignty. The emblem is of ancient Roman origin, being associated with Jupiter, as in a Pompeiian wall-painting. It often surmounts a crown. Also monde.

Mound.

She willed them to present this crystal mound, a note of monarchy and symbol of perfection, to thy more worthy deity. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v. 3.

mound-bird (mound'bėrd), n. A bird of the family Megapodiidæ, and especially of the genus Megapodius. The mound-birds are so called from the great mounds or tumuli which they construct for the reception of their eggs, which are hatched by the heat of decomposition of the decaying vegetable substances in which they are buried. See cut under Megapodius.

mound-builder (mound'bil″dėr), n. 1. One of a race of people by whom the various earthworks called Indian mounds (see mound[1]) were constructed. That these works are not necessarily of great antiquity, and that they were doubtless built by a race in no essential respect different from that found inhabiting the region where they occur when this was first settled by the whites, is the present opinion of nearly all the best-informed investigators of American archæology. See quotation under Indian mounds, above.

In districts where the native tribes known in modern times do not rank high even as savages, there formerly dwelt a race whom ethnologists call the Mound-Builders, from the amazing extent of their mounds and enclosures, of which there is a single group occupying an area of four square miles. E. B. Tylor, Prim. Culture, I. 50.

2. A mound-bird.

mounded (moun'ded), a. [< mound[1] + -ed[2].] Possessing a mound; formed into or shaped like a mound. [Poetical.]

When wealth no more shall rest in mounded heaps.
Tennyson, Golden Year.

mound-maker (mound'mā″kėr), n. Same as mound-bird.

mounseer (moun-sēr'), n. An old Anglicized form of monsieur, now used only as ludicrous.

mount[1] (mount), n. [< ME. mount, mont, munt, < AS. munt = OF. mont, mount, munt, F. mont = Sp. Pg. It. monte, < L. mons, montis, a hill, mountain; from a root seen also in eminere, put out: see eminent, prominent. Hence ult. (< L. mon(t-)s) E. mountain, mount[2], amount, paramount, surmount, etc., monte, etc.] 1. An elevation of land, more or less isolated; a hill; a mountain: in this sense chiefly archaic or poetical, except before a proper name as the particular designation of some mountain or hill: as, Mount Etna; Mount Calvary.

Doun ouer the mount of Olyuete,

Specifically—5. To prepare for representation or exhibition by furnishing and accompanying with appropriate appurtenances and accessories, as a stage-play or other spectacle.—6. To be equipped or furnished with; carry as equipment or armament: used specifically of anything that carries war material: as, the fort mounts fifty guns.—7. To put in shape for examination or exhibition by means of necessary or ornamental supports or accessories; furnish, fit up, or set with necessary or appropriate appurtenances: as, to mount a picture or a map; to mount objects for microscopic observation; to mount a sword-blade; to mount a jewel.—To mount guard, to take the station and do the duty of a sentinel.—To mount the high horse. ★See horse[1].

★mount[2] (mount), n. [< mount[2], v.] 1. That upon which anything is mounted or fixed for use, and by which it is supported and held in place. Specifically—(a) The paper, cardboard, or other material to which an engraving or a drawing is attached in order to set it off to advantage. A mount may be a single sheet, or two sheets to one of which the print is attached, while the other, with a space cut out somewhat larger than the print, is placed over it, permitting it to be seen, while protecting it from abrasion.

The crude white mounts wholly or practically destroy the value of those "high lights" always so carefully placed by Turner, and which were with him so integral a part of every composition. Nineteenth Century, XIX. 401.

(b) The necessary frame, handle, or the like for any delicate object, as a fan.

Perforated cedar, sandalwood, nacre, ivory, such is the proper mount of an elegant fan.
Art Journal, N. S., VIII. 90.

(c) The paper, silk, or other material forming the surface of a fan.

A paper mount pasted on a wooden handle.
Coryat's Crudities, quoted in Art Journal, N. S., XVII. 173.

To this period belong the fans called "Cabriolet." In these the mount is in two parts, the lower and narrower mount being half-way up the stick, the second mount in the usual place at the top of the stick.
Harper's Mag., LXXIX. 404.

(d) Apparatus for the adjustment and attachment of a cannon to its carriage.

The carriages and mounts of the guns are made entirely of bronze and steel. The Century, XXXVI. 889.

(e) pl. The metal ornaments serving as borders, edgings, etc., or apparently as guards to the angles and prominent parts, as in the decorative furniture of the eighteenth century in Europe. (f) The glass slip, with accessories, used to preserve objects in suitable form for study with the microscope. The object is usually covered with very thin glass, in squares or circles, and, except in the so-called dry mounts, is immersed in a liquid (fluid mounts), such as Canada balsam, glycerin, etc.; a cell, as of varnish, is used in some cases.

2. The means of mounting or of raising one's self on or as on horseback. (a) A horse, especially in riding or hunting use.

I have got a capital mount. Dickens.

(b) A horse-block. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.] (c) A bicycle.

mountable (moun'ta-bl), a. [= F. montable; as mount[2], v., + -able.] Capable of being ascended or mounted. Cotgrave.

mountain (moun'tān), n. and a. [< ME. mountaine, mountein, montain, montaine, muntaine, montaigne, < OF. montaigne, muntaine, F. montagne = Pr. montanha, montagna, montayna = Sp. montaña = Pg. montanha = It. montagna, < ML. montanea, also montana, a mountain, a mountainous region, < L. montana, neut. pl., mountainous regions, < montanus, of or belonging to a mountain, mountainous, < mon(t-)s, a mountain: see mount[1]. Mountain is related to mount[1] as fountain is to fount[1].] I. n. 1. An elevation of land of considerable dimensions rising more or less abruptly above the surrounding or adjacent region. Ordinarily no elevation is called a mountain which does not form a conspicuous figure in the landscape; hence, what is a mountain in one region might be regarded as simply a hill in another. A region may have great elevation above the sea-level, but not be recognized as a mountain. Thus, the Great Plains, or the region between the Missouri and the Rocky Mountains, have an elevation on their western edge as great as that of the highest points of the Appalachian range. Elevated regions not mountainous are often called plateaus. Elevations, although of considerable height, if quite isolated or precipitous, are often called rocks: as, the Rock of Gibraltar. Peak is occasionally used in the same way: as, Pike's Peak; the Peak of Teneriffe; and in the United States, in regions formerly occupied or explored by the French, the word butte is employed with a somewhat similar meaning, while mound is used over a considerable extent of country, especially in Wisconsin, as nearly the equivalent of butte or mount. While popular usage applies the term 'mountain' to almost any well accented relief, the more technical usage is coming to limit the term to strong forms of disordered rock structure, more or less modified by erosion. The phrase 'mountains of circumdenudation' is sometimes used technically to mean the larger masses of a dissected plateau of horizontal structure, as in eastern Kentucky: but it is equally applicable to the Scotch Highlands, where the present relief is due to the erosion of valleys in a surface that once had much less relief. See mountain-chain.

2. Something resembling a mountain in being large; something of extraordinary magnitude; a great heap: as, a mountain of rubbish.

So many hadde thei slayn of men and of horse that the mounteins of bodyes were a-boute hem so grete that noon myght come to hem but launchinge.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 333.

If it can confer anie thinge to the montan of your Majesties praise, and it were but a clod use it and the auctour as yours. A. Hume, Orthographie (E. E. T. S.), Ded., p. 3.

See skulking Truth to her old cavern fled, Mountains of Casuistry heap'd o'er her head!
Pope, Dunciad, iv. 642.

3. A wine made from grapes grown on high ground. See II., 2.

Very little old Mountain or Malaga sweet wine is grown.
Redding, Modern Wines (1851), p. 201.

Old man of the mountain. See Assassin, 1.—The Mountain. A name given to the extreme revolutionary party in the legislatures of the first French revolution. The name was derived from the fact that they occupied the higher part of the hall. (Compare Montagnard, 2.) Among the chief leaders were Robespierre and Danton. The name was temporarily revived in the legislatures following the revolution of 1848.—To make a mountain of a mole-hill. See mole-hill.

II. a. 1. Of or pertaining to mountains; found on mountains; growing or living on a mountain: as, mountain air; mountain pines; mountain goats.

mountain-artillery (moun'tăn-är-til″e-ri), n. ★See artillery.

mountain-ash (moun'tăn-ash'), n. 1. One of several small trees of the genus Sorbus, having ash-like leaves, primarily S. Aucuparia. This, the rowan-tree or quick-beam, grows wild in the northern parts of the old world, and is in general cultivation for ornament, on account of its handsome pinnate leaves, its small but numerous corymbed white flowers, and its bright-red berries. The wood is used for tools; the berries afford malic acid, and all parts of the tree, as also of the American species, are astringent. The best-known American mountain-ash is S. Americana, a similar tree, but with larger leaves, and smaller though deeper-colored fruit. It is native in the mountains of the eastern United States and northward. The western mountain-ash, S. sambucifolia, a not very different tree, extends across the continent. See dogberry, 2, and wicken.

2. One of several species of Eucalyptus, especially E. amygdalina, E. goniocalyx, E. virgata, and E. pilularis (the flintwood). [Australia.]

mountain-chain (moun'tăn-chān), n. A connected series of mountains or conspicuous elevations. In the formation of mountain-chains the process has usually been of such a character that a long belt of country has been slowly crushed, deformed, and raised in a broad and irregular crest or wall; regions thousands of miles in length have occasionally been thus affected. This elevated belt is carved, during and after the original process of mountain-building, by rain and rivers, frost and ice, so that the varied forms now seen usually differ greatly from those which would have been produced by deformation and uplift alone. The more or less separated and distinct ridges, peaks, summits, or crests are therefore as a rule the result of mountain sculpture rather than of mountain uplift. In many cases there is more or less similarity between the different ranges that make up a mountain system, from both a geological and a topographical point of view; but there are also ranges which are made up of parts differing from each other greatly in lithological character and in the epoch of their formation, and which, nevertheless, are always popularly considered as forming one chain or system, and are so designated: this is the case with most of the greater mountain-chains, as the Himalayas, the Andes, and the Cordilleras. All of the strong mountain-chains of the present time are of geologically modern origin; while many mountain-chains that were formed in earlier geological time are now worn down low, their waste having been slowly washed away to form the sedimentary deposits of later times. Some ancient mountains, after having been at least once worn down low, have been broadly elevated again, and have now gained new relief by the erosion of valleys, chiefly along the belts of weaker rocks. The Alleghany mountains of Pennsylvania and Virginia are of this class.

mourn[2]†, v. i. [Found first in the verbal noun mourning; prob. orig. as a noun, mourne*, erroneously, in farriers' use, for mourue* (being confused with the E. mourn[1]), < OF. mourue, mourrue, older morue, in pl. mourues, mourrues, morues, hemorrhoids or piles, also the mumps and a disease of horses; prob. (like piles), with ref. to the shape of hemorrhoids, < L. morum, a mulberry: see more[4]. Confusion with OF. mort, death (as asserted in the quot. from Topsell), seems improbable; but there may have been confusion with OF. morve, mucus of the nose, as used in the name of a disease of horses, "les morves de petit point, a kind of frenzie in an horse, during which he neither knows any that have tended him, nor hears any that come near him" (Cotgrave). There seems to have been confusion also with mose, the expression to mose in the chine being equivalent to to mourn of the chine: see mose[1]. None of the expressions appear in literary use except in allusive slang; and their origin was appar. never clearly known.] To have a kind of malignant glanders: said of a horse, and allusively of persons, in the phrase to mourn of the chine or mourning of the chine. Compare to mose in the chine (under mose[1]), and see mourner[2].

The Frenche-man saythe "mort de langue, et de eschine sount maladyes saunce medicine," the mournynge of the tongue and of the chyne are diseases without medicyne.
Fitzherbert, Husbandry (1534).

This word mourning of the chine is a corrupt name borrowed of the French toong, wherein it is called mote [later editions morte] deschien, that is to say, the death of the backe. Because many do hold this opinion, that this disease doth consume the marrow of the backe.
Topsell, quoted in N. and Q., 7th ser., III. 184.

This Louer, fuller of passions than of pence, began (when hee entred into the consideration of his owne estate) to mourne of the chyne, and to hang the lippe.
Greene, Never too Late.

My wormwood, hemlock, and affliction,
My soul is humbled in rememb'ring this.
Donne, Lamentations of Jeremy, iii. 19.

And at end of day
They reached the city, and with mourning sore Toward the king's palace did they take their way.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, I. 349.

2. The outward tokens or signs of sorrow for the dead, such as the draping of buildings in giving expression to public sorrow, the wearing of garments of a particular color, the use of black-bordered handkerchiefs, black-edged writing-paper and visiting-cards, etc. The color customarily worn on such occasions differs at different times and in different countries: in China and Japan, for instance, white is the mourning color, and basted unhemmed garments the style. At present in Europe and America the customary color is black, or black slightly relieved with white or purple, black crape playing an important part especially in the mourning worn by women. Sometimes a distinctive garment, such as the widow's cap, is added.

No Athenian, through my means, ever put on mourning.
Langhorne, tr. of Plutarch's Pericles.

And even the pavements were with mourning hid.
Dryden, Pal. and Arc., iii. 942.

To be in mourning, to be under the regulations and restraints, as regards dress, social intercourse, etc., which, and for such length of time as, custom or fashion prescribes on the occasion of the death of a relative or some one held in peculiar respect.

II. a. Having to do with mourning for the dead; of such kind as is used in mourning for the dead: as, a mourning garment; a mourning hat-band.

The mouth is in the head in most animals, and serves for taking in food, mastication, deglutition, and the utterance of the voice. In nearly all vertebrates the mouth is composed of upper and under jaws and associate parts, and consequently opens and shuts vertically; in many the orifice is closed by fleshy movable lips, and the cavity is furnished with teeth and a tongue. Appropriate salivary and mucous glands moisten the interior, which is lined with epitheljum. In most invertebrates, as the enormous assemblage of arthropods, the basis of the mouth is clearly seen to be modified limbs, and the jaws work sidewise. In other cases the mouth, though definite in position and character in each case, varies too widely to be defined excepting as the ingestive orifice. In protozoans any part of the body may act as a temporary mouth; and in many worms there is never any mouth or special digestive system, food being absorbed directly through the integument. The most complicated mouths are found among insects and crustaceans (see cut under mouth-part). See os[2], stoma, and cuts under medusiform, Actinozoa, Haliphysema, anthozoöid, Aurelia, and house-fly.

(b) The part of a river or other stream where its waters are discharged into the ocean or any large body of water; a conformation of land resembling a river-mouth.

It [the river Po] disgorgeth itself at length into the gulfe of Venice, with sixe greate mouths.
Coryat, Crudities, I. 97.

(c) The opening of a vise between its cheeks, chops, or jaws. (d) In fort., the interior opening of an embrasure. It may be either rectangular or trapezoidal in form. Some military writers call this opening the throat of the embrasure, and apply the term mouth to the exterior opening. See embrasure[1]. (e) In an organ-pipe, the opening in the side of the pipe above the foot, between the upper and the lower lip. See pipe. (f) In ceram., a name given to one of the fireplaces of a pottery-kiln. The kilns for firing the biscuit have several of these mouths built against them externally, and a flue from each mouth leads the flames to a central opening, where they enter the oven. (g) The cross-bar of a bridle-bit, uniting the branches or the rings as the case may be.

Requyte him not with mallyce great, nor his good will disdayne. Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 99.

Being moved, he strikes whate'er is in his way.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 623.

(b) To affect with tender feelings; touch.

She gan him soft to shrieve,
And wooe with fair intreatie, to disclose
Which of the Nymphes his heart so sore did mieve.
Spenser, F. Q., IV. xii. 26.

My poor mistress, moved therewithal, Wept bitterly. Shak., T. G. of V., iv. 4. 175.

"Trust in God" is trust in the law of conduct; "delight in the Eternal" is, in a deeply moved way of expression, the happiness we all feel to spring from conduct.
M. Arnold, Literature and Dogma, i.

(c) To agitate or influence by persuasion or rhetorical art.

Seeing their power to move the masses, the pontiffs accumulated privileges upon them. Welsh, Eng. Lit., I. 78.

These tidings produced great excitement among the populace, which is always more moved by what impresses the senses than by what is addressed to the reason.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

4. To propose; bring forward; offer formally; submit, as a motion for consideration by a deliberative assembly: now used only in such phrases as to move a resolution, or to move that a proposal be agreed to.

Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 101.

One far-off divine event,
To which the whole creation moves.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, Conclusion.

3. To change one's place or posture consciously, or by direct personal effort: often in a specified direction from or to an indicated place.

The Janizary seemed to be much afraid, talked often of the heat of the weather, and would not move until he knew they [the Arabs] were gone, and which way they went. Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 132.

He generally says his prayers without moving from his shop. E. W. Lane, Modern Egyptians, I. 189.

4. To walk; proceed; march.

While still moving in column up the Jacinto road he met a force of the enemy, and had his advance badly beaten and driven back upon the main road.
U. S. Grant, Personal Memoirs, I. 412.

There was nothing of the superb gait with which a regiment of tall Highlanders moves behind its music, solemn and inevitable, like a natural phenomenon.
R. L. Stevenson, Inland Voyage, p. 202.

5. To carry one's self, with reference to demeanor, port, or gait: as, to move with dignity and grace.

He moves a god, resistless in his course,
And seems a match for more than mortal force.
Pope, Iliad, xii. 557.

Katie never ran; she moved To meet me. Tennyson, The Brook.

6. To change residence: as, we move next week. —7. To take action; begin to act; act.

As this affair had happened, it might have been of bad consequences to have moved in it at Damascus, so I took no further notice of it.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 127.

God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform.
Cowper, Light Shining out of Darkness.

8. In chess, draughts, and some similar games, to change the position of a piece in the course of play: as, whose turn is it to move?

[Slang.] = Syn. Movement, etc. See motion.

moveable, moveableness, etc. See movable, etc.

move-all†, n. The name of a game, apparently like "my lady's toilet." Davies.

Come, Morrice, you that love Christmas sports, what say you to the game of move-all? Miss Burney, Cecilia, i. 2.

moveless (möv′les), a. [< move + -less.] Not moving; immovable; fixed.

The Grecian phalanx, moveless as a tow'r,
On all sides batter'd, yet resists his pow'r.
Pope, Iliad, xv. 144.

Moveless as an image did she stand.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, II. 216.

★movement (möv′ment), n. [< OF. movement, F. mouvement = Sp. movimiento = Pg. It. movimento, < ML. movimentum, movement, < L. movere, move: see move, v. Cf. moment, momentum.] 1. The act or condition of moving, in any sense of that word.

Sound and movement are so correlated that one is strong when the other is strong, one diminishes when the other diminishes, and the one stops when the other stops.
Blaserna, Sound, p. 7.

The circumstances of awakening from sleep, wherein movement as a general rule appears to precede sensation.
A. Bain, Emotions and Will, p. 298.

2. A particular act or motion; figuratively, a quality or effect as of motion.

Forces are not communicated by one thing to another; only movements can be communicated.
Lotze, Microcosmus (trans.), I. 58.

The movements of living things have direct reference to consciousness, to the satisfaction of pleasures, and to the avoidance of pains.
E. D. Cope, Origin of the Fittest, p. 231.

That crenellated palace from whose overhanging cornice a tall, straight tower springs up with a movement as light as that of a single plume in the bonnet of a captain.
H. James, Jr., Confidence, i.

3. Action; incident.

The dialogue is written with much vivacity and grace, and with as much dramatic movement as is compatible with only two interlocutors. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., i. 18.

4. A course or series of actions or incidents moving more or less continuously in the direction of some specific end: as, the antislavery movement; a reactionary movement.

The whole modern movement of metaphysical philosophy. J. D. Morell.

That much-misunderstood movement of old times known and ridiculed as euphuism was in reality only a product of this instinct of refinement in the choice of terms.
The Atlantic, LVIII. 425.

5. The extent or value of commercial transactions for some specified time or place: as, the movement in coffee is insignificant.

The total movement of bonds held for national banks was $87,967,300. Rep. Sec. Treas. (1886), I. 58.

6. A particular form or arrangement of moving parts in mechanism: as, the movement of a watch (that is, all that part of a watch that is not the case); the movement of an organ or a pianoforte. — 7. Milit., a change of position of a body of troops in tactical or strategical evolutions. — 8. In music: (a) Motion; melodic progression. See motion, 14. (b) Rhythm; meter; accentual character: as, a march movement. (c) Tempo; pace; relative speed of performance: as, with a quick movement. (d) A principal division or section of an extended work, like a sonata or a symphony, having its own key, tempo, themes, and development, more or less distinct from the others. —Amœboid movements, Brownian movement, ciliary movement, circus movements. See the qualifying words. —Geneva movement, in clockwork, calculating-machinery, and recording-mechanism, a peculiar system of wheelwork, consisting of a notched wheel and a single-toothed wheel (which may be smaller than the notched wheel), the spaces between the notches on the wheel B being made concave on the perimeter, and the concave parts being arcs of circles having the same radius as the toothless part of the perimeter of the wheel A. The wheels are so centered in relation with each other that, in rotating, the tooth of the wheel A engages a notch in the wheel B, moving the latter radially, and after the tooth releases itself from the notch the perimeter of the wheel A engages with the adjacent concave in the wheel B and locks the latter, restraining it from moving till the wheel A has again brought its single tooth around into engagement with the next notch in the wheel B. The latter is thus moved once and locked at each turn of the wheel A. If the wheel B has ten notches, it will turn once, and can thus be made to carry or record one for every ten turns of the wheel A, and in this form it is much used in various measuring-, counting-, and adding-machines and recording-instruments. Where a stop-movement of the wheel B is desired, the notches are spaced according to the movement required, and the wheels have equal diameters.

The Geneva Stop Movement, used in Swiss watches to limit the number of revolutions in winding up, the convexly curved part, a b, of the wheel B serving as the stop.

This form of the movement is used in watch-work, and is sometimes called stop-wheel.—Grave, muscular, etc., movement. See the adjectives.—Movement of plants, the spontaneous activity of plants, abundantly attested in a great variety of ways, and latterly the subject of an important branch of vegetable physiology. Most unicellular plants (bacteria, etc.) possess proper motions of their own, not distinguishable from those of animals, and the same is true of the spores of algæ and the spermatozoöids of most cryptogams. For the movements of the more highly organized plants, see circumnutation, geotropism, heliotropism, apogeotropism, apheliotropism, diageotropism, diaheliotropism, etc.—Oxford Movement, a name sometimes given to a movement in the Church of England toward High-church principles, as against a supposed tendency toward liberalism and rationalism: so called from the fact that it originated in the University of Oxford (1833–41). See Tractarianism, Puseyism.—Syn. Move, etc. See motion.

movement-cure (möv′ment-kūr), n. The use of selected bodily movements with a view to the cure of disease, kinesitherapy.

movent† (mō′vent), a. and n. [= OF. movant, F. mouvant = Sp. moviente = Pg. It. movente, < L. moven(t-)s, ppr. of movere, move: see move.]

I. a. Moving; not quiescent.

To suppose a body to be self-existent, or to have the power of Being, is as absurd as to suppose it to be self-movent, or to have the power of motion.
N. Grew, Cosmologia Sacra, i. 1.

II. n. That which moves anything.

But whether the sun or earth be the common movent cannot be determin'd but by a farther appeal.
Glanville, Vanity of Dogmatizing, ix.

mover (mō′vėr), n. [< move + -er[1]. Cf. OF. moveor, moveur, mouveur = Sp. Pg. movedor = It. movitore, mover.] 1. One who or that which imparts motion or impels to action.

O thou eternal Mover of the heavens,
Look with a gentle eye upon this wretch!
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 3. 19.

2. One who or that which is in motion or action.

In all nations where a number are to draw any one way, there must be some one principal mover.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, vii. 8.

3. A proposer; one who submits a proposition or recommends anything for consideration or adoption: as, the mover of a resolution in a legislative body.

Attempts were made by different members to point out the absence from the resolution of any specific or tangible charge, or to extract from the mover some declaration that he had been informed or believed that the President had been guilty of some official misconduct.
G. T. Curtis, Buchanan, II. 248.

4. One whose business is to move furniture and other household goods, as from one place of residence to another. [Colloq.]—First mover. (a) The primum mobile; that formerly supposed sphere of the heavens which carries all the others, and in which are fixed the fixed stars.

Do therefore as the planets do: move always and be carried with the motion of your first mover, which is your sovereign; a popular judge is a deformed thing.
Bacon, Charge to the Judges in the Star-chamber.

moveress† (mō′vėr-es), n. [ME. moveresse; < mover + -ess.] A female mover; a stirrer of debate and strife.

Amyddes saugh I Hate stonde,
That for hir wrathe, yre, and onde, Semede to ben a moveresse.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 149.

moving (mō′ving), p. a. 1. Causing to move or act; impelling; instigating; persuading; influencing: as, the moving cause of a dispute. —2. Exciting the feelings, especially the tender feelings; touching; pathetic; affecting.

Have I a moving countenance? is there harmony in my voice?
Ford, Love's Sacrifice, ii. 2.

I played a soft and doleful air,
I sang an old and moving story.
Coleridge, Love.

Action of a moving system. See action.—Moving fillister. See fillister.—Moving force, in mech. See momentum.

moving (mō′ving), n. [< ME. moevyng; verbal n. of move, v.] Movement; motion; impulse.

Firste moevyng is cleped moevyng of the firste moevable of the eighte spere, which moevyng is fro est to west.
Chaucer, Astrolabe, i. 17.

How many kinds of motion or moving be there? Six: that is to say, Generation, Corruption, Augmentation, Diminution, Alteration, and Moving from place to place.
Blundeville, Arte of Logicke, I. xxii.

movingly (mō′ving-li), adv. In a moving manner; in a manner to excite the feelings, especially the tender feelings; pathetically.

movingness (mō′ving-nes), n. The power of moving; the quality of exciting the feelings, especially the tender feelings; affectingness.

There is a strange movingness . . . to be found in some passages of the Scripture.
Boyle, Style of Holy Scripture, p. 242.

moving-plant (mō′ving-plant), n. An East Indian plant, Meibomia gyrans. Also called telegraph-plant.

mow[1] (mō), v.; pret. mowed, pp. mowed or mown, ppr. mowing. [Sc. maw; < ME. mowen, mawen (pret. mew), < AS. māwan (pret. meów) = OFries. mēa = D. maaijen = MLG. meien, meigen, mēgen, LG. maien, meien = OHG. mājan, māan, mān, MHG. mæjen, mægen, mewen, G. mähen = Sw. meja = Dan. meie (< G. ?), reap; not recorded in Goth.; cf. Ir. meithle, reaping, reapers. Hence ult. meadow, mead[2].] I. trans. 1. To cut down (grass or grain) with a sharp implement; cut with a scythe or (in recent use) a mowing-machine; hence, to cut down in general.

He has got somebody's old two-hand sword, to mow you off at the knees.
B. Jonson, Epicœne, iv. 2.

The many-leaved locks
Of thriving Charvel, which the bleating Flocks
Can with their daily hunger hardly mowe
So much as daily doth still newly growe.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Lawe.

2. To cut the grass from: as, to mow a meadow. —3. To cut down indiscriminately, or in great numbers or quantity.

He will mow all down before him, and leave his passage polled.
Shak., Cor., iv. 5. 214.

II. intrans. To cut down grass or grain; practise mowing; use the scythe or (in modern use) mowing-machine.

An ill mower, that mows on still, and never whets his scythe.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, i. 96.

mow[2] (mou), n. [< ME. mowe, muge, < AS. mūga, mūha, a heap or pile of hay, mow, = Icel. mūgr, mūgi, a swath, a crowd (lit. a heap), = Norw. muga, mua, mue = Sw. dial. muga, muva, a heap, esp. of hay; akin to muck[1], q. v. Cf. ML. muga, mugium, a mow (< AS.).] 1. A heap or pile of hay, or of sheaves of grain, deposited in a barn; also, in the west of England, a rick or stack of hay or grain.

O, pleasantly the harvest moon,
Between the shadow of the mows,
Looked on them through the great elm-boughs!
Whittier, Witch's Daughter.

2. The compartment in a barn where hay, sheaves of grain, etc., are stored.

mow[2] (mou), v. t. [< mow[2], n.] To put in a mow; lay, as hay or sheaves of grain, in a pile, heap, or mass in a barn: commonly with away.

mow[3]†, v. i. [ME. mowe, mowen, inf. and pres. ind. plural of may[1]: see may[1]. Cf. moun[1].] To be able; may. See may[1].

For who is that ne wold hire glorifie
To mowen swich a knyght don lyve or dye?
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1594.

But that may not be upon lesse than wee mowe falle toward Hevene, fro the Erthe, where wee ben.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 184.

Of the buffettes that men gaven hym [Christ], of the foule mowes and of the repreves that men to hym seyden.
Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

Each one, tripping on his toe,
Will be here with mop and mow.
Shak., Tempest, iv. 1. 47.

And other-whiles with bitter mockes and mowes
He would him scorne.
Spenser, F. Q., VI. vii. 49.

2†. A jest; a joke: commonly in the plural.

And whan a wight is from her whiel ythrow,
Than laugheth she [Fortune] and maketh him the mowe.
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 7.

Yett was our meeting meek eneugh, Begun wi' merriment and mowes.
Raid of the Reidswire (Child's Ballads, VI. 133).

The men could weill thair wapones weild;
To meit them was no mowes.
Battle of Balrinnes (Child's Ballads, VII. 224).

Nae mowes, no joke. [Scotch.]

mow[5] (mō), v. i. [Formerly also mowe; < ME. mowen; < mow[5], n.] To make mouths or grimaces; mock. Compare mop[1].

Summe at me mowis, somme at me smylis.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 185.

Sometime like apes that mow and chatter at me,
And after bite me.
Shak., Tempest, ii. 2. 9.

mow[6] (mou or mö), n. A Chinese acre, differing in extent in different provinces. Fixed by treaty with foreign nations at 733⅓ sq. yards.

mowburn (mou′bėrn), v. i. To heat and ferment in the mow through being placed there before being properly cured: said of hay or grain. Not only the straw, but the seed or kernel is injured by mowburning, this greatly impairing the nutritive value of hay or grain, and unfitting grains for malting.

mower[1] (mō′ėr), n. [< ME. mowere, mawer, < AS. māwere,* < māwan, mow: see mow[1] and -er[1].] 1. One who mows.

And the milkmaid singeth blithe,
And the mower whets his sithe.
Milton, L'Allegro, l. 66.

2. A mowing-machine.—Front-cut mower, a mowing-machine in which the cutting mechanism is in front, and the team or power which impels it is behind. Except for clover-headers and lawn-mowers, this arrangement has not been much used in modern machines. Also called propeller-mower.

mower[2] (mō′ėr), n. [< mow[5] + -er[1].] One who mows, mocks, or makes grimaces.

mowing[1] (mō′ing), n. [Verbal n. of mow[1], v.] 1. The act of cutting with a scythe.—2. Land from which the crop is cut.

"And be off lying in the mowing, like a patridge, when they come after ye. That's one way to do business," said Hepsy.
H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 37.

mowing[2] (mou′ing), n. [Verbal n. of mow[2], v.] The process of placing or storing hay or grain in a mow.

mowing[3]†, n. [Verbal n. of mow[3], v.] Ability.

It is opin and cler that the power ne the mowinge of shrewes nis no power.
Chaucer, Boëthius, iv. prose 2.

mowing[4] (mō′ing), n. [< ME. mowynge; verbal n. of mow[5], v.] Grimacing; mocking.

mowing-machine (mō′ing-ma-shēn″), n. A machine for mowing grass. The terms mowing-machine, harvester, and reaper are in a measure interchangeable. While essentially the same machine, the mowing-machine or mower is used for cutting grass and clover, and the reaper for cutting grain. Both mowers and reapers, more properly the latter, are harvesters. The mowing-machine is essentially a vehicle fitted with some form of gearing for transmitting the motion of the axle to a set of reciprocating knives. An arm projects from the vehicle and carries a series of points or finger-like guards, in and between which play a series of lance-shaped knives. This bar is made to travel close to the ground while the shearing action of the row of reciprocating knives between the guards mows down the grass. A track-clearer or wing at the end of the bar guides the cut grass toward the machine, so that a clear track will be formed for the tread-wheel at the next passage of the mower in the field. Mowers have one driving-wheel or two, and either a fixed and rigid cutter-bar or, more often, a bar hinged so that it can be turned up out of the way when not in use for mowing.

mowl, n. A dialectal form of mold[2].

Mozarabic (mō-zar′ạ-bik), a. [< Mozarab + -ic.] Of or pertaining to the Mozarabs: as, Mozarabic Church, architecture, liturgy, etc.—Mozarabic liturgy, Mozarabic mass, the ancient national liturgy of the Spanish church. In its present form, which shows some assimilation to the Roman mass, this liturgy was restored and revised by Cardinal Ximenes in A. D. 1500, and is still in use in the chapel of a college at Toledo founded by him, and in a few other chapels or churches. The Roman liturgy was made compulsory in Spain, with the exception of a few churches, about A. D. 1100, and in the thirteenth and succeeding centuries the national liturgy had fallen into almost entire disuse. The inappropriate epithet Mozarabic—that is, 'Arabizing'—may have been given to this liturgy from its longer retention in that part of Spain which was held by the Moors, or may have been meant as an unfavorable reflection upon it by the friends of the Roman rite. Apart from obvious Roman insertions, this liturgy is found to agree with canons of early Spanish councils, especially that of Toledo in A. D. 633, and with an account of the Spanish liturgy given by St. Isidore of Seville at about the same date. The Mozarabic liturgy closely resembles the Gallican liturgies, belongs with them to the Ephesine, Gallican, or Hispano-Gallican group of liturgies, and, as the only full and complete extant member of that group, serves as its type and representative. Among the marked peculiarities of this liturgy are—(1) the nature, arrangement, and unequaled variability of its parts; (2) its Oriental affinities, such as remains of the epiclesis, proclamations by the deacon, the position of the pax, the presence of the Sancta Sanctis, etc.; (3) the elaborate ritual of the fraction; and (4) the use of a peculiar nomenclature for the parts, considerably different even from that of the Gallican uses, as, for instance, officium for introit, sacrificium for offertory anthem, illation for preface, etc. See Ephesian, Gallican, liturgy.—Mozarabic office, the office for the canonical hours according to the ancient Spanish rite, as given in the breviary published by Ximenes in A. D. 1502.—Mozarabic rite, the Mozarabic office and liturgy.

Evelyn, True Religion, I. 196.

2. Gum extracted from the seeds, roots, and bark of plants. It is found universally in plants, but much more abundantly in some than in others. The marsh-mallow root, tubers of orchids, the bark of the lime and elm, the seeds of quinces and flax, are examples of plant-products rich in this substance. In the arts the name is applied to a great variety of sticky and gummy preparations, some of which are merely thickened aqueous solutions of natural gum, which is easily extracted from vegetable substances by hot water; while others are preparations of dextrine, glue, or other adhesive materials, generally containing some preservative substance or compound, as creosote or salicylic acid.

3. In chem., the general name of a group of carbohydrates, having the formula $(C_6H_{10}O_5)_n$. The mucilages have the common property of swelling enormously in water, so that they are in a condition near to solution, leaving no jelly-like mass as many gums do. Members of the group differ greatly in properties, some being closely related to the gums, others to cellulose. Their chemical constitution is not yet determined.—Animal mucilage. Same as mucus, 1.—Mucilage-canals, special mucilage-secreting passages or canals observed in many plants, as those traversing the parenchyma of the pith and cortex of the Marattiaceæ, the stems of the Cycadaceæ, the posterior side of the leaves of some species of Lycopodium, etc.—Mucilage-reservoirs. Same as mucilage-canals.

mucilage-cell (mū'si-lāj-sel), n. An individual cell secreting mucilage, as those which occur in various ferns, mosses, etc.

Low bred on liver, and what clowns call mugget.
Wolcot (Peter Pindar), The Remonstrance. (Davies.)

mugget[2]† (mug'et), n. [Also mugwet, muguet; < F. muguet, woodruff.] A name applied to various plants, especially to the woodruff (Asperula odorata) and the lily-of-the-valley.

mugginess (mug'i-nes), n. The state of being muggy.

muggins (mug'inz), n. [Origin obscure.] 1. A children's game of cards played by any number of persons with a full pack divided equally among the players. Each one in turn places a card face up in a pile in front of him, and if the top card of one player matches with the top card of some other player, that one of the two who first cries "Muggins!" adds his card to the pile of the other. This continues until all the cards are placed in one pile—the player who owns this being the loser. 2. A game of dominoes in which the players count by fives or multiples of five. Each player putting down a domino with 5 or 10 spots on it, or one with such a number of spots as, united with those on the dominoes at either or both ends of the row, make 5 or a multiple of 5, adds the number so made to his score. The player first reaching 200 if two play, or 150 if more than two, wins the game.

muggish (mug'ish), a. [< mug[1] + -ish[1].] Same as muggy.

Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iii. 27.

Mugil (mū'jil), n. [L., a mullet: see mullet[1].] The leading genus of Mugilidæ; the mullets.

Mugilidæ (mū-jil'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Mugil + -idæ.] A family of percesocine fishes, typified by the genus Mugil; the mullets. (a) In Bonaparte's system, same as Mugiloidei. (b) In recent systems restricted to mugiliform fishes with only 24 vertebræ and rudimentary or very weak teeth, and in this sense accepted by nearly all modern authors. There are about 80 species, of 7 or 8 genera, mostly inhabiting tropical or subtropical regions either in salt or fresh water; but several extend much further, both north and south. Two at least are common in British waters, and two others abound along the Atlantic coast of the United States. None occur on the Pacific coast north of southern California. Most of the Mugilidæ feed almost entirely upon the organic matter contained in mud. The mud is worked for some time between the pharyngeal bones, which are peculiarly complicated; the indigestible parts are then ejected, and the rest is swallowed. See cut under mullet.

mugiliform (mū'ji-li-fôrm), a. [< L. mugil, a mullet, + forma, form.] Having the form of a mullet; resembling the Mugiliformes.

Mugiliformes (mū″ji-li-fôr'mēz), n. pl. [NL.: see mugiliform.] Günther's eleventh division of Acanthopterygii. It includes Mugilidæ, Atherinidæ, and Sphyrænidæ.

mugiloid (mū'ji-loid), a. and n. [< L. mugil, a mullet, + Gr. εἶδος, form.] I. a. Mugiliform; of or pertaining to the Mugilidæ or Mugiloidei.

II. n. A mugiloid or mugiliform fish. Agassiz; Sir J. Richardson.

Mugiloidei (mū-ji-loi'dē-ī), n. pl. [NL.] Cuvier's eleventh family (in French Mugiloïdes) of Acanthopterygii, comprising forms with the ventral fins abdominal or subabdominal in position, two dorsal fins, and small teeth. It included the Mugilidæ, Tetragonuridæ, and Atherinidæ of subsequent systems.

muguet (mü-gā'), n. [F., name of several plants, also a disease, the thrush.] In pathol., same as thrush[2].

mugweed (mug'wēd), n. [Perhaps a corruption of mugget: see mugget[2].] The crosswort, Galium Cruciata. Also golden mugweed.

mugwet†, n. See mugget[2].

mugwort (mug'wėrt), n. [Also dial. (Sc.) muggart, muggon; < ME. mugworte, corruptly mughwarde, < AS. mucgwyrt, mugwyrt, a plant, Artemisia vulgaris, < mucg, mycg*, midge, + wyrt, plant.] The plant Artemisia vulgaris; also, sometimes, A. Absinthium. In the United States the western mugwort is A. Ludoviciana, the leaves, as in A. vulgaris, white-tomentose beneath.—East Indian mugwort, Cyathocline lyrata, related to Artemisia.—West Indian mugwort, Parthenium Hysterophorus.

mugwump (mug'wump), n. and a. [< Algonkin mugguomp, a great man, chief, captain, leader: used in Eliot's translation of the Bible (1661) to render the E. terms captain, duke, centurion, etc.] I. n. 1†. An Indian chief; an Indian leader. Said to have been used among the Indians and whites of Massachusetts and Connecticut in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

2. (a) A person of importance; a man of consequence; a leader. In this sense long in local use along the coast of Massachusetts and the Connecticut shore of Long Island Sound. Hence—(b) A person who thinks himself of consequence; a self-important man: a humorous or satirical use of the preceding. In this sense the word was also long in local use as above, and occasionally appeared in print (as in the Indianapolis "Sentinel," in 1872, and the New York "Sun," March 23d, 1884).

The great Mugwump [a Democratic (Locofoco) candidate for county commissioner] was delivered of a speech upon the occasion, which was highly applauded by the great "Doctor Dum-never."
Tippecanoe Log-cabin Songster, May 29, 1840 (a later edition, dated July 4, 1840): issued "from the office [of the 'Great Western.'"

[In a "song" following the above, in the "negro" dialect, the same person is referred to as "ole mug," and "honest, honest, mugwump coon."]

Then the great mugwump [a Democratic (Locofoco) candidate for Congress] was delivered of a speech which the faithful loudly applauded.
Solon Robinson, editorial in the "Great Western," [Lake Co., Ind., July 4, 1840.

We have yet to see a Blaine organ which speaks of the Independent Republicans otherwise than as Pharisees, hypocrites, dudes, mugwumps, transcendentalists, or something of that sort. New York Evening Post, June 20, 1884.

The educated men in all the university towns . . . are in open revolt now. . . . We presume they can be partially disposed of by calling them free-traders—all educated men are free-traders, it seems—and if any of them hold out after that, they can be called mugwumps.
The Nation, July 24, 1884, p. 61.

3. [cap.] In U. S. polit. hist., one of the Independent members of the Republican party who in 1884 openly refused to support the nominee (June 6th) of that party for the presidency of the United States, and either voted for the Democratic or the Prohibitionist candidate or abstained from voting. The word was not generally known in any sense before this time, but it took the popular fancy, and was at once accepted by the Independents themselves as an honorable title. [U. S. political slang in this sense and the next.]

4. In general, an independent.

For that large class of people—natural mugwumps—who regard the right of property as far above those of persons, economy seems commendable.
The American, XVI. 227.

II. a. 1. Of or pertaining to a mugwump (in sense 2 (b)).

The faithful forty-seven [Locofoco voters] would do well to be careful how they follow the lead of this mugwump coon. Solon Robinson, editorial in "Great Western," [Lake Co., Ill., Aug. 8, 1840.

[See also note following the first quotation under I., 2 (b).]

2. Of or pertaining to a political mugwump (in sense 3 or 4).

The Democrats now are satisfied as to the strength of the Mugwump stomach. The American, XVI. 229.

mugwump (mug'wump), v. i. [< mugwump, n.] To act like a mugwump; assert one's independence. [Slang.]

They mugwumped in 1884.
New York Tribune, March 10, 1889.

mugwumpery (mug'wump-ėr-i), n. [< mugwump + -ery.] The principles or conduct of a mugwump in the political sense. [Slang.]

The second service . . . rendered to the community is in reminding the practitioners of the spoils system that they cannot in our day get rid of Mugwumpery and all that the term implies. The Nation, XLVIII. 378.

mugwumpism (mug'wump-izm), n. Same as mugwumpery.

Muhammadan, Muhammadanism, etc. See Mohammedan, etc.

Muharram (mö̤-hur'um), n. [Also moharram. Ar. muḥarram, that which is forbidden.] A Moslem religious festival, held during the first month of the Mohammedan year. The ceremonies with the Shiah Moslems have special reference to the death of Husain, grandson of Mohammed, who is looked upon by the Shiahs as a martyr; with the Sunnites they have reference to the day of creation.

Black Mulberry (Morus nigra).

the mulberry-tree.—2. Any tree of the genus Morus. The black mulberry, M. nigra, native somewhere in western Asia, has been known in Europe from antiquity. It yields a pleasant dark-colored fruit, and its leaves were formerly in extensive use for feeding silkworms. The white mulberry, M. alba, introduced from China much later, has almost superseded the black in silkworm-culture. It has been to some extent introduced into the United States. The red mulberry, M. rubra, a native of the United States, is the largest species of the genus. Its wood, which is very durable in contact with the soil, is used for posts, and for cooperage, ship- and boat-building, etc. Its leaves are less valued for silk-production than those of the other species, but its fruit is excellent. The Mexican mulberry, extending into Texas, etc., is M. microphylla. 3. One of several plants of other genera.—4. In embryol., a mulberry-mass or mulberry-germ; a morula. See cut under gastrulation.—Dwarf mulberry. See knoutberry and cloudberry.—French mulberry. See Callicarpa.—Indian mulberry, a small tree, Morinda citrifolia. mule (mūl), n. [Early mod. E. also moil, moyle; < ME. mule, < OF. mul, mule, F. mule = Sp. Pg. It. mulo = AS. mūl = D. muil = OHG. mūl, MHG. mūl, mūle = Icel. mūll = Sw. mula = Dan. mule; also, in comp., D. muilezel = MHG. mūlesel, G. maulesel = Dan. mulæsel = Sw. mulåsna (D. ezel, etc., ass: see *ass*¹); MHG. multier, G. maul-thier = Dan. muldyr (OHG. MHG. tier, G. thier, Dan. dyr, beast, = E. deer); < L. mūlus, a mule. The E. mule does not come from the AS. mūl, which would give a mod. form mowl* (cf. owl, < AS. ūle); it depends on the OF. or the orig. L.] 1. A hybrid animal generated between the ass and the horse. The cross is usually between a jackass and a mare, that between a stallion and a she-ass being called a hinny. The mule is a valuable product of artificial selection, in some respects superior to either parent, and is extensively bred in America (Kentucky, Missouri, Mexico, etc.), in Spain, in Poitou (France), etc. It retains to some extent the specific characters of the ass, in the comparatively large head, long ears, roached mane, slim tail, and narrow, pointed hoofs, but acquires much of the size, strength, and symmetry of the mare. The animal matures slowly, is very long-lived, little liable to disease, and able to do more work than a horse under hard treatment and poor fare. Being also very agile and surefooted, it is serviceable as a pack-animal in countries where a horse could scarcely be used. The mule is not less docile and intelligent than the horse, and its strength is, in proportion to its size, probably greater. Mules are ordinarily incapable of procreation, and such seems to be always the case with the jack; but instances of impregnation of the hinny by the male ass or by a stallion are not rare.

> They drewe owt of dromondaries dyverse lordes, > Moyllez mylke whitte, and mervaillous bestez, > Elfaydes, and Arrabys, and olyfauntez noble,
> Ther are of the Oryent, with honourable kynges.
> Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 2287.
> So is the mule, whose panch being full with sucking, she kickes her dam. Dekker, Catch Pole's Masque (1613).

2. A hybrid in general; a mongrel; a cross between different animals.

> No certain species, sure; a kind of mule
> That's half an ethnic, half a Christian.
> B. Jonson, Staple of News, ii. 1.

3. The scaup-duck, Fuligula marila. Rev. C. Swainson. [Prov. Eng.]—4. In bot., a plant which is produced by the fusion of the sperm-cell of one species with the ovum of another; a hybrid.

> Several mules have been produced between the species of this genus (Verbascum). Loudon.

5. In spinning, a machine invented by Samuel Crompton (completed 1779), in which the rovings are delivered from a series of sets of drawing-rollers to spindles placed on a carriage which travels away from the rollers while the thread is being twisted, and returns toward the rollers while the thread is being wound: so named because it was a combination of the drawing-rollers of Arkwright and the jenny of Hargreaves.—6. In numis., a coin, token, or medal which, owing to mistake or caprice, consists of two obverse or two reverse types, or of which the obverse and reverse types are accidentally associated. Thus, a denarius having a head of Tiberius on each side, or a denarius having the head of Tiberius on the obverse and a reverse type struck from one of the coin-dies of Augustus, would be a mule.

> The encouragement given to the creation of new varieties [of English tradesmen's tokens in the eighteenth century] by combining obverse and reverse dies that had no real connection was satirized by a token bearing the reverse type of an ass [that is, a token-collector] and mule saluting each other, [and] having for the legend "Be assured, friend mule, you shall never want my protection." The very appropriate term mule was ever after applied to these illegitimate varieties.
> T. Sharp, Cat. of Chetwynd Coll. of Tokens, p. iv.

7. A slipper without heel-piece or quarter.—8. The foot of a wine-glass.—9. A disease in horses.

Lady Brassey, Voyage of Sunbeam, II. xxi.

2. To boil or stew. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

II. intrans. 1. To stir; bustle; make a stir. [Rare.] —2. To work continuously at anything without making much progress; toil steadily and accomplish little; moil.

Milborne was not likely to act upon impulse, and there is even reason to believe he took much time mulling over the matter after it developed in his mind.
The Atlantic, LXIV. 188.

mull[5]† (mul), n. [Cf. mulley, muley.] A cow. Compare muley. Satyr against Hypocrites (1689). (Nares.) mull[6] (mul), v. i. [Perhaps contr. of muggle[1]. Cf. mold[2] (ME. moulen, muwlen, etc.).] To rain softly. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

mull[7] (mul), n. [Abbr. of mulmul.] A thin, soft kind of muslin used for dresses, trimmings, etc.: known as India mull, French mull, etc. Also mulmul, mullmull.

mullagatawny (mul″a-ga-tâ′ni), n. Same as mulligatawny.

mullar, n. 1†. An obsolete form of muller[1].—2. A stamp engraved in intaglio for making a salient impression in metal by percussion.

mullen, mullein (mul′en), n. [< ME. moleyn, < AS. molegn, defined as "mullein, Verbascum thapsus," by Cockayne, etc.; but molegn, also molegen, moleng, moling, is found only in glosses, explained by ML. calmum (among things appertaining to the table), calmum being elsewhere explained as the droppings of a candle which adhere to the sides of the candle or of the candlestick; by galmum, explained as a reduced form of galbanum, a gum-resin, or the plant producing it (see galbanum); by galmilla, gamilla, which glosses both molegn and līm-mulegn (līm, viscous substance, E. lime[1]); and by galmulum, which glosses molegn-stycce (stycce, piece). The term seems to have been transferred from the droppings of a candle to the weed, which is elsewhere compared to a candle-wick or candlestick or torch. Cf. "herba liminaria [read luminaria], moleyn, feltwort," in a ME. gloss; and see quotation and phrase candle-wick mullen, below. The origin of AS. molegn is unknown. The OF. molaine, moulaine, F. molène, mullen, appears to be < E. For the AS. form molegn, cf. AS. holegn, holly: see hollen, holly[1].] A well-known tall, stout weed, Verbascum Thapsus, with a long dense woolly raceme of yellow flowers, and thick, densely woolly leaves; also, any plant of the genus Verbascum. An infusion of the leaves of the common mullen is used in domestic practice for catarrh and dysentery; while the name bullock's or cow's lungwort indicates another medical application. (For other uses, see fish-poison and hag-taper.) This plant has received numerous fanciful names, as Adam's flannel, blanket leaf, feltwort flannel-flower, hare's beard, ice-leaf, Jupiter's-staff. The moth-mullen is V. Blattaria, a less stout plant, with the flowers yellow, or white tinged with purple. The white mullen is V. Lychnitis. These species are fully, or the last sparingly, naturalized in the United States from Europe.

Mullen (Verbascum Thapsus). 1, the inflorescence; 2, the leaf; a, the fruit.

Moulaine [F.], mullen, wooll-blade, long-wort, haresbeard, big-taper, torches. Cotgrave.

Candle-wick mullen, the common mullen: so called because anciently it was covered with tallow and used as a candle or torch. See hag-taper.

Mescheniere [F.], candle wick mullein. Cotgrave.

Mullen dock, the common mullen. See dock[1], 2.—Mullen foxglove. See foxglove.—Mullen pink. See Lychnis, 2.—Petty mullen, an old name for the common cowslip, Primula veris.

mullen-shark (mul′en-shärk), n. A shark-moth, Cucullia verbasci, whose larva feeds on the mullen.

muller[1] (mul′ėr), n. [< OF. moleur, moulleur, a grinder, < OF. molre, mouldre, moulre, F. moudre, < L. molere, grind, < mola, a millstone: see mill[1], meal[1], etc.] 1. The grinder in an amalgamating-pan, or any similar form of pulverizing and amalgamating apparatus.—2. An implement of stone or glass with which paints are ground by hand.

muller[2] (mul′ėr), n. [< mull[4] + -er[1].] 1. One who mulls wine, cider, etc.—2. A vessel in which wine or other liquor is mulled.

Müllerian[1] (mü-lē′ri-an), a. [< Müller (see def.) + -ian.] Pertaining to H. M. Müller (1820–64), professor at Würzburg.—Müllerian fibers. See sustentacular fibers.—Müller's muscle, or Müller's palpebral muscle. See under muscle.

Müllerian[2] (mü-lē′ri-an), a. [< Müller (see def.) + -ian.] Pertaining to Johannes Müller (1801–58), a German physiologist. Also Mullerian, Muellerian.—Müllerian duct. See duct of Müller, under duct.

One commences at the anterior abdominal orifice of the primary duct, and has no further relations to the kidney. This is the Mullerian duct.
Gegenbaur, Comp. Anat. (trans.), p. 604.

Müller's fluid. See fluid.

Muller's glass. Same as hyalite.

mullet[1] (mul′et), n. [< ME. molet, mulet, < OF. mulet, F. mulet, a mullet, dim. of mulle, < L. mullus, the red mullet: see Mullus.] 1. A fish of the genus Mugil or of the family Mugilidæ. Of the true mullets the genus Mugil is the type. The characteristics are—a nearly cylindrical body covered with large scales; six branchiostegal rays; head convex above; the scales large; the muzzle short; an angular rise in the middle of the lower jaw, which fits into a corresponding hollow in the upper; and ciliiform teeth. A well-known species is the common gray mullet or great mullet (Lisa capito), found round the shores of the British Isles, and in particular abundance in the Mediterranean. It grows to the length of from 12 to 20 inches, and exceptionally to nearly 3 feet. It is of a bottle-green color on the back, light on the sides, which are marked with longitudinal bands, and of a silvery white underneath. It frequents shallow water, and in spring and early summer often ascends rivers. It has the habit of rooting in the mud or sand in search of food. Another species, also known as the gray mullet (M. cephalus), a native of the Mediterranean, is distinguished by having its eyes half covered by an adipose membrane. It weighs usually from 10 to 12 pounds, and is the most delicate of all the mullets. It abounds also on the Atlantic coast of the United States, on both coasts of Mexico, in Hawaii, where its flesh is most excellent, and in Japan. A smaller species, the thick-lipped gray mullet (Lisa chelo), is common on the British coasts. Many other species, natives of the Mediterranean, India, and Africa, are much esteemed as food.

Gray or Striped Mullet (Mugil cephalus).
(From Report of U. S. Fish Commission.)

2. A surmullet, or fish of the family Mullidæ. —3. The white sucker or red-horse, Moxostoma macrolepidota. [Local, U. S.]—4. One of various fishes of the families Catostomidæ and Cyprinidæ in the United States.—5. One of various species of the family Sciænidæ and genus Menticirrus along the coast of the United States.—Black mullet, Menticirrus nebulosus, a sciænid, the kingfish. See cut under kingfish.—Blue mullet, Moxostoma coregonus, a catostomid. [Morgantown, North Carolina.]—Golden mullet, a catostomid, Moxostoma macrolepidota, or red-horse.—Ground-mullet, a sciænid, Menticirrus alburnus, the southern kingfish.—Jumping mullet, a catostomid, Moxostoma cervina.—King of the mullets. See king[1].—Long-headed mullet, a cyprinid, Squalius atrarius.—Red mullet, one of various species of Mullidæ.—Silvery mullet, a catostomid, Moxostoma carpio.—Striped mullet, a catostomid, Minytrema melanops. [Interior U. S.]—Thick-headed mullet, a catostomid, Moxostoma congesta.—Whitefish-mullet, a catostomid, Moxostoma coregonus.

mullet[2] (mul′et), n. [Early mod. E. also mulet; < ME. molette, < OF. molette, mollette, the rowel of a spur, a painter's grindstone, F. molette, a rowel, = Sp. Pg. moleta, mullet, = It. molette, pl., pincers (cf. It. molla, a millstone, mill-wheel, clock-wheel), < L. mola, a millstone: see mill[1].] 1. The rowel of a spur.

The brydylle reynys were of sylke,
The molettys gylte they were.
MS. Cantab. Ff. ii. 38, f. 87. (Halliwell.)

2. In her., a star-shaped figure having sometimes five, sometimes six points. It is thought to represent the rowel of a spur, but this is more particularly suggested by the mullet pierced (see below). The mullet is one of the common marks of cadency, and is taken to indicate the third son. Also astroid and molette.

Three Mullets in chief: arms of William, Lord Douglas.

3†. pl. Small tongs or pincers, especially those used for curling the hair.

Moiette [It.], mullets, firetongs, pincers. . . .
Pilaturo [It.], a pair of mulets to pull out haires with. Florio.

Where are thy mullets?
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v. 2.

Mullet pierced, in her., a star-shaped figure having a round hole in the middle. It is supposed to represent the rowel of a spur, and has usually five points.

mullet[2]† (mul'et), v. t. [< mullet[2], n.] To deck or adorn by means of mullets or curling-pincers.

Her ladiships browes must be mullitted.
Quarles, Virgin Widow (1656).

mullet-hawk (mul'et-hâk), n. The osprey or fish-hawk, Pandion haliaëtus.

mullet-smelt (mul'et-smelt), n. See smelt.

mullet-sucker (mul'et-suk″ėr), n. Same as mullet[1], 3.

mulley (mŭl'i), a. and n. Same as muley.

mullhead (mul'hed), n. A stupid fellow. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

Mullidæ (mul'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Mullus + -idæ.] A family of acanthopterygian fishes, typified by the genus Mullus. They have an oblong compressed body covered with large deciduous scales, unarmed opercular bones, no bony preopercular stay, and a pair of movable barbels at the throat. About 50 species inhabit tropical or subtropical seas, and one, the red mullet or surmullet, Mullus surmuletus, goes northward to the British and neighboring waters.

mulliegrums†, n. An obsolete form of mulligrubs.

Peter's successour was so in his mulliegrums that he had thought to have buffeted him.
Nashe, Lenten Stuffe (Harl. Misc., VI. 172). (Davies.)

mulligatawny (mul″i-gạ-tâ'ni), n. [Tamil milagu-tannīr, lit. pepper-water.] A famous East Indian soup made of meat or fowl, strongly flavored with curry. Also spelled mullagatawny.

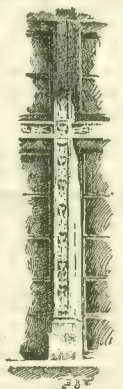
In Mulligatawny soup . . . Australian meat forms a very serviceable ingredient.
Saturday Rev. (London), May 24, 1873, p. 691.

mulligrubs (mul'i-grubz), n. [Formerly also mulliegrums; appar. a slang term, and perhaps as such of no definite origin.] 1. A pain in the intestines; colic. [Slang.]



Doctors for diseases of wind and doctors for diseases of water, doctors for mulligrubs and doctors for "miseries."
The Atlantic, XXI. 268.

2. Ill temper; sulkiness; the sulks: as, to have the mulligrubs. [Slang.]

I have scarce stirred to take exercise for four or five days, no wonder I had the mulligrubs.
Scott, Journal, March 14, 1826.

3. The dobson or hellgrammite. [Local, U. S.]

mullion (mul'yọn), n. [A corruption of munnion, perhaps by some vague association with mullet[2], a five-pointed star: see munnion.] In arch.: (a) A division, typically of stone, between the lights of windows, screens, etc. Mullions were first used toward the close of the twelfth century, and reached their most perfect development about the middle of the thirteenth century. In the later medieval architecture, while becoming constantly more elaborate in design and in moldings, and exhibiting much science in the methods of assembling, the mullions are artistically less satisfactory in their lines. The word is in the plural almost synonymous with tracery. See also cuts under batement-light, geometric, decorated, flamboyant. (b) One of the divisions between panels in wainscoting. Formerly monial.

Renaissance Mullion.—Hôtel de Ville, Beaugency, France.

mullion (mul'yọn), v. t. [< mullion, n.] To form into divisions by the use of mullions.

mullioned (mul'yọnd), a. [< mullion + -ed[2].] Having mullions.

mullit†, v. t. See mullet[2].

mull-madder (mul'mad″ėr), n. An inferior quality of madder, consisting of the refuse sifted or winnowed out in the preparation of the finer qualities.

mullmull (mul'mul), n. See mulmul.

mull-muslin (mul'muz″lin), n. A muslin of the finest quality, thin, soft, and transparent, used for women's dresses and the like. The name is usually given to the English and other imitations of mull. See mull[7].

mullock (mul'ọk), n. [Early mod. E. also mollocke, < ME. mullok, dim. of mul, mulle, dust: see mull[1] and -ock.] 1. Rubbish; refuse; dirt; dung. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

The mullok on an hepe ysweped was.
Chaucer, Prol. to Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 385.

There may be multeity in things, but there can only be plurality in persons.
Coleridge.

If it should appear that the field of competition is deficient in that continuity of fluid, that multeity of atoms, which constitute the foundations of the uniformities of physics.
F. Y. Edgeworth, Mathematical Psychics.

multer†, n. A Middle English form of multure.

multer-ark†, n. A vessel in which the multure or toll for grinding corn was deposited. Cath. Ang., p. 246.

multer-dish†, n. A dish or vessel used in measuring the amount of multure or toll for grinding. Cath. Ang., p. 246.

multi-. [L. multi-, before a vowel mult-, combining form of multus, much, many: see multitude.] An element in many words of Latin origin or formation, meaning 'many' or 'much.'

multiangular (mul-ti-ang'gū-lär), a. Same as multangular.

multiarticulate (mul″ti-är-tik'ū-lāt), a. Same as multarticulate.

multiaxial (mul-ti-ak'si-al), a. [Prop. multaxial,* < L. multus, many, + axis, an axle: see axial.] Having many or several axes or lines of growth. H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 50.

multicamerate (mul-ti-kam'ẹ-rāt), a. [< L. multus, many, + camera, a chamber: see camerate.] Having many chambers or cells; multiloculate. Gegenbaur, Comp. Anat. (trans.), p. 282.

multicapitate (mul-ti-kap'i-tāt), a. [< L. multus, many, + capitatus, having a head: see capitate.] Having many heads; multicipital.

multicapsular (mul-ti-kap'sū-lär), a. [= F. multicapsulaire = Pg. multicapsular = It. molticapsolare, < L. multus, many, + (NL.) capsula, capsule: see capsule, capsular.] Having many capsules: used especially in botany.

multicarinate (mul-ti-kar'i-nāt), a. [< L. multus, many, + carina, a keel: see carina, carinate.] Having many keel-like ridges, as the shells of certain mollusks.

multicauline (mul-ti-kâ'lin), a. [< L. multus, many, + caulis, a stem: see caulis.] Having many stems. Thomas, Med. Dict.

multicavous (mul-tik'ạ-vus), a. [= Pg. multicavo, < L. multicavus, many-holed, < multus, many, + cavus, hollow: see cave[1].] Having many holes or cavities.

multicellular (mul-ti-sel'ū-lär), a. [< L. multus, many, + cellula, a small room: see cellula, cellular.] Having several cells; consisting of several cells; many-celled: as, a multicellular organism. Compare unicellular.

To enable this multicellular to be used as an inspectional instrument, . . . a mirror supported in a frame . . . is supplied.
Elect. Review (Eng.), XXV. 525.

multicentral (mul-ti-sen'tral), a. [< L. multus, many, + centrum, center: see central.] Having many centers; specifically, having many centers of organic activity or development, as nuclei.

The changes undergone by the nucleus in this rapid multicentral segregation of the parent protoplasm have not been determined.
E. R. Lankester, Encyc. Brit., XIX. 837.

multicharge (mul'ti-chärj), a. [< L. multus, many, + E. charge.] Having or capable of containing several charges: as, a multicharge gun. See gun[1].

multicipital (mul-ti-sip'i-tal), a. [< L. multus, many, + caput (in comp. -ciput), head: see caput, capital[1].] In zoöl. and bot., having many heads; multicapitate.

multicolor, multicolour (mul'ti-kul-ọr), a. [= F. multicolore = Pg. multicolor = It. multicolore, < L. multicolor, many-colored, < multus, many, + color, color: see color.] Having many colors. Also multicolored. [Rare.]

multicolorous (mul-ti-kul'ọr-us), a. [< LL. multicolōrus, many-colored: see multicolor.] Of many colors; party-colored; pied.

multicostate (mul-ti-kos'tāt), a. [< L. multus, many, + costa, a rib: see costate.] 1. In bot., having numerous ribs or nerves proceeding from the base of a leaf.—2. In zoöl., having many ribs, ridges, or costæ.

multicuspid (mul-ti-kus'pid), a. and n. [< L. multus, much, + cuspis (cuspid-), a point: see cusp.] I. a. Having more than two cusps, as a tooth. Also multicuspidate.

II. n. A multicuspid tooth.

multicuspidate (mul-ti-kus'pi-dāt), a. [< L. multus, many, + cuspis (cuspid-), a point: see cusp, cuspidate.] Same as multicuspid.

multicycle (mul'ti-sī-kl), n. [< L. multus, many, + cyclus, a circle, a wheel: see bicycle.] 1. A velocipede or "cycle" with more than three wheels; specifically, a form of velocipede first introduced to public notice in 1887, by a series of experiments at Aldershot in England, to test its value as a vehicle for infantry. It is intended to carry from five to twelve men. It has seven pairs of wheels, six pairs being actuated by twelve men, two men to a pair, the space over the axle between the wheels of the seventh pair being occupied as a baggage-van. The propulsion is performed entirely by the feet of the men, and the vehicle is steered by one man.

2. A bicycle designed to carry more than two riders.

multidentate (mul-ti-den'tāt), a. [< L. multus, many, + den(t-)s = E. tooth: see dentate.] Having many teeth or tooth-like processes.—Multidentate mandible. See mandible[1].

multidenticulate (mul″ti-den-tik'ū-lāt), a. [< L. multus, many, + denticulus, dim. of den(t-)s = E. tooth: see denticulate.] Having many denticulations or fine teeth.

multidigitate (mul-ti-dij'i-tāt), a. [< L. multus, many, + digitus, finger: see digitate.] Having many fingers, toes, or digitate processes.

multidimensional (mul-ti-di-men'shọn-al), a. [< L. multus, many, + dimensio(n-), dimension: see dimension, dimensional.] In math., of more than three dimensions; n-dimensional.

Only mathematicians can work out systems of non-Euclidian geometry, or of multidimensional space.
R. A. Proctor, Gentleman's Mag., CCLIV. 36.

multifaced (mul'ti-fāst), a. [< L. multus, many, + facies, face, + E. -ed[2].] Having many faces, as certain crystals; presenting many different appearances.

multifarie†, a. [< LL. multifarius, manifold: see multifarious.] Same as multifarious.

As though we sent into the land of France
Ten thousand people, men of good puissance,
To werre vnto her hindring multifarie.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 197.

multifarious (mul-ti-fā'ri-ụs), a. [= Sp. multifario, < LL. multifarius, manifold, < L. multus, many, + -farius = Gr. -φάσιος, < φαίνεσθαι, √ φα, show, appear. Cf. bifarious.] 1. Having great multiplicity; of great diversity or variety; made up of many differing parts.

Man is a complex and multifarious being, integrated of body and soul. Bp. Parker, Platonick Philos., p. 7.

2. In bot. and zoöl., arranged in many rows or ranks.—3. In law (of a pleading in equity), combining in the same bill of complaint distinct and separate claims of distinct natures or affecting different persons not connected therein, which ought to be made the subject of separate suits. As the objection is founded on the inconvenience of trying together diverse matters, what is to be regarded as multifarious is largely discretionary with the trial court.

multifariously (mul-ti-fā'ri-us-li), adv. In a multifarious way; with great diversity.

multifariousness (mul-ti-fā'ri-us-nes), n. The state or quality of being multifarious; multiplied diversity.

multiferous (mul-tif'ẹ-rus), a. [= F. multifère = Sp. multífero, < L. multifer, fruitful, < multus, much, + ferre = E. bear[1].] Bearing or producing much or many. Bailey, 1731.

multifid (mul'ti-fid), a. [= F. multifide = It. multifido, < L. multifidus, many-cleft, < multus, many, + findere, √ fid, cleave: see fission.] Having many fissions or divisions; cleft into many parts, lobes, or segments, as certain leaves: chiefly a zoölogical and botanical term.

multifidous (mul-tif'i-dus), a. [< L. multifidus: see multifid.] Same as multifid.

multifidus (mul-tif'i-dus), n.; pl. multifidi (-dī). [NL., < L. multifidus, many-cleft: see multifid.] In anat., one of the muscles of the fifth or deepest layer of the back, consisting of many fleshy and tendinous fasciculi which pass obliquely upward and inward from one vertebra to another, the whole filling the groove between the spinous and transverse processes from the sacrum to the axis: more fully called the multifidus spinæ, and also fidispinalis.

multiflagellate (mul-ti-flaj'e-lāt), a. [< L. multus, many, + flagellum, whip: see flagellate[1].] Possessing many flagella, or whip-like appendages: correlated with uniflagellate, biflagellate.

multiflorous (mul-ti-flō'rus), a. [= F. multiflore = Sp. Pg. It. multifloro, < LL. multiflōrus, abounding in flowers, < L. multus, many, + flos (flor-), a flower: see flower.] Many-flowered; having many flowers.

multiflue (mul'ti-flö), a. [< L. multus, many, + E. flue[1].] Having many flues, as the boiler of a locomotive. [A trade use.]

Multifoil.—Window of Apsidal Chapel, Rheims Cathedral, France; 13th century.

multifoil (mul'ti-foil), a. and n. [< L. multus, many, + folium, a leaf: see foil[1].] I. a. In arch., decoration, etc., having more than five foils or arcuate divisions: as, a multifoil arch.

II. n. Multifoil ornament.

In his architecture the tracery, scroll-work, and multifoil bewilder us, and divert attention from the main design. Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 335.

multifold (mul'ti-fōld), a. [< L. multus, many, + E. -fold.] Many times doubled; manifold; numerous.

multiform (mul'ti-fôrm), a. and n. [= F. multiforme = Sp. Pg. multiforme = It. multiforme, moltiforme, < L. multiformis, many-shaped, < multus, many, + forma, form.] I. a. Having many forms; highly diversiform; polymorphic.

Air, and ye elements, the eldest birth
Of Nature's womb, that in quaternion run Perpetual circle, multiform, and mix
And nourish all things. Milton, P. L., v. 182.

Multiform aggregates which display in the highest degree the phenomena of Evolution structurally considered.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 36.

Multiform function, a function such that within a given area of the variable the latter can pass continuously through a cycle of values so that when it returns to its original value the function shall have a different value from that which it had at first. Also called non-uniform function.

II. n. That which is multiform; that which gives a multiplied representation or many repetitions of anything.

The word suits many different martyrdoms,
And signifies a multiform of death.
Mrs. Browning, Aurora Leigh, iii.

multiformity (mul-ti-fôr'mi-ti), n. [= OF. multiformité = Sp. multiformidad = Pg. multiformidade, < LL. multiformita(t-)s, < L. multiformis, many-shaped: see multiform.] The character of being multiform; diversity of forms; variety of shapes or appearances in one thing.

From that most one God flowes multiformity of effects; and from that eternall God temporall effects.
Bp. Hall, Noah's Dove.

If we contemplate primitive human life as a whole, we see that multiformity of sequence rather than uniformity of sequence is the notion which it tends to generate.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Psychol., § 488.

multiformous (mul-ti-fôr'mus), a. [< multiform + -ous.] Same as multiform. [Rare.]

His multiformous places compell'd such a swarm of suitors to hum about him.
Bp. Hacket, Abp. Williams, i. 204. (Davies.)

multiganglionate (mul-ti-gang'gli-ọn-āt), a. [< L. multus, many, + (LL.) ganglion, a tumor: see ganglion.] Having many ganglia. Huxley.

multigenerate (mul-ti-jen'ẹ-rāt), a. [< L. multus, many, + generatus, pp. of generare, generate: see generate.] Generated in many ways. —Multigenerate function, in math., a function not monogenous.

multigenerous (mul-ti-jen'ẹ-rus), a. [< L. multigeneris, also multigenerus, of many kinds, < multus, many, + genus (gener-), kind: see genus.] Of many kinds; having many kinds.

multigranulate (mul-ti-gran'ụ-lāt), a. [< L. multus, many, + granulum, a grain: see granulate.] Having or consisting of many grains.

multigyrate (mul-ti-jī'rāt), a. [< L. multus, many, + gyrus, a circle, circuit, ring: see gyrate.] Having many gyres or convolutions; much convoluted, as a brain.

multijugate (mul-ti-jö'gāt), a. Same as multijugous.

multijugous (mul-ti-jö'gus), a. [< L. multijugus, multijugis, yoked many together, < multus, many, + jugum, yoke.] In bot., consisting of many pairs of leaflets.

multilaminate (mul-ti-lam'i-nāt), a. [< L. multus, many, + lamina, a thin plate of wood: see laminate.] Having many layers or laminæ.

multilateral (mul-ti-lat'ẹ-ral), a. [Cf. F. multilatère = Sp. multilátero = Pg. multilatero = It. moltilatero; < L. multus, many, + latus (later-), side: see lateral.] 1. In math., having more lines or sides than one. Hence—2. Generally, many-sided.

The whole poem represents the multilateral character of Hinduism. J. F. Clarke, Ten Great Religions, iii. 8.

multilinear (mul-ti-lin'ẹ-ạr), a. [< L. multus, many, + linea, a line: see linear.] Same as multilineal.

multilobate (mul-ti-lō'bāt), a. [< L. multus, many, + NL. lobus, a lobe, + -ate[1]: see lobate.] Having many lobes; consisting of several lobes.

multilobed (mul'ti-lōbd), a. [< L. multus, many, + NL. lobus, a lobe, + -ed[2].] Having many lobes or lobe-like parts; multilobate.

multilobular (mul-ti-lob'ụ-lạr), a. [< L. multus, many, + NL. lobulus, lobule: see lobular.] Having many lobules.

multilocular (mul-ti-lok'ụ-lạr), a. [= F. multiloculaire = Pg. multilocular = It. moltiloculare, < L. multus, many, + loculus, a cell, + -ar[3]: see locular.] Having many cells, chambers, or compartments: as, a multilocular pericarp; a multilocular spore; multilocular shells. See pluri-locular.—Multilocular crypt. See crypt.

multiloculate (mul-ti-lok'ụ-lāt), a. [< L. multus, many, + loculus, a cell, + -ate[1].] Same as multilocular.

multiloquence (mul-til'ọ-kwens), n. [= It. moltiloquenza, < L. multus, many, + loquentia, a talking, < loquen(t-)s, ppr. of loqui, speak, talk: see locution.] Use of many words; verbosity; loquacity.

multiloquent (mul-til'ọ-kwent), a. [< L. multus, much, + loquen(t-)s, ppr. of loqui, speak.] Speaking much; very talkative; loquacious.

multiloquous (mul-til'ọ-kwus), a. [= Sp. moltiloco = Pg. multiloquo = It. moltiloquo, < L. multiloquus, talkative, < multus, much, + loqui, speak, talk.] Same as multiloquent.

multiloquy†, (mul-til'ọ-kwi), n. [= Pg. multiloquio = It. moltiloquio, multiloquio, < L. multiloquium, talkativeness, < multiloquus, talkative: see multiloquous.] Same as multiloquence.

multimillionaire (mul″ti-mil-yọn-ār'), n. [< L. multus + E. millionaire.] One who possesses property worth several million dollars (or pounds, or francs, etc.).

multinodal (mul-ti-nō'dạl), a. [< L. multus, many, + nodus, knot: see nodal.] Having many nodes, in any sense of that word.

multinodate (mul-ti-nō'dāt), a. [< L. multus, many, + nodus, knot: see node.] Same as multinodal.

multinodous (mul-ti-nō'dus), a. [< LL. multinodus, multinodis, having many knots, < L. multus, many, + nodus, knot: see node.] Same as multinodal.

multinomial (mul-ti-nō'mi-al), a. and n. [= Sp. It. multinomio, < L. multus, many, + nomen, a name: see nome[3], nomen. Cf. binomial.] Same as polynomial.—Multinomial theorem, an extension of the binomial theorem.

multinominal (mul-ti-nom'i-nal), a. [< L. multus, many, + nomen (nomin-), name: see nominal.] Same as multinominous.

multinominous (mul-ti-nom'i-nus), a. [< LL. multinominis, many-named, < L. multus, many, + nomen (nomin-), name: see name[1].] Having many names or terms; multinominal; polyonymous.

Venus is multinominous, to give example to her prostitute disciples. Donne, Paradoxus.

multinuclear (mul-ti-nū'klē-ạr), a. [< L. multus, many, + nucleus, a kernel: see nuclear.] Same as multinucleate.

multinucleate (mul-ti-nū'klē-āt), a. [< L. multus, many, + nucleus, a kernel: see nucleate.] Having many or several nuclei, as a cell. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 125.

multinucleated (mul-ti-nū'klē-ā-ted), a. Same as multinucleate.

multinucleolate (mul-ti-nū'klē-ọ-lāt), a. [< L. multus, many, + nucleolus, dim. of nucleus, a kernel: see nucleolate.] Having many or several nucleoli.

multiovulate (mul-ti-ō'vụ-lāt), a. [< L. multus, many, + ovulum, ovule: see ovule.] In bot., containing or bearing many ovules.

multipara (mul-tip'a-rä), n.; pl. multiparæ (-rē). [NL., fem. of multiparus: see multiparous.] In obstet., a woman who has had two or more children, or who, having had one, is parturient a second time: opposed to primipara.

multiparity (mul-ti-par'i-ti), n. [< multiparous + -ity.] Plural birth; production of several at a birth.

multiparous (mul-tip'a-rus), a. [= F. multipare = It. moltiparo, < NL. multiparus, giving or having given birth to many, < L. multus, many, + parere, bear.] 1. Producing many at a birth.

Creatures . . . that are feeble and timorous are generally Multiparous. Ray, Works of Creation, p. 138.

2. In bot., many-bearing: said of a cyme with three or more lateral axes (the pleiochasium of Eichler).

multipartite (mul-ti-pär'tīt), a. [= F. multipartite = It. multipartito, < L. multipartitus, much-divided, < multus, much, + partitus, pp. of partire, divide, < pars (part-), a part: see part, v.] Divided or cleft into many parts; having several parts; multifid.

multiped, multipede (mul'ti-ped, -pēd), a. and n. [= F. multipède; < L. multipes (-ped-), many-footed (> multipeda, a many-footed insect), < multus, many, + pes (ped-) = E. foot.] I. a. Having many feet; polypous.

II. n. A many-footed or polypous animal.

multiphase (mul'ti-fāz), a. Having many phases. See polyphase. [Recent.]

multipinnate (mul-ti-pin'āt), a. [< L. multus, many, + pinnatus, feathered: see pinnate.] In bot., many times pinnate. See pinnate.

★multiple (mul'ti-pl), a. and n. [= F. multiple = Sp. múltiplo = Pg. multiplo = It. multiplo, < ML. multiplus, manifold, < L. multus, many, + -plus, as in duplus, double, etc., akin to E. -fold: see -fold, and cf. duple, triple, etc. Cf. multiplex, with diff. second element.] I. a. 1. Manifold; having many parts or relations.—2. Consisting of more than one complete individual.—Law of multiple proportion, in chem., the law, first announced by Dalton, that, when a given quantity of an element A unites with several different quantities of B to form definite compounds, these several quantities of B will bear a simple ratio to each other.—Multiple arc, the system of connecting electric batteries, lamps, or other circuits to the leads or main conductors where terminals of each lamp or other circuit are connected to the leads, so as to form an independent arc or circuit between them. See parallel circuit, under parallel.—Multiple contact drilling-machine, etc. See the nouns.—Multiple echoes. See echo, 1.—Multiple epidermis, in bot., an epidermis of several layers of superposed cells, resulting from the division of the original epidermal cells by partitions parallel to the surface.—Multiple fruit. See fruit, 4.—Multiple images. See image.—Multiple integral, in math., a quantity which results from the performance of integration more than once, generally with reference to different variables.—Multiple lines, in fort., several lines of detached works or ramparts arranged for the defense of a military position.—Multiple neuritis, a neuritis involving several nerves at once.—Multiple point or tangent, in math., one which results from the coalescence of two points or tangents. The multiple points of curves are made up of the three kinds of double points: namely, the point where the curve crosses itself, the outlying point, and the cusp. In like manner, the multiple tangents are made up of three kinds of double tangents—the tangent from one real convexity to another, the outlying tangent with no real point of tangency, and the tangent at an inflection.—Multiple pole. Same as multipolar.—Multiple star. See star.—Multiple values, in alg., symbols which fulfil the algebraic conditions of a problem when several different values are given to them, as the roots of an equation, certain functions of an arc or angle, etc.

II. n. In arith., a number produced by multiplying another by a whole number: as, 12 is a multiple of 3, the latter being a submultiple or aliquot part of the former.—Common multiple of two or more numbers, a number that is divisible by each of them without remainder: thus, 24 is a common multiple of 6 and 4. The least common multiple is the smallest number of which this is true: thus, 12 is the least common multiple of 6 and 4. The same definitions apply to algebraic quantities.—Multiple of gearing, a train of gearing by which a specific power to accomplish a definite act or function is attained through change of speed-ratio. Thus, in powerful shears, etc., a high speed is changed to a low speed with great increase of pressure exerted through a small distance on the cutting blade; conversely, by a multiple of gearing a high speed with less pressure may be obtained.

multiplepoinding (mul'ti-pl-poin''ding), n. In Scots law, double poinding or double distress. It gives rise to an action by which a person possessed of money or effects which are claimed by different persons obtains an adjudication for settlement and payment: corresponding to interpleader in England and the United States. See poinding.

multiplex (mul'ti-pleks), a. and n. [= Sp. multiplice = Pg. multiplex, multiplice = It. multiplice, moltiplice, < L. multiplex (LL. also multiplicus), manifold, < multus, many, + plicare, fold: see plicate.] I. a. 1. Manifold; multiple; multiplicate.

In favour of which unspeakable benefits of the reality, what can we do but cheerfully pardon the multiplex ineptitudes of the semblance?
Carlyle, Misc., IV. 137. (Davies.)

2. In bot., having petals lying over one another in folds. Also multiplicate.—Multiplex telegraphy, a method by which several messages (specifically, more than four) can be sent over the same wire. By Edison's method (see quadruplex) four messages can be sent, and the number has been increased by Rowland to twelve or sixteen. See duplex telegraph.

II. n. In math., a set of objects.

multiplex (mul'ti-pleks), v. t. [< multiplex, a.] To render multiplex; manifold. [Colloq.]

multipliable (mul'ti-plī-a-bl), a. [< F. multipliable, < L. multipliabilis: see multiply. Cf. multiplicable.] Capable of being multiplied.

There is a continually increasing demand for popular art, multipliable by the printing-press, illustrative of daily events, of general literature, and of natural science.
Ruskin, Lectures on Art (1872), p. 10.

multipliableness (mul'ti-plī-a-bl-nes), n. Capableness of being multiplied.

multiplicable (mul'ti-pli-ka-bl), a. [= OF. multiplicable, multipliable, F. multipliable = Sp. multiplicable = Pg. multiplicavel = It. moltiplicabile, that may be multiplied, < L. multiplicabilis, multiplied, manifold, < multiplicare, multiply: see multiply.] Multipliable; capable of existing in many individual cases.

multiplicand (mul'ti-pli-kand), n. [= F. multiplicande = Sp. Pg. multiplicando = It. moltiplicando, < L. multiplicandus, gerundive of multiplicare, multiply: see multiply.] In arith., a number multiplied or to be multiplied by another, which is called the multiplier. See multiplication, 2.

The two numbers given or assigned in every multiplication have each of them a peculiar name, for the greater is called the multiplicand and the lesser is named the multiplier.
T. Hill, Arithmetick (1600), fol. 23Q.

★multiplicate (mul'ti-pli-kāt), a. [= Sp. Pg. multiplicado = It. moltiplicato, < L. multiplicatus, pp. of multiplicare, multiply: see multiply.] 1. Consisting of many, or more than one.—2. In bot., same as multiplex, 2.

multiplicated† (mul'ti-pli-kā-ted), a. [< multiplicate + *-ed*².] Multiplied; put in two or more folds.

The Persian "cap was linnen multiplicated."
Sir T. Herbert, Travels (1664), p. 319.

★multiplication (mul''ti-pli-kā'shon), n. [< ME. multiplicacion, < OF. multiplicacion, F. multiplication, < Sp. multiplicación = Pg. multiplicação = It. moltiplicazione, < L. multiplicatio(n-), multiplication, < multiplicare, pp. multiplicatus, multiply: see multiply.] 1. The act or process of multiplying or of increasing in number; the state of being multiplied: as, the multiplication of the human species by natural generation.

In hilles feet towarde Septentrion
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 175.

It may be doubted whether any of us have ever yet realized the enormous change which has taken place in the conditions of national progress by the multiplication and diffusion of cheap books. Nineteenth Century, XXIV. 499.

2. An arithmetical process in which one number, the multiplier, is considered as an operator upon another, the multiplicand, the result, called the product, being the total number of units in as many groups as there are units in the multiplier, each group being equal in number to the multiplicand; more generally, the operation of finding the quantity which results from substituting the multiplicand in place of unity in the multiplier. Thus, the multiplication of 4 by 5 gives 5 times 4, or the number of units in five groups of four units each; so the multiplication of $\frac{2}{3}$ by $\frac{3}{4}$ consists in finding $\frac{3}{4}$ not of unity, but of $\frac{2}{3}$ of unity. By a further generalization, multiplication in the higher mathematics is regarded as the process of bringing an operand under an operator. Thus, in quaternions, if u be the operation of turning a line in a given direction through a given angle, and if v be another similar versor, then uv, or the result of the multiplication of v by u, is the rotation which would result from turning a line first through v and then through u. In like manner, in the theory of differential equations, if D_x denote the operation of differentiation relatively to the variable x, and D_y denote the same operation relatively to the variable y, then the operation of differentiating first relatively to y and then relatively to x is regarded as the product of D_y by D_x, and is written D_xD_y. In the algebra of logical relations, the multiplication of one relative by another consists in putting the relates of the multiplicand disjunctively in place of the correlates of the multiplier. In other cases, multiplication consists in conjoining (in some specific way) each unit of the multiplier with each unit of the multiplicand: and this definition may be regarded as including every other. Thus, the multiplication of 2 feet of length by 3 feet of breadth is considered as giving 6 feet of area, in each of which square feet one unit of length is conjoined with one unit of breadth. So the momentum of a body having a motion of translation is said to be the product of the mass into the velocity—that is, is the result of imparting to each particle of the mass the whole of the given velocity. In the Boolian algebra, the product of two classes A and B is the whole of the class embraced by both—that is, it embraces all the individuals each of which reunites the characters of A and of B. In algebra, multiplication is denoted by writing the multiplier before the multiplicand, either directly, or with a cross (×) or a dot (·) interposed between them. All multiplication follows the distributive principle, expressed by the formula

Under certain restrictions, all multiplication follows the associative principle, expressed by the formula $a(bc) = (ab)c$. According to the nature of the conjunction of units, multiplication does or does not follow the commutative principle, expressed by the formula $ab = ba$.

3. Specifically, in bot., increase in the number of parts of a flower, either (a) in the number of whorls or spiral turns, or (b) in the number of organs (pistils, stamens, petals, or sepals) in any whorl, circle, or spiral turn. Also called augmentation. See chorisis.—4†. The supposed art of increasing gold and silver by alchemical means. Chaucer.

It is ordained and stablished, That none from henceforth shall vse to multiply Gold and Silver; nor use the Craft of Multiplication; and if any the same do, and be thereof attaint, that he incur the Pain of Felony in this case. Stat. 5 Hen. IV., cap. 5.

Multiplication of Gold or Silver, the Art of encreasing those Metals, which in the Time of K. Henry IV was presum'd possible to be effected by means of Elixirs, or other Chymical Compositions.
Quoted in Booke of Precedence (E. E. T. S., extra ser.), i. 111.

Item, you commaunded multiplication and alcumistrie to bee practised, thereby to abait the king's coine.
Stow, Ldw. VI., an. 1549.

Anagrammatic, commutative, internal multiplication. See the adjectives.—Cross or duodecimal multiplication. See duodecimal, n., 2.—Multiplication table, a table containing the product of all the simple digits, and onward to some assumed limit, as to 12 times 12.—Polar or external multiplication, a multiplication in which the reversal of the order of the factors invariably reverses the sign of the product, while not altering its numerical value. Contrasted with internal multiplication.

multiplicative (mul'ti-pli-kā-tiv), a. and n. [= F. multiplicatif = Sp. Pg. It. multiplicativo; as multiplicate + -ive.] I. a. Tending to multiply or increase; having the power to multiply numbers.

II. n. A numeral adjective describing an object as repeated a certain number of times or as consisting of a certain number of parts, such as single, double (duplex), triple (treble), quadruple, quintuple, or twofold, threefold, fourfold, fivefold.

multiplicator (mul'ti-pli-kā-tor), n. [= F. multiplicateur = Sp. Pg. multiplicador = It. multiplicatore, < LL. multiplicator, a multiplier, < L. multiplicare, pp. multiplicatus, multiply: see multiply.] Same as multiplier, 2.

multiplicious† (mul-ti-plish'us), a. [< L. multiplex (multiplici-), multiplex, + -ous.] Manifold; multiplex.

The animal [amphisbæna] is not one, but multiplicious, or many, which hath a duplicity or gemination of principal parts. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iii. 15.

This sense [smelling] . . . although sufficiently grand and admirable, (yet) is not so multiplicious as of the eye or ear. Derham, Physico-Theology, iv. 4.

multipliciously† (mul-ti-plish'us-li), adv. In a manifold or multiplex manner.

★multiplicity (mul-ti-plis'i-ti), n. [= F. multiplicité = Sp. multiplicidad = Pg. multiplicidade = It. moltiplicità, < LL. multiplicita(t-)s, manifoldness, < L. multiplex, manifold: see multiplex.] 1. The state of being multiplex or manifold or various; the condition of being numerous.

Moreover, as the manifold variation of the parts, so the multiplicity of the use of each part, is very wonderful.
N. Grew, Cosmologia Sacra, i. 5.

2. Many of the same kind; a large number.

Had they discoursed rightly but upon this one principle that God was a being infinitely perfect, they could never have asserted a multiplicity of gods.
South, Sermons.

A multiplicity of laws give a judge as much power as a want of law, since he is ever sure to find among the number some to countenance his partiality.
Goldsmith, Reverie at Boar's-Head Tavern.

Multiplicity of a curve, the total number of multiple points, crunodes, acnodes, and cusps, or of their compound equivalents, belonging to it. Thus, a curve having no singularity except a ramphoid cusp has a multiplicity of 2, since a ramphoid cusp is equivalent to a simple cusp and a crunode.—Order of multiplicity of a right line with reference to a surface, the number of tangent planes to the surface from the line.

★multiplier (mul'ti-plī-ėr), n. 1. One who or that which multiplies or increases in number.

Broils and quarrels are alone the great accumulators and multipliers of injuries. Decay of Christian Piety.

2†. An alchemist. Compare multiplication, 3.

Alchymists were formerly called multipliers, although they never could multiply; as appears from a statute of Henry IV. repealed in the preceding record.
I. D'Israeli, Curios. of Lit., I. 376.

3. The number in the arithmetical process of multiplication by which another is multiplied. Also multiplicator.—4. A flat coil of conducting wire used as the coil of a galvanoscope. The tendency to deflection is proportional nearly to the number of coils.—5. An arithmometer for performing calculations in multiplication. E. H. Knight.—6. A multiplying-reel; an attachment to an anglers' reel which gathers in the slack with multiplied speed at each revolution of the crank. See reel.—Indeterminate, last, etc., multiplier. See the adjectives.

multiply (mul'ti-plī), v.; pret. and pp. multiplied, ppr. multiplying. [< ME. multiplien, multiplyen, multeplien, < OF. multiplier, malteplier, < F. multiplier = Sp. fold: see multiplex.] I. trans. 1. To make manifold; increase in number or quantity; make more by natural generation or reproduction, or by accumulation, addition, or repetition: as, to multiply men or horses; to multiply evils.

That God for hus grace goure grayn multeplie.
Piers Plowman, p. 135. (Richardson.)

I will harden Pharaoh's heart, and multiply my signs and my wonders in the land of Egypt. Ex. vii. 3.

Therefore doth Job open his mouth in vain; he multiplieth words without knowledge. Job xxxv. 16.

When they are come to the bottome, another Caue presently presents it selfe, which terrifieth those that enter with the multiplied sounds of Cymbals and vncouth minstrelsie. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 334.

Nothing but Groans and Sighs were heard around,
And Eccho multiply'd each mournful Sound.
Congreve, Tears of Amaryllis.

2. In arith., to perform the operation of multiplication upon. See multiplication, 2.—3†. To increase (the precious metals) by alchemical means. See multiplication, 3.

An impostor that had like to have impos'd upon us a pretended secret of multiplying gold.
Evelyn, Diary, Dec. 14, 1650.

Multiplying camera, gearing, glass, etc. See the nouns.

II. intrans. 1. To grow or increase in number or extent; extend; spread.

Be fruitful and multiply. Gen. i. 22.

The word of God grew and multiplied. Acts xii. 24.

As dangers and difficulties multiplied, she multiplied resources to meet them. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 16.

2. In arith., to perform the process of multiplication. See multiplication, 2.—3†. To increase gold or silver by alchemical means.

Whoso that listeth outen his folye,
Lat him come forth, and lerne multiplye.
Chaucer, Prol. to Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 282.

multiplying-lens (mul'ti-plī-ing-lenz), n. See lens.

multiplying-machine (mul'ti-plī-ing-ma-shēn″), n. A form of calculating-machine.

multiplying-wheel (mul'ti-plī-ing-hwēl), n. A wheel which increases the number of revolutions in machinery.

multipolar (mul-ti-pō'lär), a. and n. [< L. multus, many, + polus, pole: see polar.] I. a. Having many poles, as a nerve-cell or a dynamo: opposed to unipolar, bipolar. See cut under cell, 5.—Multipolar dynamo, a dynamo in which more than one pair of magnetic poles are used.—Multipolar telephone, a magneto-telephone in which more than one pole is opposed to the membrane.

II. n. An electromagnetic machine in which several pairs of magnetic poles are used or exist. Also called multiple pole.

multipotent (mul-tip'ō-tent), a. [< L. multipoten(t-)s, very powerful, < multus, much, + poten(t-)s, powerful: see potent.] Having manifold power, or power to do many things. [Rare.]

By Jove multipotent.
Thou shouldst not bear from me a Greekish member Wherein my sword had not impressure made Of our rank feud. Shak., T. and C., iv. 5. 129.

multipresence (mul-ti-prez'ens), n. [< multipresen(t) + -ce. Cf. presence.] The power or act of being present in many places at once, or in more places than one at the same time.

This sleeveless tale of transubstantiation was surely brought into the world, and upon the stage, by that other fable of the Multipresence of Christ's Body.
Bp. Hall, No Peace with Rome, I. iii. 3.

The mediæval schoolmen and modern Roman divines ascribe omnipresence only to the divine nature and person of Christ, unipresence to his human body in heaven, and a miraculous multipresence to his body and blood in the sacrament of the altar.
Schaff, Christ and Christianity, p. 75.

multipresent (mul-ti-prez'ent), a. [< L. multus, many, + præsen(t-)s, present: see present, a.] Being present in more places than one; having the property or power of multipresence.

multiradiate (mul-ti-rā'di-āt), a. [< L. multus, many, + radius, ray: see radiate, a.] Having many rays; polyactinal.

multiradicate (mul-ti-rad'i-kāt), a. [< LL. multiradix (-radic-), many-rooted (< L. multus, many, + radix (radic-), a root): see radicate.] Having many roots.

multiramified (mul-ti-ram'i-fīd), a. [< L. multus, many, + ramus, a branch, + facere, make: see ramify.] Much-branched; having many branches.

The Headlongs claim to be not less genuine derivatives from the antique branch of Cadwallader than any of the last-named multiramified families.
Peacock, Headlong Hall, i.

multiramose (mul-ti-rā'mōs), a. [< L. multus, many, + ramus, branch: see ramose.] Having many branches.

multiramous (mul-ti-rā'mus), a. Same as multiramose.

★multituberculate (mul″ti-tū-bėr'kū-lāt), a. [< L. multus, many, + tuberculum, a small swelling, tubercle: see tuberculate.] Having many tubercles, as teeth. Micros. Science, XXIX. i. 20.

multituberculated (mul″ti-tū-bėr'kū-lā-ted), a. Same as multituberculate. W. H. Flower, Encyc. Brit., XV. 376.

multitubular (mul-ti-tū'bū-lär), a. [< L. multus, many, + tubulus, a tube: see tubular.] Having many tubes: as, a multitubular boiler.

★multitude (mul'ti-tūd), n. [< F. multitude = Sp. multitud = Pg. multitude, multidão = It. multitudine, moltitudine, < L. multitudo (-din-), a great number, a multitude, a crowd, in gram. the plural number, < multus, OL. moltus, much, many, appar. orig. a pp. (cf. altus, high, deep, orig. pp. of alere, nourish, grow: see altitude, old).] 1. The character of being many; numerousness; also, a great number regarded collectively or as congregated together. Aquinas and others distinguish transcendental and material multitude; but it is difficult to attach any definite conception to transcendental multitude, which is the opposite of transcendental unity. Material multitude is the multitude of individuals of the same species, an expression which supposes matter to be the principle of individuation.

Armed freemen scattered over a wide area are deterred from attending the periodic assemblies by cost of travel, by cost of time, by danger, and also by the experience that multitudes of men unprepared and unorganized are helpless in presence of an organized few.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 495.

2. A great number, indefinitely.

It is a fault in a multitude of preachers that they utterly neglect method in their harangues. Watts.

3. A crowd or throng; a gathering or collection of people. According to some ancient legal authorities, it required at least ten to make a multitude.—The multitude, the populace, or the mass of men without reference to an assemblage.

The hasty multitude
Admiring enter'd; and the work some praise,
And some the architect. Milton, P. L., i. 730.

That great enemy of reason, virtue, and religion, the multitude. Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, ii. 1.

=Syn. Multitude, Throng, Crowd, swarm, mass, host, legion. A multitude, however great, may be in a space so large as to give each one ample room; a throng or a crowd is generally smaller than a multitude, but is gathered into a close body, a throng being a company that presses together or forward, and a crowd carrying the closeness to uncomfortable physical contact.

A very subtle argument could not have been communicated to the multitudes that visited the shows.
De Quincey, Secret Societies, i.

We are enow, yet living in the field,
To smother up the English in our throngs,
If any order might be thought upon.
Shak., Hen. V., iv. 5. 20.

It crosses here, it crosses there,
Thro' all that crowd confused and loud.
Tennyson, Maud, xxvi.

multitudinary (mul-ti-tū'di-nā-ri), a. [< L. as if multitudinarius*, < multitudo (-din-), a multitude: see multitude.] Multitudinous; manifold. ★[Rare.]

multitudinous (mul-ti-tū'di-nus), a. [< L. as if multitudinosus*, < multitudo (-din-), a multitude: see multitude.] 1. Consisting of a multitude or great number.

Multitudinous echoes awoke and died in the distance.
Longfellow, Evangeline, ii. 2.

2. Of vast extent or number, or of manifold diversity; vast in number or variety, or in both.

My hand will rather
The multitudinous seas incarnadine, Making the green one red.
Shak., Macbeth, ii. 2. 62.

One might with equal wisdom seek to whistle the vague multitudinous hum of a forest.
E. Gurney, Nineteenth Century, LXXI. 446.

3†. Of or pertaining to the multitude.

At once pluck out
The multitudinous tongue; let them not lick
The sweet which is their poison.
Shak., Cor., iii. 1. 156.

multitudinously (mul-ti-tū'di-nus-li), adv. In a multitudinous manner; in great number or with great variety.

multitudinousness (mul-ti-tū'di-nus-nes), n. The character or state of being multitudinous.

Its [nature's] multitudinousness is commanded by a senate of powers. J. Martineau, Materialism, p. 151.

multivagant† (mul-tiv'a-gant), a. [< L. multus, much, + vagan(t-)s, ppr. of vagari, wander: see vagrant.] Same as multivagous.

multivagous† (mul-tiv'a-gus), a. [< L. multivagus, that wanders about much, < multus, much, + vagus, wandering, strolling: see vague.] Wandering much. Bailey.

multivalve (mul'ti-valv), a. and n. [= F. multivalve, < L. multus, many, + valva, door: see valve.] I. a. Having many valves. Formerly specifically applied—(a) among mollusks, to the coat-of-mail shells, chitons or Chitonidæ; and (b) among crustaceans, to the acorn-shells or cirripeds of the family Balanidæ or Lepadidæ, once supposed to be mollusks. Also multivalvular.

II. n. A multivalve animal shell.

Multivalvia (mul-ti-val'vi-ą), n. pl. [NL., < L. multus, many, + valva, door: see multivalve.] In Linnæus's system of classification, a division of his Testacea, including his genera Chiton and Lepas.

multivalvular (mul-ti-val'vū-lär), a. Same as multivalve.

multiversant (mul-ti-vėr'sant), a. [< L. multus, many, + versan(t-)s, ppr. of versare, turn about, intens. of vertere, turn: see verse. Cf. conversant.] Turning into many shapes; assuming many forms; protean.

multivious (mul-tiv'i-us), a. [< L. multivius, having many ways, < multus, many, + via, way.] Having many ways or roads. [Rare.]

multivocal (mul-tiv'ō-kal), a. and n. [< L. multus, much, many, + vox (voc-), voice: see vocal.] I. a. Ambiguous; equivocal.

An ambiguous or multivocal word. Coleridge.

II. n. A word or an expression that is equivocal, or susceptible of several meanings.

Multivocals, as conducing to brevity and expressiveness, are unwisely condemned, or deprecated.
F. Hall, Mod. Eng., p. 170.

multivoltine (mul-ti-vol′tin), a. [< L. multus, many, + It. volta, a turn, winding: see volt[1].] Having several (at least more than two) annual broods; generated oftener than twice a year: said of silkworm-moths and their larvæ.

Some [races of silkworms] are multivoltine.
Encyc. Brit., XXII. 58.

multivorous (mul-tiv′ō-rus), a. [< L. multus, much, + vorare, devour.] Voracious.

multocular (mul-tok′ū-lär), a. [< L. multus, many, + oculus, eye: see ocular.] Having more than two eyes; having two eyes each of many facets or ocelli, as a fly.

Flies . . . are multocular, having as many eyes as there are perforations in their cornea.
Derham, Physico-Theology, viii. 3, note k.

multum (mul′tum), n. [< L. multum, neut. of multus, much: see multitude.] In brewing, a compound consisting of an extract of quassia and licorice, used as an adulterant.

multum in parvo (mul′tum in pär′vō). [L.: multum, neut. of multus, much; in, in; parvo, abl. of parvus, small.] Much in small compass.

Multungula† (mul-tung′gū-lä), n. pl. [NL. (Blumenbach), < L. multus, many, + ungula, hoof.] The seventh order of mammals, containing hoofed quadrupeds with more than two hoofs, as the hog, tapir, rhinoceros, and elephant: later called Multungulata.

Multungulata (mul-tung-gū-lā′tä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of multungulatus: see multungulate.] An order of Mammalia comprising ungulate quadrupeds which have more than two functional hoofs. It is approximately equivalent to the Pachydermata of Cuvier and to the suborder Perissodactyla of modern naturalists, but agrees exactly with no natural division. Illiger in 1811 divided it into 6 families: Lamnunguia (hyrax), Proboscidæ (elephants), Nasicornia (rhinoceroses), Obesa (hippopotamuses), Nasuta (tapirs), and Setigera (swine). Earlier Multungula. Compare Solidungula.

multungulate (mul-tung′gū-lāt), a. and n. [< NL. multungulatus, many-hoofed, < L. multus, many, + ungula, a hoof: see ungulate.] I. a. Having more than two functional hoofs; specifically, of or pertaining to the Multungulata.

II. n. A multungulate mammal.

multure (mul′tūr), n. [Early mod. E. also moulture, mouter, mowter; < ME. multure, multer, < OF. multure, moulture, molture, F. mouture = Pr. moldura, moltura, moudura, a grinding, toll for grinding, < L. molitura, a grinding, < molere, pp. molitus, grind: see mill[1].] 1. The act of grinding grain in a mill.—2. The quantity of grain ground at one time; a grist.—3. In Scots law, the toll or fee given, generally in kind, to the proprietor of a mill in return for the grinding of corn.

Out of one sack he would take two moultures or fees for grinding. Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, i. 11. (Davies.)

It is always best to be sure, as I say when I chance to take multure twice from the same meal-sack.
Scott, Monastery.

multurer (mul′tūr-ėr), n. [< multure + -er[1].] A person who has grain ground at a certain mill. Multurers are or were of two kinds—first, such as were thirled (thralled) to a certain mill by the conditions on which they occupied their land; and, second, those who used the mill without being bound by the tenure to do so. The former were termed insucken multurers, the latter outsucken multurers. [Scotch.]

mum[1] (mum), a. [< ME. mum, mom, used interjectionally, expressing a low murmuring sound made with the lips closed, used at once to attract attention and to command silence; an imitative syllable, the basis of the verbs mumble, mump[1], mum[2], and their numerous cognates; cf. L. mu, Gr. μῦ, a mere murmured syllable; also murmur, and similar ult. imitative words.] Silent.

Shall we see sacrifice and God's service done to an inanimate creature, and be mum?
J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 231.

The citizens are mum, and speak not a word.
Shak., Rich. III., iii. 7. 3.

mum[1] (mum), v. i.; pret. and pp. mummed, ppr. mumming. [< ME. mummen = D. mommem = G. mummem, mumble, mutter; imitative of the sound: see mum[1], a. Cf. mumble, mump[1].] To be silent; keep silence.

Better mumme than meddle ouermuch.
Gascoigne, Steele Glas (ed. Arber), Epil., p. 83.

[The imperative is often used as an interjection.

Mum then, and no more. Shak., Tempest, iii. 2. 59.

But to his speach he aunswered no whit, . . .
As one with griefe and anguishe overcum,
And unto every thing did aunswere mum.
Spenser, F. Q., IV. vii. 44.

I know what has past between you; but, mum.
Goldsmith, She Stoops to Conquer, v.]

mum[2] (mum), v. i.; pret. and pp. mummed, ppr. mumming. [Also mumm; < ME. mommen*, < OF. momer, < MD. mommen, D. mommen (= G. mummen), mask, play the mummer, < MD. momme, D. mom = G. mumme, a mask; cf. G. mummel, a hobgoblin, bugbear; supposed to have been used orig., in connection with the syllable mum, by nurses to frighten or amuse children, at the same time pretending to cover their faces: see mum[1].] To mask; sport or make diversion in a mask: as, to go a-mumming.

Disguised all are coming,
Right wantonly a-mumming.
Quoted in Chambers's Book of Days, II. 739.

mum[3]† (mum), n. [= D. mom = Dan. mumme, < G. mumme, a kind of beer, said to be so named from Christian Mumme, who first brewed it, in 1492.] A strong ale popular in the seventeenth century and in use down to a later time. It seems to have been made from wheat-malt, with a certain amount of oat-malt, and flavored with various herbs, with sometimes the addition of eggs.

An honest Yorkshire gentleman . . . used to invite his acquaintance at Paris to break their fast with him upon cold roast beef and mum. Steele, Guardian, No. 34.

A sort of beverage called mum, a species of fat ale, brewed from wheat and bitter herbs, of which the present generation only know the name by its occurrence in revenue acts of Parliament, coupled with cider, perry, and other exciseable commodities. Scott, Antiquary, xi.

mum[4] (mum or m'm), n. A dialectal variant of ma'am for madam.

mumble (mum′bl), v.; pret. and pp. mumbled, ppr. mumbling. He . . . did homage to the miserable Mumbo-Jumbo they paraded. Dickens, Little Dorrit, i. 18.

mum-budget† (mum′buj″et), interj. [< mum[1] + budget*, put for budge, used like mum to command silence.] An exclamation enjoining silence and secrecy. [In the first quotation it is resolved into its component parts, and used as a kind of masonic sign.]

I come to her in white and cry mum; she cries budget; and by that we know one another.
Shak., M. W. of W., v. 2. 6.

Avoir le vec gelé, to play mumbudget, to be tongue-tyed, to say never a word. Cotgrave.

"Nor did I ever wince or grudge it For thy dear sake." Quoth she, "Mum budget."
S. Butler, Hudibras, I. iii. 208.

mumchance† (mum′chāns), n. and a. [= G. mummenschanz; as mum[1] + chance.] I. n. 1. A game of hazard with cards or dice in which silence was absolutely necessary.

In comes the setter with his cards, and asketh at what game they shal play. Why, saith the verser, at a new game called mum-chance, that hath no policie nor knaverie, but plain as a pike staf: you shal shuffle and ile cut; you shal cal a carde, and this honest man, a stranger almost to us both, shal cal another for me, and which of our cards comes first shal win. Greene, Conny-Catching (1591).

But leaving cardes, lett's go to dice awhile,
To passage, treitrippe, hazarde, or mum-chance.
Machiavell's Dogg (1617), sig. B. (Nares.)

2. One who has not a word to say for himself; a fool.

mummy[1] (mum'i), n.; pl. mummies (-iz). [Formerly also mummie, mummee; in late ME. momyn, momyan (def. 2); = D. G. Sw. Dan. mumie, ‹ OF. mumie, F. momie = Sp. Pg. momia = It. mummia, ‹ ML. mumia, momia, mummia = NGr. μούμια = Turk. mumiyā = Pers. mūmiyāī (› Hind. momiyāī), a mummy (Hind. also a medicine), ‹ Ar. mūmiyā, pl. mowāmi, an embalmed body, a mummy, ‹ mūm (› Pers. mūm, › Hind. mom), wax (used in embalming); cf. Coptic mum, bitumen, gum-resin.] 1. A dead human body embalmed and dried after the manner of the ancient Egyptian preparation for burial. An immense number of mummies are found in Egypt, consisting not only of human bodies, but of those of various animals, as bulls, apes, ibises, crocodiles, fish, etc. The processes of embalming bodies were very various. The bodies of the poorer classes were merely dried with salt or natron, and wrapped up in coarse cloths. Those of the rich and the great underwent the most complicated operations, and were laboriously adorned with various ornaments. The embalmers extracted the brain through the nostrils, and the entrails through an incision in the side. The body was then shaved and washed, the belly filled with perfumes, and the whole body covered with natron, and steeped in the same material for seventy days. After this the corpse was washed, treated with balsam or other antiseptics, and then wrapped up in linen bandages, sometimes to the number of twenty thicknesses. The body was then put into an ornamented case of wood or cartonnage. Sometimes the cases were double. The term mummy is likewise used of human bodies preserved in other ways, either by artificial preparation or by accident. The Guanches, or ancient people of the Canaries, embalmed their dead in a simple but effectual manner. In some situations the conditions of the soil and atmosphere, by the rapidity with which they permit the drying of the animal tissues, are alone sufficient for the preservation of the body with the general characteristics of a mummy. This is the case in some parts of South America, especially at Arica (formerly in Peru), where considerable numbers of bodies have been found quite dry, in pits dug in a dry saline soil. In some places natural mummies are occasionally found in caverns or in crypts, as in a well-known church-crypt in Bordeaux, France. Natural mummies of various animals are often found in such state of preservation as to allow of scientific description of many of their parts.

Head of Mummy of Seti I., father of Rameses II.

An imposture perhaps contrived by the Water-men, who, fetching them [the arms and legs] from the Mummes, . . . do stick them over-night in the sand.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 99.

2†. The substance of a mummy; a medicinal preparation supposed to consist of the substance of mummies or of dead bodies; hence, a medicinal liquor or gum in general. Also mummia. See first quotation under mummia.

Mummy hath great force in stanching blood, which may be ascribed to the mixture of balms that are glutinous.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 980.

'Tis true; there's magic in the web of it: . . .
And it was dyed in mummy which the skilful Conserved of maidens' hearts.
Shak., Othello, iii. 4. 74.

Make mummy of my flesh, and sell me to the apothecaries. Shirley, Bird in a Cage, i. 1.

In or near this place is a precious liquor or mummy growing; . . . a moist, redolent gum it is, sovereign against poisons. Sir T. Herbert, Travels in Africa, p. 124.

Mummy is said to have been first brought into use in medicine by the malice of a Jewish physician, who wrote that flesh thus embalmed was good for the cure of divers diseases, and particularly bruises, to prevent the blood's gathering and coagulating. Chambers's Cyc., 1738.

3. In hort., a kind of wax used in grafting and budding trees.—4. A brown color prepared from the asphalt taken from Egyptian mummies, and used as an oil-color by artists. It resembles asphaltum in its general qualities, and has the advantage of being less liable to crack. It was supposed that the asphalt taken from the Egyptian mummies made the finest color. Ure, Dict., III. 361.—To beat to a mummy, to beat soundly, or till insensible.

Nashe, Lenten Stuffe (Harl. Misc., VI. 168). (Davies.)

2. A contagious non-suppurative inflammation of the parotid and sometimes of the other salivary glands and of the circumglandular connective tissue; idiopathic parotitis. Mumps is usually an innocent affection without dangers or sequelæ. It begins with pain and then swelling behind the jaw, close to the ear, on one side. The pain at first is caused by motion of the jaw or the presence of acids. The other side is involved a day or two later. There may be inflammation of the testes and scrotum in males, or of the mammæ, ovaries, and vulva in females; this extension is, however, mostly confined to pubescence and adult life. One attack usually protects. The period of incubation is thought to be from 7 to 14 days.

3†. A drinking game.

Now, he is nobody that cannot drinke super nagulum, carouse the hunter's hoop, quaffe upsey freze crosse, with leapes gloves, mumpes, frolickes, and a thousand such domineering inventions. Nashe, Pierce Penilesse.

mumpsimus (mump'si-mus), n. [A term originating in the story of an ignorant priest who in saying his mass had long said mumpsimus for sumpsimus, and who, when his error was pointed out, replied, "I am not going to change my old mumpsimus for your new sumpsimus." The story evidently refers to the post-communion prayer "Quod in ore sumpsimus," etc.] An error obstinately clung to; a prejudice.

Some be to stiffe in their old mumpsimus, others be to busy and curious in their newe sumpsimus.
Hall, Hen. VIII., f. 261. (Halliwell.)

Mere chance of circumstances is their infallible determinator of the true and the false, and, somehow, it cannot but be that their old mumpsimus is preferable to any new sumpsimus. F. Hall, Mod. Eng., p. 137.

mun[1] (mun), n. [< ME. mun, prob. < Sw. mun = Dan. mund = G. mund = D. mond = E. mouth: see mouth.] The mouth.

Disperse this plague-distilling cloud, and clear
My mungy soul into a glorious day.
Quarles, Emblems, v 5.

Munia (mū'ni-ä), n. [NL. (Hodgson, 1836), from an E. Ind. name.] An extensive genus of ploceine birds of India and islands eastward, as M. maja or M. malacca, in which genus the paddy-bird is placed by some authors. See Padda.

municipal (mū-nis'i-pal), a. [< F. municipal = Sp. Pg. municipal = It. municipale, < L. municipalis, of or belonging to a citizen or a free town, < municeps (municip-), a citizen, an inhabitant of a free town (> municipium, a free town, having the right of a Roman citizenship, but governed by its own laws), < munus, duty (see munerate), + capere, take: see capable.] 1. Of or pertaining to the local self-government or corporate government of a city or town.

When the time comes for the ancient towns of England to reveal the treasures of their municipal records, much light must be thrown upon the election proceedings of the middle ages. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 422.

2. Self-governing, as a free city.

There are two distinct and opposite systems of administration, the municipal or self-governing, and the centralizing or bureaucratic.
W. R. Greg, Misc. Essays, 2d ser., p. 48.

3. Pertaining to the internal affairs of a state, kingdom, or nation, and its citizens: as, municipal law (which see, below).—Municipal borough. See borough[1], 2 (a).—Municipal corporation, court, judge, etc. See the nouns.—Municipal law, a rule of civil conduct, prescribed by the civil power in a state, respecting the intercourse of the state with its members and of its members with each other, as distinguished from international law, the law of nations, etc. In this phrase, derived from the Roman law, the word municipal has no specific reference to modern municipalities.

The municipal laws of this kingdom . . . are of a vast extent, and . . . include in their generality all those several laws which are allowed as the rule and direction of justice and judicial proceedings.
Sir M. Hale, Hist. Com. Law of Eng.

I call it municipal law, in compliance with common speech; for, though strictly that expression denotes the particular customs of one single municipium or free town, yet it may with sufficient propriety be applied to any one state or nation which is governed by the same laws and customs. Blackstone, Com., Int., § 2.

The term municipal [for local or provincial law] seemed to answer the purpose very well till it was taken by an English author of the first eminence to signify internal law in general, in contradistinction to international law, and the imaginary law of nature. It might still be used in this sense, without scruple, in any other language.
★ Bentham, Introd. to Morals and Legislation, xvii. 26, note.

municipalisation, n. See municipalization.

municipalism (mū-nis'i-pal-izm), n. [= F. municipalisme; as municipal + -ism.] Systematic municipal government; the tendency to or policy of government by municipalities.

municipality (mū-nis-i-pal'i-ti), n.; pl. municipalities (-tiz). [= F. municipalité = Sp. municipalidad = Pg. municipalidade = It. municipalità; as municipal + -ity.] A town or city possessed of corporate privileges of local self-government; a community under municipal jurisdiction.

We have not relegated religion (like something we were ashamed to shew) to obscure municipalities or rustick villages. Burke, Rev. in France.

London claims the first place . . . as the greatest municipality, as the model on which . . . the other large towns of the country were allowed or charged to adjust their usages. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 486.

municipalization (mū-nis″i-pal-i-zā'shon), n. [< municipal + -ize + -ation.] The act or process of converting (a community) into a municipality, of bringing it under municipal control, or of providing for it the privileges of local self-government. Also spelled municipalisation.

The proposal seems to aim at the municipalisation of land, by placing the local authority in the position of ultimate landlord. Nineteenth Century, XVIII. 525.

Such is the present position of affairs in Paris, and it certainly points in the direction of the municipalisation of the bread trade. Lancet, No. 3465, p. 209.

municipally (mū-nis'i-pal-i), adv. In a municipal manner; as regards municipal rule.

municipium (mū-ni-sip'i-um), n.; pl. municipia (-ä). [L.: see municipal.] In ancient times, an Italian town with local rights of self-government and some of the privileges of Roman citizenship; later, a town-government similarly constituted, wherever situated.

A colony was brought to it [the ancient Carnuntum]; it was made a municipium; and the emperor Aurelius spent much of his time in this city.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. ii. 241.

Homicide with malice aforethought; as legally defined, the unlawful killing of a human being, by a person of sound mind, by an act causing death within a year and a day thereafter, with premeditated malice.

What form of prayer
Can serve my turn? Forgive me my foul murder?
That cannot be; since I am still possess'd
Of those effects for which I did the murder,
My crown, mine own ambition, and my queen.
Shak., Hamlet, iii. 3. 52.

The name of murder (as a crime) was anciently applied only to the secret killing of another; . . . and it was defined, homicidium quod nullo vidente, nullo sciente, clam perpetratur. Blackstone, Com., IV. xiv.

2†. Slaughter; destruction.—Agrarian murder. See agrarian.—Murder will out, the crime of murder is not to be hid; something is or will be disclosed which was meant to be kept concealed.—Statute of murders, an English statute of 1512 for the punishment of murder.

murder (mėr′dėr), v. t. [Also and more orig. murther; < ME. murdren, mordren, murtheren, morthren, < AS. myrthrian, in comp. for-myrthrian, of-myrthrian; cf. For the epenthetic n, cf. messenger, passenger, porringer, etc.] An officer appointed to superintend the keeping of the town walls in repair and to receive a certain toll (murage) for that purpose.

A nominal appointment to the office of Murenger still takes place annually [at Oswestry], though the active duties of the office have long ceased.
Municip. Corp. Report, 1835, p. 2827.

The charter of Henry VII. provides that the mayor and citizens [of Chester] "may yearly choose from among the citizens of the aforesaid city two citizens to be overseers of the walls of the aforesaid city, called Muragers, . . . and that they shall yearly overlook and repair the walls of the aforesaid city." Municip. Corp. Report, 1835, p. 2622.

Mures (mū'rēz), n. pl. [NL., pl. of L. mus (mur-), mouse: see Mus, mouse.] The Old World Murinæ as distinguished from the American Sigmodontes by having the molar cusps in series of threes across the teeth. There are many genera. The group is only a section of a subfamily of Muridæ.

murex (mū'reks), n. [NL., < L. murex, the purple-fish.] 1. [cap.] The typical genus of Muricidæ. The aperture of the shell is rounded, the canal is long and straight, and the outer surface of the shell is interrupted by numerous varices or spines, at least three to a whorl. The most remarkable forms of these shells are from tropical seas. The animals are highly rapacious, and some of them do great damage to oyster-beds, as the European M. erinaceus. The celebrated purple dye of the ancients was chiefly furnished by the animals of two species of the genus Murex, M. trunculus and M. brandaris, the dye being secreted by a special gland, called the "purpurigenous gland," of the animal. The amount secreted being very small, the number of animals sacrificed to secure it was correspondingly large, and the cost therefore great. Hence its use was confined to the wealthy, or reserved for sacred or regal purposes. Its manufacture seems to have expired after the capture of Constantinople by the Turks.

Murex tenuispina.

2. A species of this genus.—3. Pl. murexes or murices (-rek-sez, -ri-sēz). A caltrop.

murexan (mū'rek-san), n. [< L. murex + -an.] Aminobarbituric acid ($C_4H_3N_2O_3.NH_2$). It is a product of the decomposition of murexide. Same as uramil.

murexide (mū'rek-sid or -sīd), n. [< L. murex, the purple-fish, + -ide[2].] The ammonium purpurate of Prout (probably $C_8H_8N_6O_6$). It crystallizes in four-sided prisms, two faces of which reflect a green metallic luster. The crystals are transparent, and by transmitted light are of a garnet-red color. It forms a brownish-red powder, and is soluble in caustic potash, the solution having a beautiful purple color. In 1855 and 1856 this substance was largely used as a dye for producing pinks, purples, and reds, but the introduction of aniline colors put an end to its use.

murgeon (mėr'jọn), n. [Formerly morgeoun; cf. F. morgue, a wry face, morguer, make a wry face: see morgue[1].] 1. A wry mouth; a grimace; also, a grotesque posturing.

Prelacy is like the great golden image in the plain of Dura, and . . . as Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego were borne out in refusing to bow down and worship, so neither shall Cuddy Headrigg . . . make murgeons, or jennyflections, as they ca' them, in the house of the prelates and curates. Scott, Old Mortality, vii.

2. A murmur; a muttering or grumbling.

muriacite (mū'ri-a-sīt), n. [< F. muriacite; < L. muria, brine, + -c- + -ite[2]. Cf. muriatic.] Native anhydrous calcium sulphate, or anhydrite. See anhydrite.

muriate (mū'ri-āt), n. [= F. muriate = Sp. Pg. It. muriato, < NL. muriatum, < L. muria, brine.] Same as chlorid[1].—Muriate of ammonia. Same as sal ammoniac (which see, under ammoniac).—★Muriate of copper. Same as atacamite.

muriate (mū'ri-āt), v. t.; pret. and pp. muriated, ppr. muriating. [< L. muria, brine, + -ate[2].] To put into brine.

Early fruits of some plants, when muriated or pickled, are justly esteemed. Evelyn, Acetaria, § 12.

muriatic (mū-ri-at'ik), a. [= F. muriatique = Sp. muriático = Pg. It. muriatico, < L. muriaticus, pickled, < muria, brine: see muriate.] Having the nature of brine or salt water; pertaining to or obtained from brine or sea-salt.—Muriatic acid, the commercial name of hydrochloric acid. See hydrochloric.

muriatiferous (mū″ri-a-tif'e-rus), a. [< muriate + L. ferre = E. bear[1].] Producing muriatic substances or salt.

muricate (mū'ri-kāt), a. [< L. muricatus, pointed, < murex (muric-), a pointed rock, a spire.] Formed with sharp points; full of sharp spines or prickles. Specifically—(a) In bot., rough with short and firm excrescences: distinguished from echinate, or spiny, by having the elevations more scattered, lower, and less acute. (b) In entom., armed with thick, sharp, but not close-set pointed elevations.

Muricate Nutlet of Cryptanthe muriculata.

muricated (mū'ri-kā-ted), a. Same as muricate.

muricatohispid (mū-ri-kā-tō-his'pid), a. [< L. muricatus, pointed (see muricate), + hispidus, hispid.] In bot., covered with short, sharp points and rigid hairs or bristles.

Muricea (mū-ris'ē-ą), n. pl. [NL., < Murex (Muric-) + -ea.] Same as Muricidæ.

murices, n. Latin plural of murex.

Muricidæ (mū-ris'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Murex (Muric-) + -idæ.] A large family of marine gastropodous mollusks, typified by the genus Murex, to which different limits have been assigned. Within even its most restricted extent, the family includes very diversiform shells. The animal has a broad foot of moderate length, a long siphon, eyes at the external base of the tentacles, a large purpurigenous gland and teeth of the radula triserial, the median broad and generally prismatic and tridentate and with smaller accessory denticles, the lateral acutely unicuspid and versatile. The shell has the anterior canal straight, the columellar lip smooth and reflected. The operculum is corneous, and with a subapical or lateral nucleus. The typical species have varices in varying number, but generally three to a whorl. The shells are numerous in tropical seas, and some aberrant members of the family inhabit cold waters of both hemispheres. The family is generally subdivided into two subfamilies, Muricinæ and Purpurinæ. Also Muricea. See cut under Murex.

muriciform (mū-ris'i-fôrm), a. [< L. murex (muric-), the purple-fish, + forma, form.] Resembling a murex or one of the Muricidæ in form.

muricine (mū'ri-sin), a. [< L. murex (muric-), the purple-fish, + -ine[1].] Of or pertaining to the Muricidæ; like a murex.

muricite† (mū'ri-sīt), n. [< Murex (Muric-) + -ite[2].] A fossil murex, or a fossil shell resembling that of a murex.

muricoid (mū'ri-koid), a. [< L. murex (muric-), the purple-fish, + Gr. εἶδος, form.] Muriciform; resembling a murex.—Muricoid operculum, an operculum having a subapical nucleus.

muriculate (mū-rik'ụ-lāt), a. [< NL. muriculatus*, dim. of L. muricatus, pointed: see muricate.] In bot., minutely muricate.

Muridæ (mū'ri-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Mus (Mur-) + -idæ.] A family of quadrupeds of the order Rodentia or Glires, typified by the genus Mus. It is by far the largest family of rodents, and is of world-wide distribution. They have 2 incisors and 3 molars above and below on each side (with some rare exceptions). The molars are rooted or rootless, and either tuberculate or flat-topped and with angular enamel-folds. The external characters are very variable, but the pollex is always reduced or rudimentary, and the tail is generally long and scaly. There are many genera, which are grouped in 10 subfamilies—Sminthinæ, Hydromyinæ, Platacanthomyinæ, Gerbillinæ, Phlœomyinæ, Dendromyinæ, Cricetinæ, Murinæ, Microtinæ, and Siphneinæ. See cuts under Arvicola, hamster, lemming, beaver-rat, mouse, muskrat, Nesokia.

Cranial Characters of a Leading Type of Muridæ.

Round his swoln heart the murmurous fury rolls.
Pope, Odyssey, xx. 19.

3. Expressing itself in murmurs.

The murmurous woe of kindreds, tongues, and peoples Swept in on every gale.
Whittier, In Remembrance of Joseph Sturge.

murmurously (mėr'mėr-us-li), adv. With a low monotonous sound; with murmurs.

murnival† (mėr'ni-val), n. [Also mournival, mournifal; < OF. mornifle, "a trick at cards, also a cuff or pash on the lips" (Cotgrave), still used in the latter sense; origin unknown.] 1. In the card-game of gleek, four cards of a sort.

A murnival is either all the aces, the four kings, queens, or knaves, and a gleek is three of any of the aforesaid.
Compleat Gamester (1680), p. 68. (Nares.)

2. Hence, any set of four; four.

Cen. Let a protest go out against him.
Mirth. A mournival of protests, or a gleek at least.
B. Jonson, Staple of News, iv. 1.

murphy (mėr'fi), n.; pl. murphies (-fiz). [So called from the Irish surname Murphy; appar. in allusion to the fact that the potato is the staple article of food among the Irish—it is called the "Irish potato" in distinction from the sweet potato.] A potato. [Colloq.]

You come along down to Sally Harrowell's; that's our school-house tuck-shop—she bakes such stunning murphies, we'll have a penn'orth each for tea.
T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, i. 6.

murr[2] (mėr), v. i. [Imitative; cf. purr.] To purr as a cat. Hogg. [Scotch.]

murra (mur'ą), n. [L., less prop. murrha, myrrha; in Gr. μορρία or μόρρια, also μορρίνη, a material first brought to Rome by Pompey, 61 B. C.; appar. the name, like the thing, was of Asiatic origin.] In Rom. antiq., an ornamental stone of which vases, cups, and other ornamental articles were made. This material and the various things made from it are mentioned by several Greek and Latin authors, but Pliny is the only one who has attempted any detailed description of it. Unfortunately his accounts are so vague that the material cannot be positively identified, nor has anything been found in the excavations at Rome which is certainly known to be the ancient murra. In the opinion of the best authorities, however, it was fluor-spar, for of the known materials this is the only one found in abundance which has the peculiar coloration indicated by Pliny. The principal objection to this theory is that no fragments of fluor-spar vases have been found in Rome or its vicinity. Vessels of murra were at one time considered by the Romans as of inestimable value.

murrain (mur'ān), n. and a. [Formerly also murren; < ME. murrin, morrein, < ME. moreyne, moryn, < OF. morine = Sp. morriña = Pg. morrinha = It. moria, sickness among cattle, < L. mori, die: see mort[1].] I. n. A disease affecting domestic animals, especially cattle; a cattle-plague or epizoötic disease of any kind; in a more limited sense, the same as foot-and-mouth disease (which see, under foot).

For til moreyne mete with ous ich may hit wel a-vowe, Ne wot no wight, as ich wene what is ynowh to mene.
Piers Plowman (C), xxi. 226.

This plague of murrein continued twenty-eight yeare ere it ended, and was the first rot that euer was in England.
Stow, Edw. I., an. 1257.

Murrain take you, a murrain to or on you, etc., plague take you; plague upon you.

A murrain on your monster! Shak., Tempest, iii. 2. 88.

II. a. Affected with murrain.

The fold stands empty in the drowned field,
And crows are fatted with the murrion flock.
Shak., M. N. D., ii. 1. 97.

murumuru-palm (mö-rö'mö-rö-päm), n. A palm, Astrocaryum Murumuru.

muruxi-bark (mö-ruk'si-bärk), n. The astringent bark of Byrsonima spicata, of the West Indies and South America, used in Brazil for tanning.

muryet, a. An obsolete form of merry[1].

Mus (mus), n. [NL., < L. mūs = Gr. μῦς = E. mouse.] The leading genus of Muridæ, typical of the subfamily Murinæ. The term was formerly used with great latitude for the whole family and various other rodents. It is now restricted to species like the common house-mouse, Mus musculus; the common rat, M. decumanus; the black rat, M. rattus; M. sylvaticus, the wood-mouse of Europe; and M. minutus, the harvest-mouse of the same continent. It still includes a great many species of mice and rats, all indigenous to the Old World. Also Musculus. See cut under harvest-mouse.

Musa (mū'zä), n. [NL. (Plumier, 1703), prob. < Ar. mūze, banana.] A genus of monocotyledonous plants, type of the family Musaceæ and the tribe Museæ, known by its tubular calyx. There are about 32 species, natives of the tropics. They are herbs with thick smooth tree-like stems formed of sheathing petioles, rising 5 to 30 feet high from solid watery bulbs, with large oblong leaves from 3 to 20 feet long, and yellowish flowers in the axils of large ornamental bracts (often purplish), the whole forming a long nodding spike. M. sapientum is the banana. M. paradisiaca is the plantain. M. textilis is the Manila hemp, and M. Cavendishii is the Chinese banana. The finest ornamental species is M. Ensete, the Abyssinian banana. See cuts under banana and plantain[2].

Musaceæ (mū-zā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (St. Hilaire, 1805), < Musa + -aceæ.] A family of monocotyledonous plants, typified by the genus Musa; the banana or plantain family. It embraces 5 other genera.

musaceous (mū-zā'shius), a. [< Musaceæ + -ous.] In bot., of or relating to the Musaceæ.

musæographist, musæography, etc. See museographist, etc.

musaick†, a. and n. An obsolete form of mosaic[1].

musal (mū'zal), a. [= Pg. musal; as Muse[2] + -al.] Relating to the Muses or poetry; poetical. [Rare.]

musalchee, n. See mussalchee.

Musalman (mus'al-man), n. and a. Same as Mussulman.

musang (mū-sang'), n. [Malay mūsang.] A viverroid mammal of the genus Paradoxurus, P. hermaphroditus (also called P. musanga, P. typus, and P. fasciatus), occurring throughout the countries east of the Bay of Bengal—Burma, Siam, the Malay peninsula, Sumatra, Java, and Borneo. It has the back generally striped, a pale band crosses the forehead, and the whiskers are black. The name extends to any paradoxure, and to some similar animals. The golden musang is P. aureus; the hill-musang is P. grayi; the three-striped white-eared musang is Arctogale leucotis. See paradoxure.

Musang (Paradoxurus fasciatus).

musart† (mū'zärt), n. [Cf. musette.] An itinerant musician who played on the musette; a bagpiper. Webster.

Musarabic (mū-zar'a-bik), a. A variant of Mozarabic.

musard (mū'zärd), n. [< ME. musard, < OF. (and F.) musard (= It. musardo), < muser, muse: see muse[1].] 1†. A muser or dreamer; a vagabond.

> Alle men wole holde thee for musarde,
> That debonair have founden thee.
> Rom. of the Rose, l. 4034.

> We ne do but as musardes, and ne a-wayte nought elles but whan we shall be take as a bridde in a nette, for the Saisnes be but a iourne hens, that all the contre robbe and distroye. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 183.

2. A foolish fellow. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

Mus. B. An abbreviation of Bachelor of Music.

Musca (mus'kä), n. [L., = Gr. μυία, a fly: see midge. Hence ult. mosquito.] 1. A genus of flies, or two-winged insects, founded by Linnæus in 1763. Formerly applied to Diptera at large, and to sundry other insects, as many of the Hymenoptera; now the type of the family Muscidæ, and restricted to such species as the common house-fly, M. domestica. As at present restricted, Musca is characterized by having the antennal bristle thickly feathered on both sides, the fourth longitudinal vein of the wings bent at an angle toward the third, and middle tibiæ without any strong bristles or spurs on the inner side. In this sense it is not a very large genus, having but 14 species in Europe and 6 in North America, two of the latter, M. domestica and M. corvina, being common to both continents. See cut under house-fly.

2. [l. c.] A fly or some similar insect. [In this sense there is a plural, muscæ (-sē).]—3. The Fly, a name given to the constellation also called Apis, the Bee. It is situated south of the Southern Cross, and east of the Chameleon, and contains one star of the third and three of the fourth magnitude. The name was also formerly given to a constellation situated north of Aries.—Muscæ tripiles, an old name of the ichneumon-flies: so called from the three threads of the ovipositor.—Muscæ vibrantes, an old name of the ichneumon-flies: so called because they continually wave their antennæ.—Muscæ volitantes, specks appearing to dance in the air before the eyes, supposed to be due to opaque points in the vitreous humor of the eye.

muscadel (mus'ka-del), n. [Also muscatel; early mod. E. muskadell; < OF. muscadel, also muscadet, F. muscadet = Sp. Pg moscatel = It. moscadello, moscatello, < ML. muscatellum, also, after Rom., muscadellum, a wine so called, dim. of muscatum, the odor of musk (> It. moscato, musk, etc., > F. muscat, a grape, wine, pear so called): see muscat. Cf. muscadine.] 1. A sweet wine: same as muscat, 2.

> He calls for wine, . . . quaff'd off the muscadel,
> And threw the sops all in the sexton's face.
> Shak., T. of the S., iii. 2. 174.

2. The grapes collectively which produce this wine. See Malaga grape, under Malaga.

> In Candia ther growe grett Vynes, and specially of malwesy and muskadell.
> Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 20.

3. A kind of pear.

muscadin (F. pron. müs-ka-daṅ'), n. [F.: see muscadine.] A dandy; a fop.

> Your muscadins of Paris and your dandies of London.
> Disraeli, Coningsby, iv. 15.

muscadine (mus'ka-din), n. and a. [Formerly also muskadine, < F. muscadin, a musk-lozenge, also dandy, beau, < It. moscatino, a grape, pear, apricot so called (Florio), < moscato, musk: see muscat.]

I. n. Same as muscadel.

> He . . . is at this instant breakfasting on new-laid eggs and muscadine. Scott, Kenilworth, i.

II. a. Of the color of muscadel.

> Most decoctions of astringent plants, of what color soever, do leave in the liquor a deep and muscadine red.
> Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., vi. 12.

muscæ, n. Plural of musca, 2.

Muscales (mus-kā'lēz), n. pl. [NL., pl. of muscalis*, of moss, < L. muscus, moss: see moss[1].] In bot., an alliance including the Hepaticæ and Musci: equivalent to the Bryophyta. Lindley.

muscallonge, n. Same as maskalonge.

muscardine[1] (mus'kar-din), n. [< F. muscardine, a fungus so called (cf. muscardin, a dormouse: see muscardine[2]), < It. moscardino, a musk comfit, grape, pear, etc., var. of moscadino, F. muscadin, a musk-lozenge: see muscadine.] 1. A fungus, Botrytis Bassiana, the cause of a very destructive disease in silkworms. —2. The disease produced in silkworms by the muscardine.

muscardine[2] (mus'kar-din), n. [< F. muscardin, a dormouse, prob. for muscadin, a musk-lozenge, with ref. to the animal's odor.] The dormouse, Muscardinus avellanarius.

Muscardinus (mus-kar-dī'nus), n. [NL., < F. muscardin, a dormouse: see muscardine[2].] A genus of dormice of the family Myoxidæ, with a cylindric bushy tail and thickened glandular cardiac portion of the stomach. The common dormouse of Europe, M. avellanarius, is the type. See cut under dormouse.

Muscari (mus-kā'rī), n. [NL. (Philip Miller, 1724), said to be so called "from their musky smell," < LL. muscus, musk: see musk. But the term. -ari is appar. an immediate or ult. error for -arium. The word intended is appar. Muscarium, so called in ref. to their globular heads, < L. muscarium, a fly-brush, also an umbel, < musca, a fly.] A genus of ornamental plants of the family Liliaceæ and tribe Scilleæ, characterized by its globose or urn-shaped flowers. About 40 species are known, natives of Europe, northern Africa, and western Asia. They bear a few narrow fleshy leaves from a coated bulb, and leafless scapes with a raceme of nodding flowers, usually blue. They are closely akin to the true hyacinth. The species in general are called grape- or globe-hyacinth, especially M. botryoides, a common little garden-flower of early spring, with a dense raceme of dark-blue flowers, like a minute grape-cluster. It is now naturalized in the United States. M. moschatum, from its odor, is called musk- (grape-)hyacinth.

Muscaria (mus-kā'ri-ä), n. pl. [NL., < L. musca, a fly: see Musca.] A tribe of brachycerous dipterous insects, containing those flies whose proboscis is usually terminated by a fleshy lobe, as in the house-fly: now equivalent to Muscidæ in the widest sense.

muscarian (mus-kā'ri-an), n. [< NL. Muscaria, q. v., + -an.] Any ordinary fly, as a member of the Muscaria.

muscariform (mus-kar'i-fôrm), a. [< L. muscarium, a fly-brush (< musca, a fly), + forma, form.] Having the shape of a brush; brush-shaped; in bot., furnished with long hairs toward one end of a slender body, as the style and stigma of many composites.

muscarine (mus'ka-rin), n. [< NL. muscarius (see def.) + -ine[2].] An extremely poisonous alkaloid ($C_5H_{15}NO_3$) obtained from the fly-fungus, Agaricus muscarius. It produces myosis, infrequent pulse with prolonged diastole, salivation, vomiting, spasm of the muscles of the intestines, tumultuous peristalsis, great muscular weakness, dyspnœa, and death.

muscat (mus'kat), n. [< F. muscat, a grape, wine, pear so called, < It. moscato, musk, wine, < ML. muscatum, the odor of musk, neut. of muscatus, musky, < LL. muscus, musk: see musk. Hence muscatel, muscadel, muscadine.] 1. A grape having a strong odor or flavor as of musk. There are several varieties of grape, mostly white, which come within this category.

2. Wine made from muscat-grapes, or of similar character to that so made, usually strong and more or less sweet. Also called muscadel.

> He hath also sent each of us some anchovies, olives, and muscatt; but I know not yet what that is, and am ashamed to ask. Pepys, Diary, I. 282.

muscatel (mus'ka-tel), n. Same as muscadel. —Muscatel raisin. See raisin.

muscatorium (mus-ka-tō'ri-um), n. [ML., a fly-brush, < L. musca, a fly.] Eccles., same as flabellum, 1.

muschelkalk (mush'el-kalk), n. [G., < muschel, shell, + kalk, lime or chalk.] One of the divisions of the Triassic system as developed in Germany, occupying a position between the Keuper and Bunter. See Triassic. In both Germany and France it is subdivided into three zones, the upper one of which is a true shelly limestone, as the name indicates, while the other two are also chiefly limestone, but much less fossiliferous than the first. The formation is important on account of the beds of salt and anhydrite which it contains.

muschetor, muschetour (mus'che-tor, -tŏr), n. [< OF. mouscheture, F. moucheture, little spots, < OF. mouscheter, F. moucheter, spot, < OF. mousche, F. mouche, a fly, a spot, < L. musca, a fly: see mouche.] In her., a black spot resembling an ermine spot, but differing from it in the absence of the three specks. See ermine[1], 5.

Muschetors.

Musci (mus'sī), n. pl. [NL., pl. of L. muscus, moss: see moss[1].] A large class of cryptogamous plants of the group or phylum Bryophyta; the mosses. They are low tufted plants, a few inches in height, always with a stem and distinct leaves, producing spore-cases (sporogonia) which usually open by a terminal lid and contain simple spores alone. The germinating spore gives rise in the typical families to a filamentous conferva-like prothallium, upon which is produced the leafy plant, these together constituting the sexual generation or oöphyte. The sexual organs are antheridia and archegonia, and from the fertilized oösphere proceeds the sporogonium or "moss-fruit," which in itself comprises the non-sexual generation or sporophyte. The sporogonium or capsule, which is rarely indehiscent or splitting by four longitudinal slits, usually opens by a lid or operculum; beneath the operculum, and arising from the mouth of the capsule, are commonly one or two rows of rigid processes, collectively the peristome, which are always some multiple of four; those of the outer row are called teeth; those of the inner, cilia. Between the rim of the capsule and the operculum is an elastic ring of cells, the annulus. The Musci are classified under three orders — the Bryales or true mosses (which are further divided into acrocarpous, or terminal-fruited, and pleurocarpous, or lateral-fruited), Andreæales, and Sphagnales. See cut under moss.

Muscicapa (mu-sik'a-pä), n. [NL., < L. musca, fly, + capere, take.] A Linnean genus of flycatchers. It was formerly of great extent and indiscriminate application to numberless small birds which capture insects on the wing, but is now restricted to the most typical Muscicapidæ, such as the blackcap, M. atricapilla, the spotted flycatcher, M. grisola, the white-collared flycatcher, M. collaris, etc. See cut under flycatcher.

Muscicapidæ (mus-i-kap'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Muscicapa + -idæ.] A family of Old World oscine passerine birds, typified by the restricted genus Muscicapa; the flycatchers. They are cichlomorphic turdiform or thrush-like Passeres, normally with 10 primaries, 12 rectrices, scutellate tarsi, and a grypanian bill of a flattened form, broad at the base, with a ridged culmen and long rictal vibrissæ. Their characteristic habit is to capture insects on the wing. None are American, though many American fly-catching birds of the setophagine division of Sylvicolidæ and of the clamatorial family Tyrannidæ have been included in Muscicapidæ. Upward of 60 genera and nearly 400 species are placed in this family in its most restricted sense.

Muscicapinæ (mu-sik-a-pī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Muscicapa + -inæ.] The flycatchers as a subfamily of Muscicapidæ or of some other family.

muscicapine (mu-sik'a-pin), a. Pertaining or in any way relating to the genus Muscicapa.

muscicole (mus'i-kōl), a. [< L. muscus, moss, + colere, inhabit.] In bot., growing upon mosses or Hepaticæ, as certain lichens and fungi.

muscicoline (mu-sik'ō-lin), a. [< muscicole + -ine[1].] Same as muscicole.

muscicolous (mu-sik'ō-lus), a. [< muscicole + -ous.] Same as muscicole.

Muscidæ (mus'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Musca + -idæ.] The representative and by far the largest family of the order Diptera; the flies. The limits and definition of the family vary widely. It is now commonly restricted to forms with short three-jointed antennæ, the third joint of which is setose; the proboscis normally ending in a fleshy lobe and the palpi generally projecting; five abdominal segments; two tarsal pulvilli; and no false vein in the wing. The Muscidæ comprise more than a third of the order Diptera, and are divided into numerous subfamilies, which are regarded as families by some writers. They are primarily divided into Calyptratæ and Acalyptratæ, according as the tegulæ are large or very small.

musciform[2] (mus'i-fôrm), a. [< L. muscus, moss, + forma, form, shape.] In bot., same as muscoid.

Musciformes (mus-i-fôr'mēz), n. pl. [NL., pl. of musciformis: see musciform[1].] A section of musciform Tipulidæ, containing those crane-flies which resemble common flies, having a comparatively stout body and short legs.

Muscinæ (mu-sī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Musca + -inæ.] A subfamily of Muscidæ, exemplified by the genus Musca, in which the antennal bristle is feathered to the tip, and the first posterior cell of the wing is much narrowed or closed.

Muscineæ (mu-sin'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < L. muscus, moss, + -in + -eæ.] A group of higher cryptogams, coördinate in rank with the Pteridophyta and Spermatophyta, and embracing the two classes Musci and Hepaticæ: now called Bryophyta.

Musciphaga† (mu-sif'a-gä), n. [NL., < L. musca, a fly, + Gr. φαγεῖν, eat.] A genus of fly-catchers: same as Dumicola.

Muscisaxicola (mus″i-sak-sik'ō-lä), n. [NL., < Musci(capa) + Saxicola.] A genus of clamatorial flycatchers of the family Tyrannidæ, founded by Lafresnaye in 1837: so called from some resemblance to chats. The species are numerous, all South American. M. rufivertex and M. flavinucha are examples.

muscite (mus'īt), n. [< L. muscus, moss, + -ite[2].] A fossil plant of the moss family, found in amber and certain fresh-water Tertiary strata. Page.

Muscivora (mu-siv'ō-rä), n. [NL., < L. musca, fly, + vorare, devour.] A genus of South American crested flycatchers of the family Tyrannidæ. It was established by Cuvier in 1799–1800, and was afterward called by him Muscipeta, the moucherolles. There are several species, as M. cristata and M. coronata. The term has also been variously applied to other birds of the same family, as by G. R. Gray in 1840 to species of Milvulus, and by Lesson to certain fly-catching birds of a different family.

★muscle[1] (mus'l), n. [Early mod. E. also muskle; < F. muscle = Pr. muscle, moscle = Sp. músculo = Pg. musculo = It. muscolo = D. G. Sw. Dan. muskel, a muscle, < L. musculus, a muscle, a little mouse, dim. of mus, a mouse, = Gr. μῦς, a mouse, also a muscle, = G. maus, a mouse, a muscle; cf. F. souris, a mouse, formerly the brawn of the arm, Corn. logoden fer, calf of the leg, lit. mouse of leg: the more prominent muscles, as the biceps, having, when in motion, some resemblance to a mouse: see mouse. Hence muscle[2], mussel. The pron. mus'l instead of mus'kl is prob. due to the ult. identical muscle[2], mussel, where, however, the pron. of c in -cle as 'soft' is irregular, though occurring also in corpuscle.] 1. A kind of animal tissue consisting of bundles of fibers whose essential physiological characteristic is contractility, or the capability of contracting in length and dilating in breadth on the application of a proper stimulus, as the impulse of a motor nerve, or a shock of electricity; flesh; "lean meat." By such change of form, the muscles become the immediate means of motion of the different parts of the body, and of locomotion of the body as a whole.

Muscles of Human Head, Face, and Neck.

a, anterior, and b, posterior belly of occipitofrontalis, extending over the scalp; c, sternoclidomastoid; d, trapezius (a small part of it); e, attollens aurem; f, attrahens aurem; g, retrahens aurem; h, orbicularis palpebrarum; i, corrugator supercilii; j, orbicularis oris; k, four small muscles of the nostril (the line marks the anterior dilatator naris, behind which is the posterior dilatator; the compressor narium is next to the tip of the nose, and the depressor alæ nasi is directly below the posterior dilatator); l, levator labii superioris alæque nasi; m, levator labii superioris, beneath which lies, unmarked, the levator anguli oris; n, zygomaticus minor; o, zygomaticus major; p, superficial, and q, deep parts of the masseter; r, risorius, beneath which lies the buccinator, unmarked, little shown; s, depressor anguli oris; t, levator menti; u, depressor labii inferioris; v, anterior, and w, posterior belly of digastricus; x, mylohyoid; y, stylohyoid; z, hyoglossus; aa, thyrohyoid; ab, sternohyoid; ac, anterior, and ad, posterior belly of omohyoid; af, a small part of inferior constrictor of the pharynx, just above which a small part of the middle constrictor appears; ag, scalenus medius; ah, scalenus anticus; ai, scalenus posticus; aj, levator anguli scapulæ; ak, splenius capitis. (The platysma, which covers much of the neck and the lower part of the face, has been removed.)

2. A certain portion of muscle or muscular tissue, having definite position and relation with surrounding parts, and usually fixed at one or both ends. Any one of the separate masses or bundles of muscular fibers constitutes a muscle, which as a whole and in its subdivisions is enveloped in fascial connective tissue and usually attached to the part to be moved by means of a tendon or sinew. Muscles are for the most part attached to bones, with the periosteum of which their tendons are directly continuous. The most extensive or most fixed attachment of a muscle is usually called its origin; the opposite end is its insertion. Individual muscles not only change their shape during contraction, but are of endlessly varied shapes when at rest, indicated by descriptive terms, as conical, fusiform, penniform, digastric, deltoid, etc., besides which each muscle has its specific name. Such names are given from the attachments of the muscle, as sternoclidomastoid, omohyoid; or from function, as flexor, extensor; or from position, as pectoral, gluteal; or from shape, as deltoid, trapezoid; or from some other quality or attribute, in an arbitrary manner. Circular muscles are those whose fibers return upon themselves; they constitute sphincters, as of the mouth, eyelids, and anus. The swelling part of a muscle is called its belly; when there are two such, separated by an intervening tendon, the muscle is double-bellied or digastric. Muscles whose fibers are set obliquely upon an axial tendon are penniform or bipenniform. Muscles whose fibers are all parallel are called simple or rectilinear; those whose fibers intersect or cross each other are called compound. Muscles which act in opposition to one another are termed antagonistic; those which concur in the same action are termed Aponeurotic or Fascial Investment of Muscles of Right Arm. f, palmar fascia; d, deltoid; b, biceps; s, supinator longus.

Principal Muscles of the Human Body.

A. 1, 1, occipitofrontalis; 2, temporalis; 3, orbicularis palpebrarum; 4, masseter; 5, sternoclidomastoid; 6, trapezius; 7, platysma myoides; 8, deltoid; 9, biceps; 10, brachialis anticus; 11, triceps; 12, supinator; 13, 14, extensors of thumb and fingers; 15, pectoralis major; 16, latissimus dorsi; 17, serratus magnus; 18, obliquus externus abdominis; 19, rectus abdominis; 20, glutæus medius; 21, glutæus maximus; 22, tensor vaginæ femoris; 23, vastus externus; 24, biceps femoris or biceps flexor cruris; 25, 25, inner and outer heads of gastrocnemius; 26, tibialis anticus; 27, extensor longus digitorum; 28, 28, tibialis posticus; 29, peroneus longus; 30, peroneus brevis; 31, peroneus tertius; 32, muscles of little toe, opposite insertion of peroneus tertius; 33, tendon of extensor proprius hallucis; 34, flexor longus digitorum; 35, tendo Achillis.

B. 1, deltoid; 2, insertion of pectoralis major; 3, coracobrachialis; 4, biceps; 5, brachialis anticus; 6, a small part of triceps; 7, pronator radii teres; 8, supinator longus; 9, flexor carpi radialis; 10, palmaris longus, expanding below into the palmar fascia; 11, flexor sublimis digitorum; 12, flexor carpi ulnaris; 13, flexor brevis pollicis; 14, adductor pollicis; 15, abductor minimi digiti.

C. 1, border of glutæus medius; 2, tensor vaginæ femoris; 3, iliacus and psoas magnus; 4, pectineus; 5, adductor longus; 6, 6, 6, sartorius; 7, gracilis; 8, rectus femoris; 9, vastus externus; 10, vastus internus; 11, insertion of biceps femoris; 12, ligament of patella, or common tendon of insertion of 8, 9, 10; 13, tibialis anticus; 14, extensor longus digitorum; 15, peroneus longus; 16, inner head of gastrocnemius; 17, inner part of soleus; 18, peroneus brevis.

congenerous. Muscles subject to the will are voluntary; their fibers are striped, and they compose the great bulk of the muscular system. Involuntary muscles are not subject to the will; they are generally unstriped, though the heart is an exception to this. Hollow organs whose walls are notably muscular, as the heart, intestine, bladder, and womb, are called hollow muscles. Striped or voluntary muscle is sometimes called muscle of animal life, as distinguished from unstriped involuntary muscle of organic life. 3. A part, organ, or tissue, of whatever histological character, which has the property of contractility, and is thus capable of motion in itself.—4. Figuratively, muscular strength; brawn: as, a man of muscle.—Active insufficiency of a muscle. See insufficiency.—Alary muscles, in insects, delicate fan-shaped muscles in the upper part of the abdomen, each pair uniting by the expanded portion below the dorsal vessel or heart: collectively they have been called the pericardial septum. Their function appears to be to promote the circulation of the blood by altering the size of the pericardial cavity.—Amatorial muscles. See amatorial.—Appendicular muscles, those which belong to the appendicular skeleton; muscles of the limbs.—Artificial muscle, an elastic band of caoutchouc worn to supply the place of or to supplement the action of some paralyzed or weakened muscle.—Axial muscles, those which belong to the axial skeleton; muscles of the trunk, including the head and tail.—Canine, ciliary, dermal, etc., muscle. See the adjectives.—Grief-muscles, a name given by Darwin to the orbicularis palpebrarum, corrugator supercilii, pyramidalis nasi, and central anterior parts of the occipitofrontalis muscles, which draw the features into an expression of grief.—Grinning-muscle, the levator anguli oris, one of the muscles of expression.—Hilton's muscle. [After the anatomist Hilton.] The lower aryepiglottic or inferior arytenoepiglottidean muscle, called by Hilton compressor sacculi laryngis.—Horner's muscle. [After the anatomist Horner.] The tensor tarsi, a very small muscle at the inner side of the orbit, inserted into the tarsal cartilages of the eyelids.—Hypaxial, hypothenar, etc., muscles. See the adjectives.—Intercostal muscles, two sets of muscles, the external and the internal, their fibers crossing each other obliquely, connecting the adjacent margins of the ribs throughout nearly their whole extent. They are concerned in the act of respiration.—Kissing-muscle, the orbicular muscle or sphincter of the mouth: technically called the orbicularis oris, oscularis, and basiator.—Müller's palpebral muscle. [After H. M. Müller.] A layer of smooth muscular fibers in either lid, inserted near the attached margin of the tarsus, and innervated through the cervical sympathetic.—Muscles of deglutition, of mastication, etc. See deglutition, mastication, etc.—Orbicular, pyramidal, quadrate, etc., muscles. See the adjectives.—Snarling-muscle, the levator labii superioris, as of the dog, which, when it acts, displays the teeth, as in snarling.—Sneering-muscle, the human levator labii superioris alæque nasi, which acts in the expression of sneering. (For other muscles, see their special names.)

muscle-band, n. See mussel-band.

musclebill (mus'l-bil), n. The surf-scoter, a duck, Œdemia perspicillata. G. Trumbull. [Kennebunk, Maine.]

muscle-case (mus'l-kās), n. A muscle-compartment.

muscle-casket (mus'l-kas″ket), n. A muscle-compartment.

muscle-cell (mus'l-sel), n. A cell from which muscular tissue is derived; a myamœba; a myocyte.

The connection with the muscle-cells.
C. Claus, Zoöl. (trans.), p. 45.

muscle-clot (mus'l-klot), n. The substance formed as a clot in the coagulation of muscle-plasm; myosin.

muscle-column (mus'l-kol″um), n. 1. A bundle of muscular fibers.—2. A muscle-prism.

muscle-compartment (mus'l-kom-pärt″ment), n. The prismatic space bounded at both ends by Krause's membrane (intermediate disk) and laterally by the longitudinal planes which mark out Cohnheim's areas. It is occupied by a muscle-prism. Also muscle-case, muscle-casket.

muscle-corpuscle (mus'l-kôr″pus-l), n. A muscle-nucleus, especially in a striated muscle.

muscle-current (mus'l-kur″ent), n. See current[1].

muscled (mus'ld), a. [< muscle[1] + -ed[2].] Having muscles or muscular tissue; musculated: used in composition: as, a strong-muscled man.

muscle-nucleus (mus'l-nū″klē-us), n. A nucleus of a muscle-fiber. In the striated muscles of mammals these are usually placed on the inner surface of the sarcolemma.

muscle-plasm (mus'l-plazm), n. The liquid expressed from muscle minced and mixed while living with snow and a little salt. It coagulates, forming a clot (myosin) and muscle-serum.

muscle-plate (mus'l-plāt), n. A primitive segment of the mesoderm of an embryo destined to become a muscle or series of muscles; a myocomma, myomere, or myotome. Also called muscular plate.

Most of the voluntary muscles of the body are developed from a series of portions of mesoderm which . . . are termed the muscle-plates. Quain, Anat., II. 132.

muscle-plum (mus'l-plum), n. A dark-purple plum. Halliwell.

muscle-prism (mus'l-prizm), n. The prismatic mass of muscle-rods occupying a muscle-compartment.

muscle-reading (mus'l-rē″ding), n. The detection and interpretation of slight involuntary contractions of the muscles by a person whose hand is placed upon the subject of experimentation.

In the researches I made on muscle-reading, it was shewn over and over that by pure chance only the blindfold subject would, under certain conditions, find the object looked for in one case, and sometimes in two cases out of twelve. Proc. Soc. Psych. Research., I. 17.

muscle-rod (mus'l-rod), n. A segment of a muscle-fibrilla between two successive Krause's membranes (intermediate disks).

muscle-serum (mus'l-sē″rum), n. The serum formed on the coagulation of muscle-plasm.

muscle-sugar (mus'l-shůg″ăr), n. Inosite.

muscling (mus'ling), n. [< muscle[1] + -ing[1].] Exhibition or representation of the muscles.

A good piece, the painters say, must have good muscling, as well as colouring and drapery. Shaftesbury.

muscoid (mus'koid), a. and n. [< L. muscus, (see moss[1]), moss, + Gr. εἶδος, form.] I. a. In bot., moss-like; resembling moss. Also musciform.

II. n. One of the mosses; a moss-like plant.

muscological (mus-kō-loj'i-kal), a. [< muscology + -ic-al.] Belonging or pertaining to muscology.

muscologist (mus-kol'ō-jist), n. [< muscology + -ist.] One skilled in the science of muscology; a bryologist.

The tribe of Sphagnaceæ, or Bog-Mosses, is now separated by Muscologists from true Mosses.
W. B. Carpenter, Micros., § 339.

muscology (mus-kol'ō-ji), n. [= F. muscologie, < L. muscus, moss, + Gr. -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The branch of botany that treats of mosses; also, a discourse or treatise on mosses. Also called bryology.

muscosity (mus-kos'i-ti), n. [< L. muscosus, mossy, < muscus, moss (see moss[1]), + -ity.] Mossiness.

muscovado (mus-kō-vā'dō), n. [Also muscovada; = F. moscouade, mascouade, < Sp. moscabado, moscabada, mascabado, mascobada, for azúcar mascobado, inferior or unrefined sugar.] Unrefined sugar; the raw material from which loaf-sugar and lump-sugar are procured by refining.

Muscovado is obtained from the juice of the sugar-cane by evaporation and draining off the liquid part called molasses.

Muscovite (mus'kō-vīt), n. and a. [Formerly also Moscovite; < F. Moscovite, now Muscovite = Sp. Moscovita = D. Moskoviet = G. Moskowiter = Sw. Dan. Moskovit; as Muscovy (ML. Muscovia), Russia (< Russ. Moskova (> G. Moskau, F. Moscou), Moscow), + -ite[2].] I. n. 1. A native or an inhabitant of Muscovy or the principality of Moscow, or, by extension, of Russia.—2. [l. c.] In mineral., common or potash mica (see mica[2]), a silicate of aluminium and potassium, with the latter element in part replaced by hydrogen; the light-colored mica, varying from nearly white to pale smoky brown, which is characteristic of granite, gneiss, and other related crystalline rocks: formerly called Muscovy glass. In granitic veins it sometimes occurs in plates of great size, and is often mined, as for example in western North Carolina; in thin plates it is used in stoves, windows, etc. When ground up it is used as a lubricator, for giving a silvery sheen to wall-paper, etc. Phengite is a variety of muscovite containing more silica than the common kinds. The name hydromica or hydromuscovite is sometimes given to the varieties which yield considerable water on ignition. These usually have a pearly or silky luster and a talc-like feel, and are less elastic than the less hydrous kinds: damourite, margarodite, and sericite are here included. Fuchsite is a green-colored variety of muscovite containing chromium. In 1887 the production of mica (muscovite) in the United States was about 70,000 pounds, valued at nearly $150,000; 2,000 tons of mica-waste, valued at $15,000, were ground for use. (Min. Resources of the U. S., 1887.)

3. [l. c.] The desman or Muscovitic rat.

II. a. Of or pertaining to Muscovy, or Moscow, a former principality in central Russia, and the nucleus of the Russian empire; by extension, of or pertaining to Russia.

I have used the word Muscovite in the sense of "pertaining to the Tsardom of Muscovy," and Moscovite in the sense of "pertaining to the town of Moscow."
D. M. Wallace, Russia, p. 420.

Muscovitic (mus-kō-vit'ik), a. [< Muscovite + -ic.] Same as Muscovite.

muscovy (mus'kō-vi), n.; pl. muscovies (-viz). [Short for Muscovy duck (see musk-duck).] A Muscovy duck or musk-duck. See duck[2], 1, and musk-duck, 1.

Muscovy glass. See muscovite, 2.

She were an excellent lady but that her face peeleth like Muscovy-glass. Marston and Webster, Malcontent, i. 3.

muscular (mus'kū-lăr), a. [= F. musculaire = Sp. Pg. muscular = It. musculare, muscolare, < NL. muscularis,* of muscle, < L. musculus, muscle: see muscle[1].] 1. Of or pertaining in any way to muscle or muscles; composing, constituting, or consisting of muscle: as, the muscular system; muscular origin or insertion; muscular fiber or tissue.—2. Done by or dependent upon muscle or muscles: as, muscular action; muscular movement; muscular strength.—3. Well-muscled; having well-developed muscles; strong; sinewy; brawny: as, a muscular man.—4. Figuratively, strong and vigorous.

No mind becomes muscular without rude and early exercise. Bulwer, My Novel, ix. 16.

Muscular Christianity. See Christianity. [The origination of this phrase has been generally attributed to Charles Kingsley; but he expressly repudiates it.

We have heard much of late about "Muscular Christianity." A clever expression, spoken in jest by I know not whom, has been bandied about the world, and supposed by many to represent some new ideal of the Christian character. For myself, I do not know what it means.
Letters and Memories of Charles Kingsley, II. 212.]

Muscular fascicle, fasciculus, or lacertus, a bundle of a variable number of parallel muscular fibers.—Muscular fiber. (a) Muscular tissue, as composed of fibers. (b) One of the fibers of which muscular tissue is ultimately composed.—Muscular fibril, fibrillation. See the nouns.—Muscular impression, the mark of the insertion of a muscle, as of an adductor muscle on the inner surface of a bivalve shell. See cut at ciborium.—Muscular insertion, one of the attachments of an individual muscle, generally that inserted in the smaller or more movable part.—Muscular motion, muscular movement, the motion or movement which results from the action of muscles.—Muscular plate. Same as muscle-plate.—Muscular rheumatism. Same as myalgia.—Muscular sensations, feelings which accompany the action of the muscles. (James Mill, 1829.) By these a knowledge is obtained of the condition of the muscles, and the extent to which they are contracted, of the position of various parts of the body, and of the resistance offered by external bodies.—Muscular sense, muscular sensations or the capacity of experiencing them, especially considered as a means of information.—Muscular stomach, a stomach with thick muscular walls, as the gizzard of a fowl: distinguished from the glandular stomach, or proventriculus.—Muscular system, the total of the muscular tissue or sum of the individual muscles of the body; musculation or musculature, regarded as a set of similar organs or system of like parts, comparable to the nervous system, the osseous system, etc.—Muscular tissue, the proper contractile substance of muscle; muscular fiber. It is of two kinds—striated or striped muscle, and smooth. The former, of which all the ordinary muscles of the trunk and limbs and the heart are composed, consists of bundles Striated Muscular Tissue, magnified about 250 diameters.

A, a muscular fiber without its sarcolemma, breaking up at one end into its fibrillæ; B, two separate fibrillæ; C, a muscular fiber breaking up into disks; D, a muscular fiber of which the contractile substance (a, a) is torn across, while the sarcolemma (b) has not given way.

of fibers which present a striated appearance, and are enveloped in and bound together by connective tissue which also supports the vessels and nerves of the muscle. Striated muscle-fibers, except those of the heart, have an outer sheath of sarcolemma. Smooth muscular tissue consists of elongated band-like non-striated fibers, each with a rod-like nucleus; they do not break up into fibrillæ, and have no sarcolemma.—Muscular tube, in ichth., a myodome. = Syn. 3. Sinewy, stalwart, sturdy, lusty, vigorous, powerful.

muscularity (mus-kū-lar'i-ti), n. [< muscular + -ity.] The state, quality, or condition of being muscular.

muscularize (mus'kū-lăr-īz), v. t.; pret. and pp. muscularized, ppr. muscularizing. [< muscular + -ize.] To make muscular or strong; develop muscular strength in. Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 5.

muscularly (mus'kū-lăr-li), adv. With muscular power; strongly; as regards muscular strength.

musculation (mus-kū-lā'shọn), n. [= F. musculation; as L. musculus, muscle, + -ation.] The way or mode in which a part is provided with muscles; the number, kind, and disposition of the muscles of a part or organ.

It is not by Touch, Taste, Hearing, Smelling, Musculation, etc., that we can explain astronomical, physical, chemical, and biological phenomena.
G. H. Lewes, Probs. of Life and Mind, II. 446.

=Syn. Musculation, Musculature. Musculation is more frequent in merely descriptive anatomy, with reference to the attachments or other topographical disposition of individual muscles; musculature is the more comprehensive morphological or embryological term.

musculature (mus′kū-lā-tūr), n. [= Sp. musculatura; as L. musculus, muscle, + -ature.] The furnishing or providing of a living organism with muscles, or the method or means by which muscles are formed; also, the muscular tissue, system, or apparatus itself, considered with reference to its origin, development, and subsequent disposition; musculation.

The musculature of the right side of the larynx is still free, and, when acting, a crater-like cavity is seen, lined with granulations. Lancet, No. 3436, p. 12.

Dermal musculature. See dermal. = Syn. See musculation.

musculet† (mus′kūl), n. [< L. musculus, muscle: see muscle[1].] A muscle.

musculi, n. Plural of musculus, 1.

musculine (mus′kū-lin), n. [< L. musculus, muscle (see muscle[1]), + -ine[2].] The animal basis of muscle; the chemical substance of which muscle chiefly consists. See muscle-plasma and myosin.

musculite (mus′kū-līt), n. [< L. musculus, mussel (see mussel), + -ite[2].] A fossil shell like a mussel or Mytilus, or supposed to be of that kind.

musculocutaneous (mus″kū-lō-kū-tā′nē-us), a. [< L. musculus, muscle, + cutis, skin: see cutaneous.] Muscular and cutaneous: specifically said of certain nerves which, after giving off motor branches to muscles, terminate in the skin as sensory nerves. The superior and inferior musculocutaneous nerves of the abdomen are two branches of the lumbar plexus, more frequently called the iliohypogastric and ilio-inguinal. (See these words.) The musculocutaneous nerve in the arm is a large branch of the brachial plexus, which supplies the coracobrachialis and biceps muscles, and in part the brachialis anticus, and then ramifies in the skin of the forearm. That of the leg is one of two main branches of the external popliteal or peroneal nerve, which supplies the peronei muscles and then ramifies in the skin of the lower leg and foot.

musculopallial (mus″kū-lō-pal′i-al), a. [< L. musculus, muscle, + NL. pallium: see pallial.] Supplying or distributed to muscles and to the mantle or pallium of a mollusk: specifically applied to the outer of two nerves given off from the visceral ganglion, the other being the splanchnic nerve. Trans. Roy. Soc. Edin., XXXII. 628.

musculophrenic (mus″kū-lō-frē′nik), a. [< L. musculus, muscle, + Gr. φρήν, diaphragm.] Pertaining to the muscular tissue of the diaphragm: specifically applied to a terminal branch of the internal mammary artery, which supplies the diaphragm and lower intercostal muscles.

musculosity (mus-kū-los′i-ti), n. [= F. musculosité, < L. as if musculosita(t-)s*, < musculosus, musculous: see musculous.] The quality of being musculous; muscularity.

musculospiral (mus″kū-lō-spī′ral), a. [< L. musculus, muscle, + spira, spire: see spiral.] Innervating a muscle and winding spirally around a bone: specifically applied to the largest branch of the brachial plexus, which winds around the humerus in company with the superior profunda artery, and supplies the muscles of the back part of the arm and forearm and the skin of the same part.

musculous (mus′kū-lus), a. [= F. musculeux = Sp. Pg. musculoso = It. muscoloso, musculoso, < L. musculosus, muscular, fleshy, < musculus, a muscle: see muscle[1].] 1. Pertaining to a muscle or to muscles.

The uvous coat or iris of the eye hath a musculous power, and can dilate and contract that round hole in it called the pupil or sight of the eye. Ray, Works of Creation, ii.

2. Full of muscles; hence, strong; sinewy. [Obsolescent.]

He had a tongue so musculous and subtile that he could twist it up into his nose. Swift, Tale of a Tub, xi.

musculus (mus′kū-lus), n. [L.: see muscle[1].] 1. Pl. musculi (-lī). In anat., a muscle. Muscles were all formerly named in Latin, musculus being expressed or implied in their names, but few retain this designation, though the Latin form of the qualifying word or words may remain, as pectoralis, glutæus, etc.

2. [cap.] In zoöl.: (a) A genus of mice, of which Mus musculus is the type: same as Mus. Rafinesque, 1818. (b) A term in use among the conchologists of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries for various bivalve shells, as Panopæa, Unionidæ, Cyrenidæ, Mytilidæ, etc. (c) A genus of brachiopods of the family Terebratulidæ. Quenstedt, 1871.

Mus. Doc. An abbreviation of Musicæ Doctor (Doctor of Music).

muse[1] (mūz), v.; pret. and pp. mused, ppr. musing. [< ME. musen, gaze about, ponder, wonder, muse, < OF. muser (= Pr. OSp. musar = It. musare), ponder, muse, dream, F. loiter, trifle, dawdle; origin uncertain; prob. same as It. mussare, mutter, mumble, F. dial. (Walloon) muser, hum, buzz, < ML. musare, mussare, L. mussare, murmur, mutter, be in uncertainty; cf. Norw. musa, mussa, mysja, mutter, whisper; Gr. μύζειν, mutter; ult., like mum[1], mumble, mutter, etc., imitative of a low indistinct sound. Another etymology (Diez, Skeat) rests on It. musare, 'gape about,' explained as orig. 'sniff as a dog' (cf. F. muser, begin to rut), < OF. muse* (= It. muso), the mouth, muzzle, snout (whence dim. musel, mosel, > ME. mosel, > E. muzzle), < L. morsus, bite, ML. also muzzle, snout, beak: see muzzle, morse[2]. For the change of L. morsus to OF. muse* (mus), cf. OF. jus, < L. deorsum, OF. sus, < L. seorsum. But the Pr. OSp. and It. forms, in this view, must be borrowed from the OF., a thing in itself highly improbable at a date so early, and sufficient, with the improbability of such a transfer of notions, to disprove this explanation. In another view, also improbable, the word is < OHG. muozen, be idle, muoza, G. musze, idleness, leisure. Hence amuse.] I. intrans. 1. To ponder; meditate; reflect continuously and in silence; be in a brown study.

Right hertely she hym loved, and mused here-on so moche that she was sore troubled, and fayn wolde she haue hym to be her lorde. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 229.

Taking my lonely winding walk, I mus'd,
And held accustom'd conference with my heart.
Cowper, The Four Ages.

And the young girl mused beside the well,
Till the rain on the unraked clover fell.
Whittier, Maud Muller.

2†. To be astonished; be surprised; wonder.

I muse my Lord of Gloucester is not come;
'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 1. 1.

Yonder is ther an host of men,
I musen who they bee.
Captain Car (Child's Ballads, VI. 150).

This may be a sufficient reason to us why we need no longer muse at the spreading of many idle traditions so soon after the Apostles. Milton, Prelatical Episcopacy.

3. To gaze meditatively.

As y stood musynge on the moone.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 148.

Then came the fine Gawain and wonder'd at her,
And Lancelot later came and mused at her.
Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

=Syn. 1. Meditate, reflect, etc. (see list under contemplate), cogitate, ruminate, brood.

II. trans. 1. To meditate on; think of reflectively.

Thou knowist all that hertes thenke or muse,
All thynges thou seest in thy presence.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 6441.

Come, then, expressive Silence, muse His praise.
Thomson, Hymn, l. 118.

2†. To wonder at.

muse[1] (mūz), n. [< ME. muse, < OF. muse, muze, musing, amusement, < muser, muse: see muse[1], v.] 1. The act of musing; meditation; reverie; absent-mindedness; contemplative thought.

Thys king in muses ther was full strongly
In the noblesse of this castell alway,
That almost he slepte, but not a-slepe fully.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 5511.

2. Wonder; surprise.

This dedication . . . may haply make your Honors muse; well fare that dedication that may excite your muse.
Florio, It. Dict. (1598), Ep. Ded., p. [3].

He . . . was fill'd
With admiration and deep muse, to hear
Of things so high and strange.
Milton, P. L., vii. 52.

At or in a muse, in doubt or hesitation.

Which euent beeing so straunge, I had rather leaue them in a muse what it should be, then in a maze in telling what it was. Lyly, Euphues, Anat. of Wit, p. 104.

For the duke and our fleet, we are now all at a muse what should become of them.
Court and Times of Charles II., I. 251.

Muse[2] (mūz), n. [< OF. muse, F. muse = Pr. Sp. Pg. It. musa = D. muze = G. muse = Sw. Dan. muse, < L. musa, < Gr. μοῦσα, Æolic μοῖσα, Doric μῶσα, Laconian μῶα or μῶά, a Muse (see def. 1), hence also music, song, eloquence, in pl. arts, accomplishments, and in general fitness, propriety; prob. contr. of μάουσα* (reg. contr. μῶσα), fem. ppr. of μάειν*, a defective verb (perf. μέμαα, part. μεμαώς, pres. mid. μῶσθαι), strive after, seek after, attempt, long for, desire eagerly, covet, etc. The lit. meaning of μοῦσα is sometimes given as 'inventress' (as ancient writers assumed), from the sense 'invent' inferred from the sense 'seek after'; but the term more prob. referred to the emotion or passion, the "fine frenzy," implied in the verb in the usual sense 'strive after' (μεμαώς, excited), and in its derivatives, among which are counted μαίνεσθαι, be in a frenzy, μανία, frenzy, madness, μάντις, a seer, prophet, etc.: see mania, Mantis. Hence museum, music, mosaic[1], etc.] 1. In Gr. myth., one of the daughters of Zeus and Mnemosyne, who according to the earliest writers were goddesses of memory, then inspiring goddesses of song, and according to later ideas divinities presiding over the different kinds of poetry, and over the sciences and arts, while at the same time having as their especial province springs and limpid streams. Their number appears in the Homeric poems not to be fixed; later it seems to have been put at three, but afterward they are always spoken of as nine: Clio, the Muse of heroic exploits, or of history; Euterpe, of Dionysiac music and the double flute; Thalia, of gaiety, pastoral life, and comedy; Melpomene, of song and harmony, and of tragedy; Terpsichore, of choral dance and song; Erato, of erotic poetry and the lyre; Polymnia or Polyhymnia, of the inspired and stately hymn; Urania, of astronomical and other celestial phenomena; and Calliope, the chief of the Muses, of poetic inspiration, of eloquence, and of heroic or epic poetry. The Muses were intimately associated in legend and in art with Apollo, who, as the chief guardian and leader of their company, was called Musagetes.

In this city [Cremona] did that famous Poet [Virgil] consecrate himself to the Muses. Coryat, Crudities, I. 140.

Hence—2. [cap. or l. c.] An inspiring power; poetic inspiration: often spoken of and apostrophized by poets as a goddess.

O for a Muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention!
Shak., Hen. V., i., Prol.

Of Man's first disobedience, and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste Brought death into the world, and all our woe, . . .
Sing, heavenly Muse. Milton, P. L., i. 6.

3. A poet; a bard. [Rare.]

So may some gentle Muse
With lucky words favour my destined urn;
And, as he passes, turn
And bid fair peace be to my sable shroud.
Milton, Lycidas, l. 19.

muse[3], meuse (mūs), n. [< OF. musse, a little hole or corner to hide things in, < musser, hide: see miche[1], mooch, mouch.] 1. An opening in a fence through which a hare or other game is accustomed to pass. Also muset.

As when a crew of gallants watch the wild muse of a Bore, Their dogs put in full crie, he rusheth on before.
Chapman, Iliad, xi. 368. (Nares.)

The old prouerbe . . . "'Tis as hard to find a hare without a muse as a woman without a scuse."
Greene, Thieves Falling Out (Harl. Misc., VIII. 387). (Nares.)

Like to an hunter skilfull in marking the secret tracts and muces of wild beasts, [he] enclosed many a man within his lamentable net and toyle.
Holland, tr. of Ammianus Marcellinus (1609). (Nares.)

2†. A loophole; a means of escape.

For these words still left a muse for the people to escape.
N. Bacon.

3. The mouthpiece or wind-pipe of a bagpipe. Also written smuse.

mused (mūzd), a. [< muse[1] + -ed[2].] Overcome with liquor; bemused; muzzy.

Head waiter honour'd by the guest,
Half-mused, or reeling ripe.
Tennyson, Will Waterproof.

museful (mūz′fúl), a. [< muse[1], n., + -ful.] Thinking deeply or closely; thoughtful. Dryden.

musefully (mūz′fúl-i), adv. In a museful manner; thoughtfully.

muselt, n. An obsolete variant of muzzle.

museless (mūz′les), a. [< Muse[2], n., + -less.] Without a Muse; disregarding the power of poetry.

Museless and unbookish they [the Spartans] were, minding nought but the feats of Warre.
Milton, Areopagitica (Clarendon Press), p. 7.

musenna, n. See mesenna.

museographer (mū-zē-og′ra-fėr), n. [< museograph-y + -er[1].] Same as museographist.

museographist (mū-zē-og′ra-fist), n. [< museograph-y + -ist.] One who describes or classifies the objects in a museum. Also musæographist. [Recent.]

Most of the naturalists and museographists have included shells in their works.
Mendes da Costa, Elements of Conchology, p. 57.

museography (mū-zē-og′ra-fi), n. [< Gr. μουσεῖον, a museum, + -γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] The systematic description or written classification of objects in a museum. Also musæography. [Recent.]

museologist (mū-zē-ol′ō-jist), n. [< museology + -ist.] One versed in museology.

museology (mū-zē-ol′ō-ji), n. [< NL. museum, museum, + Gr. -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The science of arranging and managing museums. Also musæology. [Recent.]

But the account of the last [general arrangements of the several museums] is generally unsatisfactory and imperfect, while very slight or no mention is made of such devices as are characteristically American, and in which museology has been notably advanced by us.
Science, VI. 82.

muser (mū′zėr), n. One who muses; one who acts, speaks, or writes as in a reverie; an absent-minded person.

He [Arnold] is not, like most elegiac poets, a mere sad muser; he is always one who finds a secret of joy in the midst of pain. Contemporary Rev., XLIX. 530.

muse-rid (mūz′rid), a. Ridden by a Muse or the Muses; possessed by poetical enthusiasm. [Rare.]

No meagre, Muse-rid mope, adust and thin,
In a dun night-gown of his own loose skin.
Pope, Dunciad, ii. 37.

muset (mū′set), n. [Also musit; dim. of muse[3].] Same as muse[3], 1.

The many musets through the which he [the hare] goes
Are like a labyrinth to amaze his foes.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 683.

★musette (mū-zet′), n. [F., dim. of OF. muse, a pipe, a bagpipe, = It. musa, < ML. musa, a bagpipe, < L. musa, a song, a Muse: see Muse[2].] 1. A small and simple variety of oboe.—2. A form of bagpipe once very popular in France, having a compass of from ten to thirteen tones.—3. A quiet pastoral melody, usually with a drone-bass, written in imitation of a bagpipe tune: often introduced as one of the parts of the old-fashioned suite, especially as a contrast to the gavotte. Such melodies were often used as dance-tunes; and thus the term musette was extended to the dance for which they were used.

museum (mū-zē′um), n. [= F. muséum, musée = Sp. museo = Pg. museu = It. museo, < L. mūsēum, < Gr. μουσεῖον, a temple of the Muses, a place of study, a library or museum, also (late) mosaic, < μοῦσα, a Muse: see Muse[2].] A collection of natural objects, or of those made by man, placed where they may be seen, preserved, and studied. Neither the objects themselves, nor the place where they are shown, constitute a museum; this results from the combination of objects, place, and purpose, display being an essential feature. The objects, or specimens, may be shown for general purposes only, or for the illustration of some subject or idea, the tendency of modern museums being, by the display of objects and the manner in which they are arranged and labeled, to illustrate some fact in nature or in the history of mankind. The attempt has been made to classify museums according to the character of the objects or the purpose for which they are shown, as just indicated, but no hard and fast divisions can thus be made. The chief categories of museums are those of art, natural history, history, ethnology, and technology, and any one of these may be treated as a whole, or a museum may be devoted to some particular division of a given subject. A museum of art may contain, as far as is possible, the art-work of all periods and all countries; it may be confined to some branch of art, as painting or sculpture; to the work of a given period, country, or even man: the objects may be shown for their beauty alone, or so arranged as to show the gradual development of art. Similarly a museum of natural history may endeavor to cover the whole field, or it may be devoted to zoölogy or botany only, or to some branch of these subjects, such as geographical distribution, or the animals of a given region.

mush[1] (mush), n. [Prob. orig. a dial. var. of mesh[2], var. of mash[1], a mixture: see mash[1]. Not < G. mus, pap.] 1. Anything mashed. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—2. Meal boiled in water or milk until it forms a thick, soft mass: as, oatmeal mush; mush and milk; specifically, such a preparation made from Indian corn; hasty-pudding.

In thickness like a cane, it Nature roul'd
Close up in leaves, to keep it from the cold;
Which being ground and boyl'd, Mush they make.
Hardie, Last Voyage to Bermuda (1671). (Bartlett.)

Ev'n in thy native regions, how I blush
To hear the Pennsylvanians call thee Mush!
Joel Barlow, Hasty Pudding, i.

Why will people cook it [rice] into a mush? See how separate the grains are!
W. M. Baker, New Timothy, p. 19.

3. Something resembling mush, as being soft and pulpy: as, mush of mud.

I hate, where I looked for a manly furtherance, or at least a manly resistance, to find a mush of concession.
Emerson, Friendship.

4. Fish ground up; chum; pomace; stosh.—5. Dust; dusty refuse. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—6. The best kind of iron ore. Halliwell.—Mush muddle, pot-pie. [Cape Cod.]

mush[2] (mush), v. t. [Perhaps a var. of mesh[1], v.] To nick or notch (dress-fabrics) round the edges with a stamp, for ornament.

mushed (musht), a. [< mush[1] + -ed[2].] Shattered; depressed; "used up." [Prov. Eng.]

Going about all day without changing her cap, and looking as if she was mushed.
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, iii. 8.

musheront, n. An obsolete form of mushroom.

mushetour, n. In her., same as muschetor.

mushquash-root, n. See musquash-root.

mushroom (mush′röm), n. and a. [Also dial. or obs. mushrome, mushrump, musheron; < ME. musheron, muscheron, < OF. mouscheron, mouseron, a mushroom, < mousse, moss: see moss[1].]

I. n. 1. A cryptogamic plant of the class Fungi; applied in a general sense to almost any of the larger, conspicuous fungi, such as toadstools, puffballs, Hydnei, etc., but more particularly to the agaricoid fungi and especially to the edible forms. The species most usually cultivated is the Agaricus campestris, edible agaric or mushroom. Mushrooms are found in all parts of the world, and are usually of very rapid growth. In some localities they form a staple article of food. In Tierra del Fuego the natives live largely upon Cyttaria Darwinii, and in Australia many species of Boletus are used as food by the natives. Many mushrooms are poisonous, and the selection of those suitable for cooking should be intrusted to competent judges. See cut under Agaricus.

Hither the Emperour Claudius repaired, in hope to recover his health through the temperature of the air, . . . but contrarily here met with the mushromes that poysoned him. Sandys, Travailes, p. 236.

Hence—2. An upstart; one who rises rapidly from a low condition in life.

But cannot brook a night-grown mushrump—
Such a one as my lord of Cornwall is—Should bear us down of the nobility.
Marlowe, Edward II., i. 4.

And we must glorify
A mushroom! one of yesterday!
B. Jonson, Catiline, ii. 1.

3. A small mushroom-shaped protuberance that sometimes forms on the end of the negative carbon in arc-lamps.—Cup-mushroom, a common name for certain discomycetous fungi, particularly of the genus Peziza. See Discomycetes and Peziza.—Devil's mushroom, a name given to many poisonous fungi resembling edible mushrooms. [Colloq.]—Fairy-ring mushroom. See champignon and Marasmius.—St. George's mushroom, a species of mushroom, Tricholoma gambosum, which appears in May and June, growing in rings. The name is also given to Agaricus arvensis.

II. a. 1. Of or pertaining to mushrooms; made of mushrooms: as, mushroom sauce.—2. Resembling mushrooms in rapidity of growth and in unsubstantiality; ephemeral; upstart: as, mushroom aristocracy.

Somebody buys all the quack medicines that build palaces for the mushroom, say rather the toadstool, millionaires. O. W. Holmes, Med. Essays, p. 186.

Mushroom anchor, catchup, coral, etc. See the nouns.—Mushroom head, the nose-plate on the inner part of the breech-plug of a breech-loading cannon. See nose-plate, and second cut under fermeture.

★mushroom (mush′röm), v. t. [< mushroom, n.] To elevate suddenly in position or rank.

The prosperous upstart mushroomed into rank.
Richardson, Clarissa Harlowe, I. 297. (Davies.)

mushroom-hitches (mush′röm-hich″ez), n. pl. Inequalities in the floor of a coal-mine, occasioned by the projection of basaltic or other stony substances. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

mushroom-stone (mush′röm-stōn), n. A stone or fossil that resembles a mushroom.

Two small mushroom-stones, in form of a bluntish cone. . . . Fifteen other mushroom-stones of near the same shape with the precedent. . . . These are of a white colour, and in shape exactly resembling a sort of coralline fungus of marine original, which I have by me.
Woodward, On Fossils, p. 137.

mushroom-strainer (mush′röm-strā″nėr), n. An inverted-dish strainer for cistern-pumps, so named from its shape. E. H. Knight.

mushroom-sugar (mush′röm-shûg″ăr), n. Mannite.

mushru (mush′rö), n. [Hind. mashrū'a.] A washable material made in India, having a glossy silk finish and a cotton back. It is used for wearing-apparel, and is very durable.

mushrump (mush′rump), n. An obsolete or dialectal form of mushroom.

mushy (mush′i), a. [< mush[1] + -y[1].] Like mush; soft; pulpy; without fiber or firmness.

The death penalty is disappearing, like some better things, before a kind of mushy and unthinking doubt of its morality and expediency. The Nation, Feb. 3, 1870, p. 67.

A child-bearing, tender-hearted thing is the woman of our people; . . . she's not mushy, but her heart is tender.
George Eliot, Daniel Deronda, xlvi.

Over-ripe, mushy, bruised, and partially decayed fruit makes a poor dark-colored dried product.
Sci. Amer., N. S., LXI. 232.

★music (mū′zik), n. [< ME. musik, musyk, musike = D. muziek, muzijk = MLG. MHG. museke = G. Dan. Sw. musik, < OF. (and F.) musique = Sp. música = Pg. It. musica, music, < L. musica = Ar. mūsīqa = Turk. Hind. musīqī, < Gr. μουσική (sc. τέχνη), any art over which the Muses presided, esp. lyric poetry set to melody, music; fem. of μουσικός, of the Muses (ὁ μουσικός, a votary of the Muses, a poet, musician, man of letters), < μοῦσα, a muse: see Muse[2].] 1. Any pleasing succession of sounds or of combinations of sounds; melody or harmony: as, the music of the winds, or of the sea.

For the armony
And sweet accord was so good musike
That the uoice to angels most was like.
Flower and Leaf.

In sweet music is such art,
Killing care and grief of heart
Fall asleep, or hearing die.
Shak., Hen. VIII., iii. 1 (song).

When those exact co-ordinations which the ear perceives as rhythm, tune, and tone-color are suggested to the ear by a series of musical sounds, the result is music.
S. Lanier, Sci. Eng. Verse, p. 48.

The bird doth not betray the secret springs
Whence note on note her music sweetly pours.
Jones Very, Poems, p. 29.

2. (a) The science of combining tones in rhythmic, melodic, and harmonic order, so as to produce effects that shall be intelligible and agreeable to the ear. (b) The art of using rhythmic, melodic, and harmonic materials in the production of definite compositions, or works having scientific correctness, artistic finish and proportion, esthetic effectiveness, and an emotional content or meaning.

In Candia siue Creta was musyke firste founde, and also tourneys and exercyse of armes on horsbacke.
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 13.

Music has been developed according to certain rules which depended on unknown laws of nature since discovered; . . . it cannot be separated from these laws, and . . . within them there is a field large enough for all the efforts of human fancy. Blaserna, Sound, p. 187.

Degrees in music are not conferred by the University of London. Grove's Dict. Music, I. 452.

3. A composition made up of tones artistically and scientifically disposed, or such compositions collectively: as, a piece of music. Music is classified and named with respect to its origin or general style as barbarous, popular, national, artistic, sacred, secular, etc.; with respect to its technical form as melodic, harmonic, polyphonic or contrapuntal, homophonic, Gregorian, classical, romantic, strict, free, lyric, epic, dramatic, pastoral, mensurable, figured, etc.; with respect to its method of performance as vocal, instrumental, solo, choral, orchestral, concerted, etc.; and with respect to its application as ecclesiastical or church, theatrical, operatic, military, or as concert-, chamber-, dance-music, etc.

His [Rossini's] use of the crescendo and the "cabaletta," though sometimes carried to excess, gave a brilliancy to his music which added greatly to the excellence of its effect. Encyc. Brit., XX. 861.

4. A musical composition as rendered by instruments or by the voice.

Some to Church repair,
Not for the doctrine, but the music there.
Pope, Essay on Criticism, l. 344.

5. The art of producing melody or harmony by means of the voice or of instruments.

Also there shalbe one Teacher of Musicke, and to play one the Lute, the Bandora, and Cytterne.
Book of Precedence (E. E. T. S., extra ser.), i. 7.

6. The written or printed score of a composition; also, such scores collectively: as, a book of music; music for the piano or the flute.—7. A company of performers of music; a band; an orchestra.

Enter music.

music† (mū′zik), v. t. [< music, n.] To entice or seduce with music.

A man must put a mean valuation upon Christ to leave him for a touch upon an instrument, and a faint idea of future torments to be fiddled and musick'd into hell.
Gentleman Instructed, p. 135. (Davies.) musica (mū′zi-kạ̈), n. [L. and It.: see music.] Music.—Musica ficta, falsa, or colorata, false or feigned music: a term applied in the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth centuries to music in which accidentals or notes foreign to the scale of the mode were introduced for the sake of euphony.

★musical (mū′zi-kạl), a. and n. [< F. Sp. Pg. musical = It. musicale, < NL. musicalis,* < L. musica, music: see music.] I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to music, in any sense; of the nature of music: as, musical proportion.—2. Sounding agreeably; affecting the ear pleasurably; conformable to the laws of the science of music; conformable to the principles of the art of music; melodious; harmonious.

As sweet and musical
As bright Apollo's lute.
Shak., L. L. L., iv. 3. 342.

All little sounds made musical and clear
Beneath the sky that burning August gives,
While yet the thought of glorious Summer lives.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, I. 375.

3. Pertaining to the performance or the notation of music.—4. Fond of music; discriminating with regard to music: as, the child is musical, or has a musical ear.—5. Amusing; ridiculous. [Slang, New Eng.]—Musical box, a mechanical musical instrument, consisting essentially of a barrel or cylinder, caused to revolve by clockwork, in the surface of which are small pegs or pins, so arranged as to catch and twang the teeth of a kind of steel comb. These teeth are graduated in size, and carefully tuned; and the disposition of the pins is such as to sound them in perfect melodic succession and rhythm, so that even very elaborate music may be faithfully reproduced. The position of the barrel may usually be slightly shifted from side to side, so that more than one tune can be played from the same barrel; and sometimes more than one barrel is provided for the same box, so that an extensive repertoire is possible. Occasionally small bells, or even small reeds blown by a bellows, as in the hand-organ, are added to increase the resources of the instrument. The effects produced are often very pleasing and varied.—Musical characters. See character.—Musical clock, a clock to which a musical box or barrel-organ is so attached as to play tunes at certain periods.—Musical condenser, a condenser to the terminal plates of which the wires from a telephone-transmitter are attached. When a musical sound is produced in the neighborhood of the transmitter, it is reproduced by the condenser.—Musical director, the conductor, director, or leader of a choir, chorus, band, or orchestra. Also called music-director.—Musical drama. See opera.—Musical ear. See ear[1], 5.—Musical glasses. See glass.—Musical harvest-flies, the Cicadidæ.—Musical notation. See notation.—Musical progression. Same as harmonic progression (which see, under harmonic).—Musical scale. See scale.

II. n. A meeting or a party for a musical entertainment: same as musicale.

Such fashionable cant terms as theatricals and musicals, invented by the flippant Topham, still survive among his confraternity of frivolity.
I. D'Israeli, Curios. of Lit., III. 346.

musicale (mū-zi-kal′), n. [< F. musicale (soirée musicale, a musical party), fem. of musical, musical: see musical.] A performance or concert of music, vocal or instrumental, or both, usually of a private character; a private concert.

music-house (mū′zik-hous), n. 1. A house where public musical entertainments are given.

Towards the close of the seventeenth century, the professed musicians assembled at certain houses in the metropolis, called music-houses, where they performed concerts, consisting of vocal and instrumental music, for the entertainment of the public.
Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 382.

2. A firm or other business concern dealing in printed music, or musical instruments, or both.

musici (mū′zi-si), n. pl. Same as harmonici.

musician (mū-zish′ạn), n. [Early mod. E. also musition; < F. musicien; as music + -ian.] One who makes music a profession or otherwise devotes himself to it, whether as composer, performer, critic, theorist, or historian.

The praise of Bacchus then the sweet musician sung.
Dryden, Alexander's Feast, l. 47.

musicianer (mū-zish′ạn-ėr), n. [< musician + -er[1].] Same as musician. [Obsolete or colloq.]

Musicianer I had always associated with the militia-musters of my boyhood, and too hastily concluded it an abomination of our own, but Mr. Wright calls it a Norfolk word, and I find it to be as old as 1642 by an extract in Collier. Lowell, Biglow Papers, 2d ser., Int.

musicianly (mū-zish′ạn-li), a. [< musician + -ly[1].] Having, exhibiting, or illustrating the properties of good music, or the skill and taste of a good musician.

musicianship (mū-zish′ạn-ship), n. [< musician + -ship.] Skill in musical composition or expression; musical acquirements.

As a whole, "St. Polycarp" is a work which bears testimony both to the thorough musicianship and to the natural gifts of its composer. Athenæum, No. 3178, p. 392.

musicless (mū′zik-les), a. [< music + -less.] Unmusical; inharmonious.

Their musicklesse instruments are frames of brasse hung about with rings, which they jingle in shops according to their marchings. Sandys, Travailes, p. 172. (Davies.) music-loft (mū′zik-lôft), n. Same as organ-loft.

music-mad (mū′zik-mad), a. Inordinately and morbidly devoted to the study or pursuit of music; afflicted by musicomania.

music-master (mū′zik-mȧs″tėr), n. A male teacher of music.

music-mistress (mū′zik-mis″tres), n. A female teacher of music.

musicodramatic (mū″zi-kō-dra-mat′ik), a. Combining music and the drama; at once dramatic and musical.

His operas, although by no means written "with a purpose," represented an entirely new type of musico-dramatic art. Quarterly Rev., CXLVI. 66.

musicography (mū-zi-kog′ra-fi), n. [< Gr. μουσική, music, + γράφειν, write.] The science or art of writing music out in legible characters; musical notation.

musicomania (mū″zi-kō-mā′ni-ạ̈), n. [= F. musicomanie = It. musicomania, < NL. musicomania, < Gr. μουσική, music, + μανία, mania.] In pathol., a variety of monomania in which the intellectual faculties are deranged by an absorbing passion for music. Dunglison. Also called musomania.

music-paper (mū′zik-pā″pėr), n. Paper ruled with staffs for recording music.

music-pen (mū′zik-pen), n. An instrument consisting of a wooden handle and a piece of brass so bent upon itself as to make five small channels or gutters. When the channels are filled with ink and the pen is drawn across paper, five parallel lines are made, which constitute a staff for writing music.

music-rack (mū′zik-rak), n. A rack or inclined shelf attached to a musical instrument, or mounted upon an independent support, designed to hold the music for a singer or player. Also called music-holder.

music-recorder (mū′zik-rē-kôr″dėr), n. A device for recording music as it is played on any sort of keyed instrument, as the organ or pianoforte. Mr. Fenby's recorder, named by him a phonograph, does this by means of a stud attached to the under side of each key. When the key is pressed down, the stud comes in contact with a spring, which in turn sets in action an electromagnetic apparatus, which causes a tracer to press against a fillet of chemically prepared paper moving at a uniform rate. The arrangement is such as to denote the length and character of the notes. Abbé Moigno's phonautograph records notes by means of a pencil attached to a kind of spheroidal drum, which vibrates when any musical notes are sounded, whether by the mouth or by an instrument.

music-roll (mū′zik-rōl), n. Same as music-case, 2.

musicry† (mū′zik-ri), n. [< music + -ry.] Music. Marston, Scourge of Villanie, xi. 131.

music-school (mū′zik-skōl), n. A school where music is the principal subject taught: when on a large scale, also called a conservatory.

music-shell (mū′zik-shel), n. A volute, Voluta musica, inhabiting the Caribbean Sea, having the shell marked with color in a way that resembles bars of music, the spots being in several rows or series. See cut under volute.

music-smith (mū′zik-smith), n. A workman who makes the metal parts of pianofortes, etc. Simmonds.

music-stand (mū′zik-stand), n. 1. A music-rack or music-case.—2. A raised platform, as in a park, on which a band plays.

music-stool (mū′zik-stōl), n. A stool, often with an adjustable seat, for a performer on the pianoforte or similar instrument. Also music-chair.

music-type (mū′zik-tīp), n. Type for use in printing music.

music-wire (mū′zik-wīr), n. Steel wire such as is used in making the strings of musical instruments.

Musigny (mü-zē′nyi), n. [F.] An excellent red wine of the Côte d'Or in Burgundy.

musimon, musmon (mū′si-mọn, mus′mọn), n. [= F. musimone, musmon = It. musimone, < L. musimo(n-), musmo(n-) (Gr. μούσμων), a Sardinian animal, supposed to be the mouflon.] A wild sheep, the mouflon, Ovis musimon.

musing (mū′zing), n. [< ME. musyng; verbal n. of muse[1], v.] The act of pondering; meditation; thoughtfulness.

Generydes stode still in grete musyng,
And to the quene gaue answere in this case.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 491.

Sometimes into musings fell,
So dreamlike that he might not tell his thought
When he again to common life was brought.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, II. 274.

musing (mū′zing), p. a. Meditative; thoughtful; preoccupied.

With even step and musing gait.
Milton, Il Penseroso, l. 38.

musingly (mū′zing-li), adv. In a musing way.

The Cat-a-Mountain, musion, or wild cat.
Encyc. Brit., XI. 699.

musit†, n. An obsolete form of muset for muse[3], 1.

musition†, n. An obsolete spelling of musician.

musive (mū′ziv), a. [= F. musif, < LL. musivum, < Gr. μουσεῖον, mosaic: see museum and mosaic[1].] Same as mosaic[1].

Assuming the cones [of the retina] to be arranged somewhat in the form of hexagonal cells in a honeycomb, this [a beaded or zigzag outline seen between two very close parallel lines on a white ground] has been explained by supposing that the retinal image of such a line is so small that, as it falls across this musive surface, one minute section of it would excite only one cone, while the sections immediately above and below would cover halves of two adjacent cones, and, exciting both to activity, would appear twice as large. G. S. Hall, German Culture, p. 279.

musjid, n. Same as masjid.

musk (musk), n. [< ME. musk, < OF. musc, F. ★musc = Pr. musc = Sp. musco (obs., the usual term being almizcle = Pg. almiscle, almiscar, from the Ar., with Ar. art.) = It. musco, muschio = D. muskus = G. moschus = Sw. muskus = Dan. muskus, moskus, < LL. muscus, ML. also moschus, < Gr. μόσχος, < Ar. mushk, musk, misk = Turk. misk, < Pers. musk, misk = Hind. mushk, musk, < Skt. mushka, testicle, prob. < √ mush, steal, whence also ult. mouse. Hence ult. muscat, muscatel, muscadel, muscadine, etc., and the second element of nutmeg.] 1. An odoriferous substance secreted by the male musk-deer, Moschus moschiferus. See musk-deer. The secretion is a viscid fluid, which dries as a brown pulveruline substance, of a slightly bitter taste and extremely powerful, penetrating, and persistent odor. It is the strongest and most lasting of perfumes, and is also used in medicine as a diffusible stimulant and antispasmodic. The commercial article is imported from Asia in the natural pods or bags, frequently mixed with blood, fat, and hairs, and adulterated with foreign substances. Various other animals secrete a substance like musk, and several are named from this fact. See compounds following.

Which the Hunters (at that time chasing the said beast) doe cut off, and drie against the Sunne, and it proueth the best Muske in the world. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 428.

That oil'd and curl'd Assyrian Bull Smelling of musk and of insolence.
Tennyson, Maud, vi. 6.

2. A kind of artificial musk made by the action of nitric acid upon oil of amber.—3. The smell of musk, or a smell resembling it; an aromatic smell; a perfume.

The woodbine spices are wafted abroad,
And the musk of the rose is blown.
Tennyson, Maud, xxii. 1.

4. Same as musk-plant, in both senses.

musk (musk), v. t. [< musk, n.] To perfume with musk.

muskallonge (mus'ka-lonj), n. See maskalonge.

muskat†, n. An obsolete form of muscat.

musk-bag (musk'bag), n. 1. A small bag containing musk and other perfumes, sometimes used as a sachet. Closet of Rarities (1706). (Nares.)—2. The pod, pouch, or cyst of the musk-deer which contains the musk.

musk-ball (musk'bâl), n. A ball of some substance impregnated with musk and other perfumes, kept among garments after the manner of a sachet to perfume them.

Curious musk-balls, to carry about one, or to lay in any place. Accomplish'd Female Instructor (1719). (Nares.) musk-beaver (musk'bē″vėr), n. The muskrat, Fiber zibethicus.

musk-beetle (musk'bē″tl), n. A cerambycid beetle, Callichroma moschata. See cut under Cerambyx.

musk-cake (musk'kāk), n. Musk, rose-leaves, and other ingredients made into a cake. Closet of Rarities (1706). (Nares.) musk-cat (musk'kat), n. A civet-cat; figuratively, a scented, effeminate person; a fop.

Here is a purr of fortune's, sir, or of fortune's cat—but not a musk-cat. Shak., All's Well, v. 2. 20.

Away, musk-cat! B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iv. 1.

musk-cattle (musk'kat″l), n. pl. Musk-oxen.

musk-cavy (musk'kā″vi), n. A West Indian rodent of the family Octodontidæ, subfamily Echinomyinæ, and genus Capromys: so called from its musky odor. There are 3 species in Cuba, C. pilorides, C. prehensilis, and C. melanurus, known as hutias. They are of large size and arboreal habits, and somewhat resemble rats.

Musk-cavy (Capromys pilorides).

musk-cod† (musk'kod), n. A musk-bag; hence, figuratively, a scented fop.

It's a sweet musk-cod, a pure spic'd gull.
Dekker, Satiromastix.

★musk-deer (musk'dēr), n. 1. A small ruminant, Moschus moschiferus, of the family Cervidæ and subfamily Moschinæ, the male of which yields the scent called musk. These little deer inhabit the elevated plateaus and mountain-ranges of central Asia, especially the Altaic chain. The male is about 3 feet long and 20 inches high, hornless, with long canine teeth and coarse pelage of a dirty-brown color, whitish underneath. The doe is smaller, and has no musk. The gland or bag of the male which contains the perfume is of about the size of a hen's egg, of an oval form flattened on one side. It is an accessory sexual organ.

2. In an improper use, a tragulid, chevrotain, or kanchil, small ruminants of the family Tragulidæ. They superficially resemble musk-deer, but belong to a different family.—Musk-deer plant. See Limonia.

musk-duck (musk'duk), n. 1. A duck, Cairina moschata, of the family Anatidæ and subfamily Anatinæ, commonly but erroneously known as the muscovy and Barbary duck. It is a native of tropical America, now domesticated everywhere. It is larger than the mallard, and the upper parts are of a glossy greenish-black color.

2. A duck of the genus Biziura, as B. lobata of Australia: so called from the musky odor of the male.

★muskeg (mus'keg), n. [Ojibwa muskig.] A bog; a soft mossy or peaty spot.

muskel†, n. An obsolete form of muscle[2] for mussel.

muskely†, a. [< muskel + -y[1].] Muscular.

Muskely, or of muscles, hard and stiffe with many muscles or brawnes. Withals, Dict. (ed. 1608), p. 404. (Nares.) musket[1]† (mus'ket), n. [Also musquet; < ME. musket, muskytte, < OF. mousket, mosquet, moschet, mouschet, mouchet, etc. (F. mouchet, emouchet (ML. muscetus, muschetus) = It. moschetto, also with diff. suffix, moscardo), a kind of hawk, so called with ref. to spots on its breast, or more prob. from its small size, being compared to a fly; dim. < L. musca, a fly (> OF. mousche, F. mouche, a spot, a fly: see mouche). Cf. mosquito.] In falconry, an inferior kind of hawk; a sparrow-hawk. See eyas-musket.

One they might trust their common wrongs to wreak;
The Musquet and the Coystrel were too weak.
Dryden, Hind and Panther, iii. 1119.

musket[2] (mus'ket), n. [Formerly also musquet; = D. musket = G. muskete = Sw. musköt = Dan. musket, < OF. mousquete, mousquet (F. mousquet), m., mouschete, moschete, f., = Sp. Pg. mosquete (ML. muschetta, muscheta), < It. moschetto, a musket (gun), so called (like other names of firearms, e. g. falcon, falconet, saker) from a hawk, < moschetto, a kind of hawk: see musket[1].] A hand-gun for soldiers, introduced in European armies in the sixteenth century: it succeeded the harquebus, and became in time the common arm of the infantry. It was at first very heavy, and was provided with a rest. The earliest muskets were matchlocks, which were superseded by the wheel-lock, the snaphance, the flint-lock, and the percussion-guns. The musket was made lighter, while still gaining in efficiency and accuracy. The rifle-musket was introduced in the middle of the nineteenth century. See rifle, and cuts under matchlock and gun[1].

And is it I
That drive thee from the sportive court, where thou Wast shot at with fair eyes, to be the mark
Of smoky muskets? Shak., All's Well, iii. 2. 111.

Bastard musket, a hand-gun used in the sixteenth century. See caliver.

musket-arrow† (mus'ket-ar″ō), n. A short arrow thrown from a firearm. These arrows seem to have been generally feathered, but examples remain of arrows three or four inches long with barbed heads and a disk-shaped butt, which appear to have been intended for this use. Rep. Royal Commission, 1595.

musketeer (mus-ke-tēr'), n. [Formerly also musketteer, musketier, musqueteer; = D. G. musketier = Sw. musketör = Dan. musketeer, < F. mousquetaire (= Sp. mosquetero = Pg. mosqueteiro = It. moschettiere), a soldier armed with a musket, < mousquete, a musket: see musket[2].] 1. A soldier armed with a musket.

Ralegh, leaving his gally, took eight musketiers in his barge. Oldys, Sir Walter Raleigh.

2. A musket; a musket-lock.

Did they . . . into pikes and musqueteers
Stamp beakers, cups, and porringers?
S. Butler, Hudibras, I. ii. 562.

musket-lock (mus'ket-lok), n. 1. The lock of a musket.—2. A musket. [Rare.]

We must live like our Puritan fathers, who always went to church, and sat down to dinner, when the Indians were in their neighborhood, with their musket-lock on the one side, and a drawn sword on the other.
W. Phillips, Speeches, p. 54.

musketo†, n. See mosquito.

musketoon (mus-ke-tön'), n. [Formerly also musquetoon; < F. mousqueton, < It. moschettone, < moschetto, a musket: see musket[2].] 1. A light and short hand-gun: in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries a usual weapon of cavalry.

One of them ventur'd upon him (as he [John L'Isle] was going to Church accompanied with the chief Magistracy) and shot him with a Musquetoon dead in the place.
Wood, Athenæ Oxon., II. 338.

2. A soldier armed with a musketoon: generally used in the plural.

A double guard of archers and muskatoons.
Sir T. Herbert, Travels in Africa.

musket-proof (mus'ket-pröf), a. Capable of resisting the force of a musket-ball.

musket-rest (mus'ket-rest), n. A fork used as a prop to support the heavy musket in use in the sixteenth century. Also called croc.

He will never come within the signe of it, the sight of a cassock, or a musket-rest againe.
B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, ii. 3.

musketry (mus'ket-ri), n. [< F. mousqueterie (= Sp. mosqueteria = It. moschetteria), < mousquet, musket: see musket[2].] 1. The art or science of firing small-arms: as, an instructor of musketry.—2. Muskets collectively.

The cannon began to fire on one side, and the musquetry on both, and the bridge of Bothwell, with the banks adjacent, were involved in wreaths of smoke.
Scott, Old Mortality, xxxi.

3. A body of troops armed with muskets.

musket-shot (mus'ket-shot), n. 1. The discharge of a musket; a bullet from a musket: as, he was killed by a musket-shot.—2. The range or reach of a musket.—3†. A musket-ball.

With more than musket-shot did he charge his quill when he meant to inveigh. Nash, Unfortunate Traveller.

musk-flower (musk'flou″èr), n. Same as musk-plant, 1.

musk-gland (musk'gland), n. The glandular organ of the male musk-deer which secretes musk. It is an accessory sexual organ, corresponding to the preputial follicles of many mammals.

musk-hyacinth (musk'hī″a-sinth), n. One of the grape-hyacinths, Muscari moschatum, with musky scent.

muskiness (mus'ki-nes), n. The quality or state of being musky; the scent of musk. Bailey, 1727.

muskit-grass (mus'kit-gras), n. Same as mesquite-grass.

muskle[1]†, n. An obsolete form of muscle[1].

muskle[2]†, n. An obsolete form of mussel.

muskmallow (musk'mal″ō), n. 1. A common plant, Malva moschata. See mallow.—2. A plant of the genus Abelmoschus, the abelmosk.

muskmelon (musk'mel″on), n. [Formerly, and still dial., muskmillion; < musk + melon.] A well-known plant, Cucumis Melo, and its fruit. The seeds have diuretic properties, and were formerly used in catarrhal affections. See Cucumis, melon[1], 1, and abdalavi.

So, being landed, we went up and downe, and could finde nothing but stones, heath, and mosse, and wee expected oranges, limonds, figges, muske-millions, and potatoes.
John Taylor, Works (1630). (Nares.)

musk-mole (musk'mōl), n. An insectivorous quadruped, Scaptochirus moschatus, of the mole family, Talpidæ. It resembles the common mole, and is found in Mongolia. Also called musky-mole.

musk-okra (musk'ō″krä), n. See okra.

musk-orchis (musk'ôr″kis), n. A plant, Herminium Monorchis.

★musk-ox (musk'oks), n. A ruminant mammal, Ovibos moschatus, of the family Bovidæ and subfamily Ovibovinæ, intermediate between an ox and a sheep in size and many other respects. There are horns in both sexes, those of the male being very broad at the base and meeting in the middle of the forehead, then turning downward for most of their length, and finally recurved. The pelage is very long and fine, the hairs hanging like those of a merino sheep, and has occasionally been woven into a fine soft fabric. The musk-ox was formerly an animal of circumpolar distribution, but is now found only in arctic America, where it lives in herds of a dozen or more. It is very fleet, active, and hardy, and sometimes performs extensive migrations. The beef is eaten, though the animal smells strongly of musk. Also called musk-sheep.

musk-pear (musk'pãr), n. A fragrant kind of pear.

musk-plant (musk'plant), n. 1. A small yellow-flowered plant, Mimulus moschatus, cultivated for its odor.—2. The musk heron's-bill, Erodium moschatum.

musk-plum (musk'plum), n. A fragrant kind of plum.

muskquasht, n. An obsolete form of musquash. G. Cuvier.

muskrat (musk'rat), n. 1. A large murine rodent quadruped, Fiber zibethicus, of the family Muridæ and subfamily Microtinæ: so called from its musky odor. It is of about the size of a small rabbit, of a very stout thick-set form and dark-brown color, grayish underneath, with small eyes and ears, large hind feet with webbed toes, and long naked scaly tail, compressed in the horizontal plane so as to present an upper and an under edge, and two broad sides. In the character of the fur, the scaly tail, and aquatic habits, the muskrat resembles the beaver, and is sometimes called musk-beaver; but its actual relationships are with the voles and lemmings. It is one of the commonest quadrupeds of North America, almost universally distributed throughout that continent, living in lakes, rivers, and pools, either in underground burrows in the banks, or in houses made of reeds, rushes, and grasses, as large as haycocks and of similar shape. Several distinct species are now recognized. Also called musquash and ondatra.

2. An insectivorous animal of musky odor likened to a rat, such as the European desman, Mygale pyrenaica, and the Indian musk-shrew or rat-tailed shrew, Sorex indicus or Crocidura cærulea, also called Indian muskrat and monjourou.—3. A viverrine quadruped, the South African genet, Genetta felina.—Indian muskrat. Same as monjourou.

mustard (mus′tärd), n. [Early mod. E. also musterd; < ME. mustarde, mostard = D. mostaard, mostart, mosterd, = MLG. mostart, mustert, = MHG. musthart, mostert (G. mostrich), < OF. moustarde, F. moutarde (= Pg. It. mostarda; cf. Sp. mostaza), mustard, orig. pounded mustard-seed mixed with must or vinegar, < OF. moust, < L. mustum, must: see *must*2.] 1. A plant of either of the genera Brassica and Sinapis. The ordinary species are B. nigra, the black mustard; S. alba, the white mustard; and B. arvensis, the wild mustard or charlock. The black and white mustards are largely cultivated in Europe and America for their seed (see def. 2). B. juncea, the Indian mustard, is used for the same purposes. The seed of the charlock is inferior, but yields a good burning-oil. All the species mentioned yield oils fit for lamps or for use as food, and, in Asia especially, the Indian and various other sorts are raised in large quantities for the sake of this product. The leaves of various mustards form excellent antiscorbutic salads. (See Brassica and charlock.) The "tree" which grew from "a grain of mustard-seed," mentioned in Luke xiii. 19, was probably the true mustard, Brassica nigra, which attains in Palestine a height of 10 or even 15 feet; according to Royle and others, the tree meant is Salvadora Persica, a small tree bearing minute berries with pungent seeds, which bear the same name in Arabic as mustard.

1, part of the inflorescence of mustard (Brassica nigra). 2, a leaf. a, flower cut longitudinally, the petals removed. b, a pod.

2. The seed of mustard crushed and sifted (and often adulterated), used in the form of a paste as a condiment, or, in the form of a poultice (sinapism), plaster, or prepared paper (mustard-paper), as a rubefacient.—3. One of numerous mustard-like plants, almost all cruciferous: used with a qualifying word. See names below.—Buckler-mustard. (a) A plant of the cruciferous genus Biscutella, whose seed-vessels assume a buckler-like form in bursting. (b) Clypeola Jonthlaspi.—French mustard, mustard prepared by the addition of salt, sugar, vinegar, etc. It is milder than the ordinary preparation.—Garlic-mustard, an old world crucifer, Alliaria Alliaria, having when bruised the scent of garlic.—Mithridate mustard†. (a) Properly, the mithridate pepperwort, Lepidium campestre. (b) Sometimes, erroneously, the pennycress, Thlaspi arvense. Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant-Names.—Oil of mustard, allylisothiocyanate, $CS.N.C_3H_5$, a volatile, pungent, and irritating oil formed in mustard by fermentation when it is wet. See myronate.—Tansy-mustard, the American plant Sophia pinnata.—Tower-mustard, Arabis glabra; also, A. Turrita.—Treacle-mustard, a plant of the genus Erysimum, especially E. cheiranthoides.—Wild mustard, the charlock, Brassica arvensis.—Wormseed-mustard, Erysimum cheiranthoides. (See also hedge-mustard.)

My modyr sent to my fadyr to London for a goune cloth of mustyrddevyllers. Paston Letters, III. 214.

mustee (mus-tē′), n. Same as mestee.

Mustela (mus-tē′lȧ), n. [NL., < L. mustela, also mustella, a weasel, also a fish so called, < mus, a mouse, = Gr. μῦς, mouse: see mouse.] The typical genus of Mustelidæ, formerly nearly coextensive with the family, but now restricted; the martens and sables. The species are of medium and rather large size, with moderately stout form; sharp curved claws; tail longer than the head, bushy, terete, or tapering; soles furry with naked pads; pelage full and soft but not shaggy, and not whitening in winter; progression digitigrade; and habits arboreal and terrestrial, not fossorial or aquatic. There are 38 teeth, or 4 more than in Putorius, and the lower sectorial tooth usually has an additional cusp. The leading species are the marten or pine-marten, M. martes or abietum; the beech-, stone-, or white-breasted marten, M. foina; the Russian sable, M. zibellina; the American sable, M. americana; and the fisher, pekan, or Pennant's marten, M. pennanti. See cuts under marten and fisher, 2.

Mustelidæ1 (mus-tel′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Mustela + -idæ.] A family of arctoid fissiped carnivorous quadrupeds of the order Feræ, suborder Fissipedia, and series Arctoidea, typified by the genus Mustela, having only one true molar in the upper jaw, and one or two in the lower jaw, with the last upper premolar normally sectorial. The family is represented in most parts of the globe, except the Australian region, and reaches its highest development in the northern hemisphere. There are about 20 genera, representing 8 subfamilies: Mustelinæ, martens, weasels, etc.; Mellivorinæ, ratels; Melinæ, badgers; Helictidinæ; Zorillinæ, African skunks; Mephitinæ, American skunks; Lutrinæ, otters; and Enhydrinæ, sea-otters. See cuts under marten, badger, Helictis, skunk, Enhydris, and otter.

Mustelidæ2 (mus-tel′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Mustelus + -idæ.] A family of sharks, typified by the genus Mustelus, having a nictitating membrane, and the small teeth frequently so set as to form a kind of pavement. The group is now commonly regarded as a subfamily of Galeorhinidæ or Carchariidæ. See cuts under Galeorhinus and Carcharinus.

mustelidan (mus-tel′i-dan), n. A shark of the family Mustelidæ. Sir J. Richardson.

Mustelina1 (mus-tē-lī′nȧ), n. pl. [NL., < Mustela + *-ina*2.] 1. Same as *Mustelinæ*1. J. E. Gray.

Mustelina2 (mus-tē-lī′nȧ), n. pl. [NL., < Mustelus + *-ina*2.] A group of Carchariidæ: same as *Mustelinæ*2. Günther.

Mustelinæ1 (mus-tē-lī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Mustela + -inæ.] The leading subfamily of Mustelidæ, typified by the genus Mustela. The teeth are 38 or 34, according to the number of premolars, and of unequal numbers in the two jaws. The upper molar is single on each side and of much greater width than length, or with the longest axis transverse. The back upper premolar is the large sectorial tooth; the first lower molar is sectorial, followed by a tubercular molar. The postorbital process is moderately developed; the anteorbital foramen is small. The bony palate is produced far back of the molars, the posterior nares are thrown into one, and the auditory bullæ are much inflated. The feet have bent phalanges and retractile claws; the digits are slightly or not at all webbed; and progression is digitigrade or subplantigrade. The external appearance and the economy of the species are very variable, for they range from the smallest and most slender of weasels to the great, stout, shaggy wolverene. There are 4 leading genera: Gulo, Galictis, Mustela, and Putorius, or the wolverenes, grisons, martens, and weasels. See cuts under wolverene, Galictis, galera, and marten.

Mustelinæ2 (mus-tē-lī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Mustelus + -inæ.] A subfamily of sharks of the family Galeorhinidæ or Carchariidæ, corresponding to *Mustelidæ*2. It contains the common spineless dogfishes of Europe and North America and some other related small sharks.

musteline1 (mus′tē-lin), a. and n. [= It. mustellino, < L. mustelinus, mustellinus, belonging to a weasel, < mustela, a weasel. see Mustela.] I. a. 1. (c) In some Eastern countries, a dumb porter or doorkeeper, usually one who has been deprived of speech.

Either our history shall with full mouth
Speak freely of our acts, or else our grave,
Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongueless mouth,
Not worshipp'd with a waxen epitaph.
Shak., Hen. V., i. 2. 232.

(d) In theaters, one whose part is confined to dumb-show; also, a spectator; a looker-on.

You that look pale and tremble at this chance,
That are but mutes or audience to this act.
Shak., Hamlet, v. 2. 345.

(e) In law, a person who makes no response when arraigned and called on to plead or answer.

To the Indictment here upon he [John Biddle] prays Council might be allowed him to plead the illegality of it; which being denied him by the Judges, and the Sentence of a mute threatened, he at length gave into Court his Exceptions ingrossed in Parchment.
Wood, Athenæ Oxon., II. 304.

2. In gram. and philol., an alphabetic utterance involving a complete closure of the mouth-organs; a check; a stop; an explosive. The name is especially appropriate as applied to the surd or breathed consonants, t, p, k, since these involve a momentary suspension of utterance, no audible sound being produced during the continuance of the closure, whose character is shown only by its explosion upon a following sound, or, much more imperfectly, by its implosion upon a preceding sound; but it is also commonly given to the corresponding sonant or voiced consonants, d, b, g, and even to the nasals, n, m, ng.

3. In music: (a) In stringed musical instruments of the viol family, a clip or weight of brass, wood, or ivory that can be slipped over the bridge so as to deaden the resonance without touching the strings; a sordino. (b) In metal wind-instruments, a pear-shaped leathern pad which can be inserted into the bell to check the emission of the tone.

mute[1] (mūt), v. t.; pret. and pp. muted, ppr. muting. [< mute[1], n.] 1. In music, to deaden or muffle the sound of, as an instrument. See mute[1], n., 3.

Beethoven mutes the strings of the orchestra in the slow movement of his 3rd and 5th P. F. Concertos.
Grove's Dict. Music, II. 439.

Her voice was musically thrilling in that low muted tone of the very heart, impossible to deride or disbelieve.
G. Meredith, The Egoist, xxxv.

2. To check fermentation in. See mutage.

mute[2]† (mūt), v. [Also meute (and moult, molt, mout), < L. mutare, change, contr. of movitare,* freq. of movere, move: see move. Cf. molt[2], mew[3].] I. intrans. To change the feathers; mew; molt, as a bird.

J. Fergusson, Hist. Indian Arch., p. 141.

2. Figuratively, to excise, erase, or expunge any important part from, so as to render incomplete or imperfect, as a record or a poem.

As I haue declared you before in my preface, I will not in any worde wyllinglye mangle or mutilate that honourable man's worke. Sir T. More, Works, p. 1291.

Among the mutilated poets of antiquity, there is none whose fragments are so beautiful as those of Sappho.
Addison.

=Syn. 1. Mutilate, Maim, Cripple, Mangle, Disfigure. Mutilate emphasizes the injury to completeness and to beauty: as, to mutilate a statue. Maim and cripple note the injury to the use of the members of the body, maim suggesting perhaps more of unsightliness, pain, and actual loss of members, and cripple more directly emphasizing the diminished power of action: as, crippled in the left arm. Mangle expresses a badly hacked or torn condition: as, a mangled finger or arm. Disfigure covers simply such changes of the external form as injure its appearance or beauty: one may be fearfully mangled in battle, so as to be disfigured for life, and yet finally escape being mutilated or maimed, or even crippled.—2. Mutilate, Garble, Misquote. To mutilate is to take parts of a thing, so as to leave it imperfect or incomplete; to garble is to take parts of a thing in such a way as to make them convey a false impression; to misquote is to quote incorrectly, whether intentionally or not: as, to mutilate a hymn; to garble a passage from an official report; to garble another's words; to misquote a text of Scripture. Garble has completely lost its primary meaning.

mutilate (mū'ti-lāt), a. and n. [= F. mutilé = Pg. mutilado = It. mutilato, < L. mutilatus, pp. of mutilare: see mutilate, v.] I. a. 1†. Same as mutilated.

Mutilla (mū-til'ä), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1758).] The typical genus of Mutillidæ, characterized by the simple antennæ of both sexes, and the ovate eyes, more or less acutely emarginate in the male. It is a very large and wide-spread genus, of which about 50 European and 25 American species are catalogued. M. occidentalis is said to dig deep holes and store them with insects. The larval habits are imperfectly known.

Mutillidæ (mū-til'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Mutilla + -idæ.] A family of fossorial hymenopterous insects founded by Leach in 1817, known as solitary ants. The females are wingless, without ocelli, and armed with a powerful sting; the males are winged with few exceptions. About 150 species are known in the United States; they are most abundant in the South. Their habits are mainly diurnal, though the African species of Dorylus are nocturnal. Nearly all the species make a creaking noise when alarmed. This is produced by the friction of the abdominal segments. About a dozen genera have been described. A common Texan species is known as the cow-killer ant. Also called Mutilladæ, Mutillariæ, Mutillida, Mutillides, Mutillites.

mutilous† (mū'ti-lus), a. [= It. mutilo, < L. mutilus, maimed: see mutilate, v.] Mutilated; defective; imperfect. [Rare.]

myall, myall-tree (mī′ąl, mī′ąl-trē), n. [Nat. Australian.] One of several Australian acacias. The Victorian myall is Acacia homalophylla. It has a dark-brown wood, sought for turners' work, and used particularly for tobacco-pipes; from its fragrance the wood is sometimes called violet-wood. Another myall is A. acuminata of western Australia, its wood scented like raspberry, and making durable posts and excellent charcoal. Others are A. pendula and A. glaucescens, the latter prettily grained but less fragrant.

Myaria (mī-ā′ri-ą), n. pl. [NL.: see Mya[1].] A family of bivalves: same as Myidæ in its more comprehensive sense. [Formerly in general use, but now abandoned.]

myarian (mī-ā′ri-an), a. and n. [< Myaria + -an.] I. a. Pertaining to or resembling a clam; of or pertaining to the Myaria.

★ II. n. A clam, or some similar bivalve.

myasthenia (mī-as-the-nī′ą), n. [< Gr. μῦς, muscle, + ἀσθένεια, weakness: see asthenia.] Muscular debility.

myasthenic (mī-as-then′ik), a. Affected with myasthenia.

mycchet†, n. See mitch.

mycele (mī-sēl′), n. [< NL. mycelium.] Same as mycelium.

mycelial (mī-sē′li-ąl), a. [< mycelium + -al.] Of or pertaining to mycelium.—Mycelial layer. Same as membranous mycelium.—Mycelial strand. Same as fibrous mycelium.

mycelioid (mī-sē′li-oid), a. [< NL. myceli(um) + -oid.] In bot., resembling a mycelium.

mycelium (mī-sē′li-um), n. [NL., < Gr. μύκης, a fungus, + ἤλος, nail, wart, an excrescence on a plant.] The vegetative part of the thallus of fungi, composed of one or more hyphæ. The vegetative system of fungi consists of filiform branched or unbranched cells called hyphæ, and the hyphæ collectively form the mycelium. Also mycele. See cuts under Fungi, mold, mildew, ergot, and haustorium.—Fibrillose mycelium. Same as fibrous mycelium.—Fibrous mycelium, mycelium in which the hyphæ form, by their union, elongated branching strands.—Filamentous mycelium, mycelium of free hyphæ which are at most loosely interwoven with one another, but without forming bodies of definite shape and outline. De Bary.—Floccose mycelium. Same as filamentous mycelium.—Membranous mycelium. See membranous.

Mycetales (mī-sē-tā′lēz), n. pl. [NL. (Berkeley, 1857), < Mycetes[2].] A former division of cryptogamous plants, including fungi and lichens.

Mycetes[1] (mī-sē′tēz), n. [NL., < Gr. μυκητής, a bellower, < μυκᾶσθαι, bellow; cf. L. mugire, bellow: see mugient.] The typical and only genus of Mycetinæ, established by Illiger in 1811; the howlers: a synonym of Alouatta of prior date. There are several species, as M. ursinus, inhabiting the forests of tropical America from Guatemala to Paraguay. See cut under howler.

Mycetes[2] (mī-sē′tēz), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. μύκητες, pl. of μύκης, a fungus, mushroom.] The plants now called Fungi: a term proposed by Link.

Mycetinæ (mī-sē-tī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Mycetes[1] + -inæ.] A subfamily of Cebidæ, represented by the genus Mycetes; the howling monkeys, howlers, or alouates. They are platyrrhine monkeys of tropical America, having the cerebrum so short that it leaves the cerebellum exposed behind, the incisors vertical, and the hyoid bone and larynx enormously developed, the former being expanded and excavated into a hollow drum, a conformation which gives extraordinary strength and resonance of voice. They are the largest of American monkeys, nearly 3 feet in length of head and body, including legs, with long prehensile tail and non-apposable thumb.

mycetogenetic (mī-sē″tō-jē-net′ik), a. In bot., produced by fungi.

Phenomena of deformation by Fungi may be termed mycetogenetic metamorphosis. De Bary, Fungi (trans.), p. 368.

mycetogenous (mī-sē-toj′e-nus), a. [< Gr. μύκης (μυκητ-), a fungus, + -γενης, producing: see -genous.] Producing fungi.

mycetology (mī-sē-tol′ọ-ji), n. [< Gr. μύκης (μυκητ-), a fungus, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The science of fungi: same as mycology.

mycetoma (mī-sē-tō′mą), n. [NL., < Gr. μύκης (μυκητ-), a fungus, + -oma.] 1. A chronic disease of the feet and hands occurring in Hindustan. The foot (or hand) becomes riddled with sinuses which discharge pale-yellow masses of minute bodies resembling fish-roe (pale or ochroid form of mycetoma), or dark masses resembling gunpowder (dark or melanoid form). In the latter the fungus Chionyphe Carteri has been found. The disease lasts for decades, and the only relief seems to be in the amputation of the affected member. Also called Madura foot, Madura disease, fungus disease, and fungus-foot of India.

2. [cap.] In entom., a genus of coleopterous insects.

mycetophagid (mī-sē-tof′ą-jid), a. and n. I. a. Of or relating to the Mycetophagidæ.

II. n. One of the Mycetophagidæ.

Mycetophagidæ (mī-sē-tọ-faj′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Mycetophagus + -idæ.] A family of clavicorn Coleoptera, typified by the genus Mycetophagus. They have the dorsal segments of the abdomen partly membranous, the ventral segments free, the tarsi four-jointed, the wings not fringed with hair, the anterior coxæ oval and separated by the corneous prosternum, the head free, and the body depressed. The species live in fungi and under the bark of trees. The family is small, but of wide distribution, containing about 10 genera and less than 100 species. The beetles of this family are sometimes distinguished as hairy fungus-beetles from the Erotylidæ, in which case the latter are called smooth fungus-beetles.

mycetophagous (mī-sē-tof′ą-gus), a. [< NL. Mycetophagus, < Gr. μύκης (μυκητ-), a fungus, + φαγεῖν, eat.] Feeding on fungi; fungivorous.

Mycetophagus (mī-sē-tof′ą-gus), n. [NL. (Hellwig, 1792): see mycetophagous.] The typical genus of Mycetophagidæ. About 30 species are known; all feed on fungi; 12 inhabit North America, and the rest are found in temperate Europe.

Mycetophila (mī-sē-tof′i-lą), n. [NL., < Gr. μύκης (μυκητ-), a fungus, + φίλος, loving.] 1. The typical genus of Mycetophilidæ, founded by Meigen in 1803. The larvæ live in fungi and decaying wood. The genus is large and wide-spread; over 100 species are European, and 20 are described from North America. Also Mycethophila, Mycetophyla.

2. A genus of tenebrionine beetles, erected by Gyllenhal in 1810, and comprising a number of European and North American species, 14 of which inhabit the United States. The genus is the same as Mycetocharis of Latreille, 1825, and the latter name is commonly used, Mycetophila being preoccupied in Diptera.

Mycetophilidæ (mī-sē-tọ-fil′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Mycetophila + -idæ.] A family of nemocerous dipterous insects, typified by the genus Mycetophila; the agaric-gnats, fungus-gnats, or fungus-midges. There are many hundred species, of small or minute size, agile and saltatorial, having few-veined wings without discal cell, long coxæ, spurred tibiæ, and usually ocelli. The larvæ are long slender grubs, like worms, and feed on fungi, whence the name. Also Mycetophilides, Mycetophilinæ, Mycetophiloidæ.

Mycetozoa (mī-sē-tō-zō′ą), n. pl. [NL., pl. of mycetozoön.] A group of fungus-like organisms, amounting at the present time to nearly 300 species. The larger number of them are contained in the division Myxomycetes, or slime-fungi, together with the smaller one distinguished by Van Tieghem under the name of Acrasieæ. (De Bary.) Their nutrition is saprophytic, and the organs of reproduction are sufficiently like those of fungi to allow the same terminology to be applied to them. The vegetative body, however, differs widely, being a naked protoplasmic mass. See Myxomycetes.

mycetozoön (mī-sē-tō-zō′on), n. [NL., < Gr. μύκης (μυκητ-), a fungus, + ζῷον, animal.] Any member of the Mycetozoa.

> The naked protoplasm of the Mycetozoon's plasmodium. Encyc. Brit., XIX. 832.

mycoderm (mī′kō-dėrm), n. [< Mycoderma, q. v.] A fungus of the genus Mycoderma.

Mycoderma (mī-kō-dėr′mą), n. [NL., < Gr. μύκης, a fungus, + δέρμα, skin: see derm.] A genus or form-genus under which certain fungi found forming a film on the surface of beer and wine are known.

mycodermatoid (mī-kō-dėr′ma-toid), a. [< Mycoderma(t-) + -oid.] Same as mycodermic.

mycodermic (mī-kō-dėr′mik), a. [< Mycoderma + -ic.] Of or pertaining to the genus Mycoderma.

mycodermitis (mī″kō-dėr-mī′tis), n. [NL., < Gr. μύκος, mucus, + δέρμα, skin, + -itis.] Inflammation of a mucous membrane.

mycologic (mī-kō-loj′ik), a. [< mycolog-y + -ic.] Same as mycological.

mycological (mī-kō-loj′i-kąl), a. [< mycologic + -al.] Relating to mycology, or to the fungi.

mycologically (mī-kō-loj′i-kąl-i), adv. In a mycological manner; from a mycological point of view.

mycologist (mī-kol′ō-jist), n. [< mycolog-y + -ist.] One who is versed in mycology.

mycology (mī-kol′ō-ji), n. [= F. mycologie; < Gr. μύκης, a fungus, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The science of fungi, their structure, affinities, classification, etc. Also called fungology and mycetology.

mycophagist (mī-kof′ą-jist), n. [< mycophag-y + -ist.] One who eats fungi.

mycophagy (mī-kof′ą-ji), n. [< Gr. μύκης, a fungus, + -φαγία, < φαγεῖν, eat.] The eating of fungi.

> The divine art of mycophagy reached a good degree of cultivation. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXXIV. 408.

mycoprotein (mī-kō-prō′tē-in), n. [< Gr. μύκης, a fungus, + E. protein.] A gelatinous albuminoid compound closely allied to protoplasm, of which the putrefaction-bacteria are composed.

> The bacteria consist of a nitrogenous, highly refractive, usually colorless substance, protoplasm or mycoprotein, imbedded in which glistening, oily-looking granules can sometimes be observed.
> W. T. Redfield, Relations of Micro-Organisms to Disease, [p. 5.

★mycorhiza (mī-kō-rī′zą), n. [< Gr. μύκης, a fungus, + ῥίζα, root.] A fungus-mycelium which invests the roots of certain phanerogams, especially Fagaceæ and some other plants. It is believed to aid them in absorbing nutriment from the soil—a case of symbiosis. See symbiosis.

mycose (mī′kōs), n. [< Gr. μύκης, a fungus, + -ose.] A peculiar kind of sugar ($C_{12}H_{22}O_{11} + 2H_2O$) contained in the ergot of rye, and also in trehala manna, produced by a species of insect found in the East. It is soluble in water, does not reduce copper-solutions, and is converted by acids into a fermentable sugar. Also called trehalose.

mycosis (mī-kō′sis), n. [NL., < Gr. μύκης, a fungus, + -osis.] 1. The presence of fungi as parasites in or on any portion of the body.—2. The presence of parasitic fungi together with the morbid effects of their presence; the disease caused by them.

mycotic (mī-kot′ik), a. [< mycosis (-ot-) + -ic.] Of or pertaining to mycosis. Lancet.

Mycteria (mik-tē′ri-ą), n. [NL., < Gr. μυκτήρ, nose, snout, < μύσσεσθαι (in comp.), blow the nose; cf. L. mungere, blow the nose: see mucus.] A genus of storks, of the family Ciconiidæ and the subfamily Ciconiinæ, having the head and neck mostly bare of feathers, and the bill enormously large and recurved. M. americana is the jabiru. Certain Old World storks are sometimes included in Mycteria, sometimes called Xenorhynchus and Ephippiorhynchus. See cut under jabiru.

mydaleine (mī-dā′lē-in), n. [< Gr. μυδαλέος, wet, dripping, < μυδᾶν, be damp or wet: see Mydaus.] A poisonous ptomaine obtained from putrefying liver and other organs.

Mydas, n. See Midas[2].

Mydasidæ (mī-das′i-dē), n. pl. Same as Mididæ, 2.

Mydaus (mid′ą-us), n. [NL., irreg. < Gr. μυδᾶν, be damp or wet, < μύδος, damp, wet, clamminess, decay.] A genus of fetid badgers, of the family Mustelidæ and subfamily Melinæ, including the stinking badger of Java, or Javanese skunk, M. javanensis or M. meliceps. See teledu.

mydding†, n. An obsolete spelling of midding.

mydget, n. An obsolete spelling of midge.

mydriasis (mi-drī′ą-sis), n. [L., < Gr. μυδρίασις, ★undue enlargement of the pupil of the eye.] In med., a morbid dilatation of the pupil of the eye.

mydriatic (mid-ri-at′ik), a. and n. [< mydri(asis) + -atic[2].] I. a. Pertaining to or causing mydriasis.

II. n. A drug which causes mydriasis.

myelasthenia (mī-el-as-the-nī′ą), n. [NL., < Gr. μυελός, marrow, + ἀσθένεια, weakness: see asthenia.] In pathol., spinal exhaustion; spinal neurasthenia.

myelatrophia (mī″el-a-trō′fi-ą), n. [NL., < Gr. μυελός, marrow, + ἀτροφία, atrophy: see atrophy.] In pathol., atrophy of the spinal cord.

Myelencephala (mī″el-en-sef′ą-lą), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of myelencephalus: see myelencephalous.] In Owen's classification, same as Vertebrata. [Not in use.]

myelencephalic (mī-el-en-se-fal′ik or -sef′ą-lik), a. [< myelencephal-on + -ic.] 1. Of or pertaining to the cerebrospinal axis; cerebrospinal.—2. Of or pertaining to the medulla oblongata. See myelencephalon.—3. Same as myelencephalous.

myelencephalon (mī″el-en-sef′ą-lon), n. [NL., < Gr. μυελός, marrow, + ἐγκέφαλος, brain: see encephalon.] 1. The cerebrospinal axis; the brain and spinal cord taken together and considered as a whole. Owen.—2. The hindmost segment of the encephalon; the afterbrain or metencephalon, more commonly called the medulla oblongata. See cuts under encephalon and brain. Huxley.

myelencephalous (mī″el-en-sef′ą-lus), a. [< NL. myelencephalus, < Gr. μυελός, marrow, + ἐγκέφαλος, brain: see encephalon.] Having a brain and spinal cord; cerebrospinal. Also myelencephalic.

★myelin, myeline (mī′e-lin), n. [< Gr. μυελός, marrow, + -in[2], -ine[2].] In anat., the white substance of Schwann, or medullary sheath of a nerve.

myelitic (mī-e-lit′ik), a. [< myelitis + -ic.] Of or pertaining to myelitis; affected with myelitis.

★myelitis (mī-e-lī′tis), n. [NL., < Gr. μυελός, marrow, + -itis.] In pathol., inflammation of the spinal cord.—Anterior cornual myelitis. See cornual.

myelocele (mī′e-lō-sēl), n. [< Gr. μυελός, marrow, + κήλη, tumor.] A variety of spina bifida.

myelocerebellar (mī″e-lō-ser-ē-bel′ąr), a. [< Gr. μυελός, marrow, + L. cerebellum, cerebellum: see cerebellar.] Pertaining to the cerebellum and the spinal cord: as, the myelocerebellar tract.

myelocœle (mī′e-lō-sēl), n. [NL., < Gr. μυελός, marrow, + κοῖλος, hollow.] The entire cavity of the myelon or spinal cord, consisting primitively of a syringocœle with a posterior dilatation termed rhomboccœle. See cut under spinal.

myelocyte (mī′e-lō-sīt), n. [< Gr. μυελός, marrow, + κύτος, cell.] A bone-marrow cell; also a cell in gray nervous matter.

myelohyphæ (mī″el-ō-hī′fē), n. pl. [NL., prop. myelyphæ*, < Gr. μυελός, marrow, + ὑφή, web: see hypha.] The hyphæ of lichens, which are rigid, elastic, containing lichenine, not becoming putrid by maceration, with no faculty of penetrating or involving, while the hyphæ of fungi are ★caducous, soft, flexile, with thin walls, etc.

myeloid (mī′e-loid), a. [= F. myéloïde, < Gr. μυελοειδής*, contr. μυελώδης, like marrow, < μυελός, ★marrow, + εἶδος, form.] Medullary.

★myeloma (mī-e-lō′mą), n.; pl. myelomata (-ma-tą). [NL., < Gr. μυελός, marrow, + -oma.] A giant-celled sarcoma.

myelomalacia (mī″e-lō-ma-lā′si-ą), n. [NL., < Gr. μυελός, marrow, + μαλακία, softness: see malacia.] In pathol., softening of the spinal cord.

myelomeningitis (mī″e-lō-men-in-jī′tis), n. [NL., < Gr. μυελός, marrow, + NL. meningitis, q. v.] In pathol., spinal meningitis.

myelon (mī′e-lon), n. [NL., < Gr. μυελόν, neut., earlier μυελός, m., marrow.] The spinal cord; the part of the cerebrospinal axis which is not the brain. See cuts under spine, spinal, and Pharyngobranchii.

myelonal (mī′e-lon-ąl), a. [< myelon + -al.] Of or pertaining to the myelon.

myelonic (mī-e-lon′ik), a. [< myelon + -ic.] Same as myelonal. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 680.

myeloplax (mī′e-lō-plaks), n. [< Gr. μυελός, marrow, + πλάξ, anything flat and broad.] A large multinucleated protoplasmic mass, occurring in the marrow, especially in the neighborhood of the osseous substance. These masses, also called osteoclasts or giant cells, are concerned in the process of bone-absorption.

Myelozoa (mī″e-lō-zō′ą), n. pl. [NL. (Geoffroy St. Hilaire, 1852), < Gr. μυελός, marrow, + ζῷον, an animal.] A class of vertebrated animals with a spinal cord or myelon, but no brain or skull. They are the acranial or acephalous vertebrates, represented by the lancelet or amphioxus. See cuts under lancelet.

myelozoan (mī″e-lō-zō′ąn), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Myelozoa.

II. n. A member of the Myelozoa.

Mygale (mig′ą-lē), n. [NL., < F. mygale, < L. mygale, < Gr. μυγαλῆ, μυγαλέη, μυογάλη, field-mouse, < μῦς, mouse, + γαλέη, γαλῆ, a weasel.] 1. A Cuvierian genus of insectivorous quadrupeds, the desmans: later changed to Myogale or Myogalia. Cuvier, 1850.—2. The leading genus formerly of the now disused family Mygalidæ. This genus included the very largest and hairiest spiders, in the United States known as tarantulas, a name which in Europe belongs to quite a different kind. The common tarantula of the southwestern United States was called M. hentzi, a hairy brown species of large size and much dreaded. M. avicularia is a former name of the South American bird-spider, able to prey upon small birds, but under this designation several large hairy spiders have been confounded. It is now placed in the genus Eurypelma. M. javanica and M. sumatrensis inhabit the countries whence their names are derived. They inhabit tubular holes in the ground, under stones, or beneath the bark of trees. The bite is very painful and even dangerous. See cuts under Araneida, arachnidial, and chelicera. Latreille, 1802.

Texas Tarantula (Eurypelma hentzi), half natural size.

Mygalidæ (mī-gal′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Mygale + -idæ.] A former family of spiders, typified by the genus Mygale. It included the largest known spiders, with four pulmonary sacs, eight eyes clustered together, and great mandibles which work up and down. Mygale, Cteniza, and Atypus were leading genera. The American tarantulas, the trap-door spiders, and others belonged to this family. Synonymous with Theraphosidæ. See Territelaria.

Mygalina (mig-ą-lī′nä), n. pl. Same as Myogalinæ.

myght†, myghte†. Obsolete spellings of might[1], might[2].

myghty†, a. An obsolete spelling of mighty.

mygrane†, mygreyne†, n. Middle English forms of migraine, for megrim.

Myiadestes (mī″i-ą-des′tēz), n. [NL., improp. for Myiedestes*, < Gr. μυῖα, a fly, + ἐδεστής, an eater, < ἐδειν = L. edere = E. eat.] The leading genus of Myiadestinæ, containing most of the species. M. townsendi inhabits the western part of the United States. It is of a dull brownish-ash color, paler below, the wings blackish with tawny variegations, the tail blackish, some of the feathers tipped with white, the bill and feet black, the eye surrounded with a white ring. The bird is 8 inches long, the wing and tail each about 4¼. It is an exquisite songster, and nests on the ground or near it, building a loose nest of grasses, and laying about four eggs of a bluish-white color with reddish freckles, 0.95 of an inch long by 0.67 broad. Several other species inhabit the warmer parts of America.

Myiadestinæ (mī″i-ą-des-tī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Myiadestes + -inæ.] An American subfamily of oscine passerine birds, typified by the genus Myiadestes, usually referred to the Turdidæ, but also placed in the Ampelidæ; the fly-catching thrushes. The bill is short, much depressed, wide at base, and deeply cleft. The feet are small, with booted tarsi and deeply cleft toes, of which the lateral ones are of unequal length. There are ten primaries, the first spurious, and twelve narrow tapering rectrices; the tail is double-rounded; the head is subcrested; the plumage is somber, spotted in the young; the sexes are alike. There are about 12 species, belonging to the genera Myiadestes, Cichlopsis, and Platycichla, all but one of them inhabiting Central America, South America, and the West Indies. They are frugivorous and insectivorous, and highly musical.

myiadestine (mī″i-ą-des′tin), a. Pertaining to the Myiadestinæ, or having their characters.

Myiagra (mī-i-ag′rą), n. [NL., < Gr. μυῖα, a fly, + ἄγρα, hunting (taking).] The typical genus of Myiagrinæ, founded by Vigors and Horsfield in 1826. It contains some 20 species of small flycatchers with very broad flat bills and copious rictal vibrissæ, inhabiting the Austromalayan and Oceanian regions. M. rubicula is a characteristic example.

Myiagrinæ (mī″i-a-grī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Myiagra + -inæ.] A subfamily of Muscicapidæ, typified by the genus Myiagra, named by Cabanis in 1850.

Myiarchus (mī-i-är′kus), n. [NL., < Gr. μυῖα, a fly, + ἀρχός, a leader, chief, commander.] A notable genus of tyrant flycatchers of the family Tyrannidæ. It is attypically of olivaceous coloration with yellow belly and dusky wings and tail, both varied with rufous tints, and no colored patch on the crown, which is slightly crested. There are numerous species, inhabiting America from Canada to Paraguay, known as ash-throated or rufous-tailed flycatchers. The best-known is the common great crested flycatcher of the United States, M. crinitus, which is abundant in woodlands, is of quarrelsome disposition, has a loud harsh voice, and habitually uses snake-skins in its nest. M. cinerescens is a similar species of the southwestern parts of the United States. M. lawrenci is a much smaller species of Texas and Mexico. M. validus inhabits the West Indies, and there are many others in subtropical and tropical America.

Myidæ (mī′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Mya[1] + -idæ.] A family of dimyarian bivalves, typified by the genus Mya, to which various limits have been assigned. As most restricted, it comprises those which have the mantle open in front only for the foot and extended backward into a sheath covered by a rugous epidermis for the siphons, which are elongate and united to near their ends; the foot small and linguiform; the two pairs of branchiæ elongated, but not extended into the branchial siphon; the shell inequivalve, having submedian umbones, gaping at the ends, its left or smallest valve provided with a flattened cartilage process; and the pallial sinus deeply excavated. It is a group of generally large bivalves, some of which are of considerable economical value. They are known as cobs, clams, gaping-clams, and gapers. Also Myadæ, Myacea.

Myiodioctes (mī″i-ō-di-ok′tēz), n. [NL., < Gr. μυῖα, a fly, + δώκτης, a pursuer: see Dioctes.] A genus of fly-catching warblers of the family Sylvicolidæ and the subfamily Setophaginæ, founded by Audubon in 1839. Three species are well-known and abundant birds of the United States. These are the hooded warbler, M. mitratus; the Canadian, M. canadensis; and Wilson's black-capped, M. pusillus.

Wilson's Black-capped Fly-catching Warbler (Myiodioctes pusillus).

myitis (mī-i′tis), n. [NL., < Gr. μῦς, a muscle, + -itis.] In pathol., inflammation of a muscle. Also, improperly, myositis.

mylt, n. An obsolete spelling of mill[1].

Mylabridæ (mī-lab′ri-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Leach, 1817), < Mylabris + -idæ.] A family of blister-beetles named from the genus Mylabris, now usually merged in Cantharidæ.

Mylabris (mil′a-bris), n. [NL. (Fabricius, 1775), < Gr. μυλαβρίς, also μυλαγρίς and μυλακρίς, a kind of cockroach in mills and bakehouses, cf. μυλακρίς, a millstone, < μύλη, a mill.] A genus of blister-flies of the family Cantharidæ, or the type of a family Mylabridæ. There are several species possessing vesicatory properties, and used as cantharides, such as M. cichorii and M. indica. The genus is of great extent, with over 250 species, almost confined to the Old World, and distributed through Europe, Asia, and Africa. M. chrysurus and M. dimidiata are the only geographical exceptions, and there is some doubt about their position. The elytra cover the abdomen, the mandibles are short, and the antennæ, inserted above the epistomal suture, are gradually enlarged toward the tip. These beetles are often of large size, and the coloration is yellow bands or spots on a black ground, or vice versa. They fly in the bright sunlight and frequent low ground.

mylet, n. A Middle English form of mile.

Myliobatidæ (mil″i-ō-bat′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Myliobatis + -idæ.] A family of ray-like selachians, typified by the genus Myliobatis; the eagle-rays or whip-rays. (a) A family of masticurous rays with a very broad disk formed by the expanded pectoral fins, cephalic fins developed at the end of the snout, and interlocking hexagonal teeth, set like a pavement in the jaws. About 20 species are known, chiefly from tropical seas. Their broad pointed pectoral-like wings give them the name eagle-ray, and from the whip-like tail armed with a spine near the base they are called whip-rays and sting-rays, but they are not to be confounded with true sting-rays of the family Trygonidæ. (b) In Günther's system, a family of Batoidei, containing Myliobatidæ (a) and Cephalopteridæ.

myliobatine (mil-i-ob′a-tin), a. Pertaining to the Myliobatidæ, or having their characters.

Myliobatis (mil-i-ob′a-tis), n. [NL., < Gr. μυλίας (sc. λίθος, a stone), a millstone (< μύλη, mill, millstone: see mill[1]), + βατίς, a flat fish, the skate.] The typical genus of Myliobatidæ, with tessellated teeth adapted for grinding, whence the name. M. aquila is an example. See cut under eagle-ray.

myliobatoid (mil-i-ob′a-toid), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to the Myliobatidæ, or having their characters.

II. n. One of the Myliobatidæ.

mylle†, n. An obsolete spelling of mill[1].

mylnert, n. An obsolete form of miller.

Mylodon (mī′lō-don), n. [NL., < MGr. μυλόδους (-οδοντ-), a molar tooth, a grinder, < Gr. μύλη, a mill, + ὀδούς (ὀδοντ-) = E. tooth.] 1. A genus of gigantic extinct sloths from the Pleistocene, Skeleton of Mylodon.

having teeth more or less cylindrical and in structure resembling those of the extant sloths. M. robustus is a well-known species from South America. The animal was large enough to browse on the foliage of trees.

2. [l. c.] An animal of this genus.

mylodont (mī′lō-dont), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to the mylodons, or having their characters.

II. n. A mylodon.

myloglossus (mī-lō-glos′us), n.; pl. myloglossi (-ī). [NL., < Gr. μύλη, a mill, a molar tooth, a grinder, + γλῶσσα, the tongue.] A muscular slip accessory to the styloglossus, passing from the angle of the jaw or the stylomaxillary ligament to the tongue.

mylohyoid (mī-lō-hī′oid), a. and n. [< Gr. μύλη, a mill, a molar tooth, + E. hyoid.] I. a. Pertaining to the molar teeth and to the hyoid bone.—Mylohyoid artery, a branch of the inferior dental, which runs in the mylohyoid groove and ramifies under the mylohyoid muscle.—Mylohyoid groove and ridge, a groove and a ridge along the inner surface of the lower jaw-bone in the course of the mylohyoid vessels and nerve.—Mylohyoid muscle, the mylohyoid. See cut under muscle.—Mylohyoid nerve, a branch of the inferior dental accompanying the artery of the same name to the mylohyoid muscle and the anterior belly of the digastric.

II. n. The mylohyoideus, or the mylohyoid muscle, which extends between the mylohyoid ridge on the under jaw-bone and the hyoid bone, forming much of the muscular floor of the mouth.

mylohyoidean (mī″lō-hī-oi′dē-an), a. Same as mylohyoid.

mylohyoideus (mī″lō-hī-oi′dē-us), n.; pl. mylohyoidei (-ī). [NL.: see mylohyoid.] The mylohyoid muscle.

Mymar (mī′mär), n. [NL., < Gr. μῦμαρ, a dial. form of μῶμαρ, for μῶμος, blame, Momus: see Momus.] The typical genus of Mymarinæ. They have the tarsi four-jointed, the abdomen distinctly petiolate, and the anterior wings widened only at the tip. Two species are known, both European. Curtis, 1832.

Mymaridæ (mī-mar′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Mymar + -idæ.] The Mymarinæ rated as a family. Haliday, 1840. Also Mymares, Mymarides, Mymarites.

Mymarinæ (mī-ma-rī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Mymar + -inæ.] A subfamily of the hymenopterous family Proctotrypidæ, containing some of the smallest insects known. The front tibiæ have but one spur, the mandibles are dentate, the antennæ rise above the middle of the face, and the very delicate hind wings are almost linear. These insects are all parasitic, many of them on bark-lice. One of the smallest, Alaptus excisus, measures 0.17 millimeter in length.

mymarine (mī′ma-rin), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to the Mymarinæ, or having their characters.

II. n. A member of the Mymarinæ.

mynt, pron. A Middle English form of mine[1], my.

myna, mynah, n. See mina[2].

mynchen†, n. See minchen.

mynchery†, n. See minchery.

myndet, n. An obsolete spelling of mind[1].

mynet. An obsolete form of mine[1], mine[2].

myngt, v. An obsolete form of ming[1], ming[2].

mynheer (mīn-hār′), n. [< D. mijn heer (= G. mein herr), sir, lit. 'my lord': see my and herr.] 1. The ordinary title of address among Dutchmen, corresponding to mein herr among Germans, and to sir or Mr. in English use. Hence —2. A Dutchman. [Colloq.]

mynnet, a. A Middle English form of min[2].

mynourt, n. A Middle English form of miner.

mynstert, mynstret, n. Middle English forms of minster.

mynstralt, mynstralciet, etc. Middle English forms of minstrel, etc.

myntt. An obsolete form of mint[1], mint[2], mint[3].

myo-atrophy (mī-ō-at′rō-fi), n. [< Gr. μῦς, muscle, + ἀτροφία, atrophy: see atrophy.] Muscular atrophy.

myoblast (mī′ō-blast), n. [< Gr. μῦς, muscle, + βλαστός, germ.] A cell which gives rise to muscular fibers; the formative cell-element of muscular tissue. Myoblasts are sometimes known by the name of neuromuscular cells; and when in sheets or layers they are called muscle-epithelium. A myoblast may be either in part or wholly converted into a muscular fibril.

myoblastic (mī-ō-blas′tik), a. [< myoblast + -ic.] Of or pertaining to myoblasts, or to the process of forming muscle from myoblasts.

myocardial (mī-ō-kär′di-al), a. [< myocardi(um) + -al.] Of or pertaining to the myocardium.

myocarditis (mī″ō-kär-dī′tis), n. [NL., < myocardium + -itis.] In pathol., inflammation of the myocardium.

myocardium (mī-ō-kär′di-um), n. [NL., < Gr. μῦς, muscle, + καρδία = E. heart.] The muscular substance of the heart.

myocomma (mī-ō-kom′ä), n.; pl. myocommata (-a-tä). [NL., < Gr. μῦς (μυός), a muscle, + κόμμα, that which is cut off: see comma.] A primitive division of myoblasts or muscle-epithelium into longitudinal series corresponding to the segments of the axis of the body; a muscular metamere; a myotome. Thus, one of the serial flakes of the flesh of a fish, very obvious when the fish is baked or boiled, is a myocomma. The arrangement is generally obscured by ulterior modifications in the higher vertebrates, but even in man, for example, the series of intercostal muscles between successive ribs, and those between contiguous vertebræ, represent original myocommata.

myocyte (mī′ō-sīt), n. [NL., < Gr. μῦς (μυός), a muscle, + κύτος, a hollow, cell.] A muscle-cell; the formative cellular element of the contractile tissue of most sponges. They are of various shapes, usually slenderly fusiform with long filamentous ends. Sollas, Encyc. Brit., XXII. 419.

Myodes (mī-ō′dēz), n. [NL., < Gr. μυώδης, mouse-like, < μῦς, mouse (= E. mouse), + εἶδος, form.] A genus of lemmings of the family Muridæ and the subfamily Arvicolinæ. The skull is massive and depressed, with a zygomatic width equal to two thirds its length. The species are of small size and stout compact form, with very obtuse hairy muzzle, small ears, short rabbit-like tail, large fore claws, and mollipilose pelage of variegated colors, which does not turn white in winter. They are arctic animals, sometimes swarming in almost incredible numbers. The common or Norway lemming is M. lemmus; that of Siberia is M. obensis, from which the corresponding animal of arctic America is probably distinct. Antedated by Lemmus. The lemmings which turn white in winter belong to a different genus, Dicrostonyx. See cut under lemming.

Myodocha (mī-od′ō-kä), n. [NL. (Latreille, 1807), < Gr. μυοδόχος, harboring mice, < μῦς, mouse, + δέχεσθαι, receive, harbor.] A genus of heteropterous insects, typical of the subfamily Myodochinæ. Four species are known, three of which are Mexican, while the other, M. serripes, is found in the eastern United States.

Myodochinæ (mī-od-ō-kī′nē), n. pl. [NL. (Stål, 1874, as Myodochina), < Myodocha + -inæ.] A subfamily of heteropterous insects of the family Lygæidæ. Thirty-seven genera have been described, of which twenty-six inhabit North America.

myodome (mī′ō-dōm), n. [< Gr. μῦς, a muscle, + δόμος, chamber: see dome[1].] A tubular chamber or recess within the cranium of most osseous fishes for the insertion of the rectus muscles of the eye. It is isolated from the brain-cavity by the development of a platform from the basioccipital continuous with horizontal ridges diverging from the prosotics.

Myodome (muscular tube) developed and the cranial cavity open in front. Gill, Amer. Nat., XXII. 357.

myodynamia (mī″ō-dī-nā′mi-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. μῦς, muscle, + δύναμις, power: see dynamic.] Muscular force.

myodynamics (mī″ō-dī-nam′iks), n. [< Gr. μῦς, muscle, + E. dynamics.] The mechanics of muscular action.

myodynamometer (mī-ō-dī-na-mom′e-tėr), n. [< Gr. μῦς, muscle, + E. dynamometer.] An instrument for measuring muscular strength; a dynamometer.

myodynia (mī-ō-din′i-ą), n. [NL., < Gr. μῦς, muscle, + ὀδύνη, pain.] Same as myalgia.

myofibroma (mī″ō-fī-brō′mą), n.; pl. myofibromata (-ma-tą). [NL., < myo(ma) + fibroma.] A tumor in part myomatous and in part fibromatous.

Myogale (mī-og′a-lē), n. [NL., < Gr. μυογάλη, μυγαλῆ, a shrew-mouse, < μῦς, a mouse, + γαλέη, contr. γαλῆ, a weasel. Cf. Mygale.] The typical genus of the subfamily Myogalinæ, containing the aquatic desmans, musk-moles, musk-shrews, or muskrats of the Old World, M. moschata of Russia and M. pyrenaica of the Pyrenees. The former is the giant of the Talpidæ, some 16 inches long, with a proboscis, webbed feet, and a long scaly tail vertically flat, like that of a muskrat, and used similarly in swimming. In the smaller species the tail is round, and the proboscis still longer. The dental formula of both is 3 incisors, 1 canine, 4 premolars, and 3 molars in each upper and lower half-jaw. Also Mygale and Myogalea. See cut under desman.

Myogalidæ (mī-ō-gal′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Myogale + -idæ.] The Myogalinæ rated as a family of Insectivora. See Myogale, Myogalinæ.

Myogalinæ (mī″ō-ga-lī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Myogale + -inæ.] A subfamily of insectivorous mammals of the family Talpidæ. There is no accessory carpal ossicle, the clavicle and humerus are moderately long, the manubrium sterni is moderate, and the scapula has a metacromion, the fore limbs being thus fitted for simple progression, not specially fossorial. The incisors are fewer than in any other Talpidæ, being 2 in each upper and lower half-jaw, or 2 in each upper and 1 in each lower half-jaw. The group contains the genera (or subgenera) Myogale, Galeospalax, Scaptonyx, Uropsilus, Urotrichus, and Neurotrichus, all but the last confined to the Old World. They are known as desmans, musk-moles, and musk-shrews. Galemyinæ is a synonym. Also Mygalina.

myogaline (mī-og′a-lin), a. Pertaining to the Myogalinæ, or having their characters.

myogenic (mī-ō-jen′ik), a. [< Gr. μῦς, muscle, + γένος, origin.] Of muscular origin.

myoglobulin (mī-ō-glob′ū-lin), n. [< Gr. μῦς, muscle, + E. globulin.] A globulin obtained from muscle. It coagulates at a lower temperature than paraglobulin.

myogram (mī′ō-gram), n. [< Gr. μῦς, muscle, + γράμμα, a writing, a line: see gram[2].] The tracing of a contracting and relaxing muscle drawn by a myograph.

myograph (mī′ō-gråf), n. [< Gr. μῦς, muscle, + γράφειν, write.] An instrument for taking tracings of muscular contractions and relaxations.

myographer (mī-og′ra-fėr), n. [< myograph-y + -er[1].] One who describes muscles or is versed in myography.

myographic (mī-ō-graf′ik), a. [= F. myographique = Pg. myographico = It. miografico; as myograph-y + -ic.] 1. Descriptive of muscles; pertaining to myography.—2. Obtained with a myograph: as, a myographic tracing.

myographical (mī-ō-graf′i-kąl), a. [< myographic + -al.] Same as myographic.

myographically (mī-ō-graf′i-kąl-i), adv. By means of the myograph.

myographion (mī-ō-graf′i-on), n. [NL., < Gr. μῦς, muscle, + γράφειν, write.] A myograph.

myographist (mī-og′ra-fist), n. [< myograph-y + -ist.] A myographer.

myography (mī-og′ra-fi), n. [= F. myographie = Sp. miografía = Pg. myographia = It. miografia, < Gr. μῦς, muscle, + -γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] Descriptive myology; the description of muscles.

myohematin (mī-ō-hem′a-tin), n. [< Gr. μῦς, muscle, + E. hematin.] The red muscle pigment: identical with hemoglobin.

★myoid (mī′oid), a. [< Gr. μυοειδής, contr. μυώδης (cf. Myodes), like a mouse (taken in sense of 'like a muscle'), < μῦς, a mouse, muscle, + εἶδος, form.] Resembling muscle.

myoidema (mī-oi-dē′mą), n. [NL., < Gr. μῦς, muscle, + οἴδημα, a swelling, < οἰδεῖν, swell.] The wheal brought out by a smart tap on a muscle in certain conditions of exhaustion.

myolemma (mī-ō-lem′ą), n. [NL., < Gr. μῦς, muscle, + λέμμα, peel, < λέπειν, peel: see lepis.] Sarcolemma.

myologic (mī-ō-loj′ik), a. [= Pg. myologico = It. miologico; as myolog-y + -ic.] Same as myological.

myological (mī-ō-loj′i-kąl), a. [< myologic + -al.] Of or pertaining to myology.—Myological formula, in ornith., a formulated statement of the presence or absence of certain muscles of the legs of birds, for classificatory purposes, invented by A. H. Garrod, who used the symbols A, B, X, and Y to denote the ambiens, semitendinosus, accessory semitendinosus, and semimembranosus respectively: thus, a bird with the myological formula A, B, X, has the first three of these muscles and lacks the last.

myologist (mī-ol′ō-jist), n. [< myolog-y + -ist.] One who is versed in myology; a myological anatomist.

myology (mī-ol′ō-ji), n. [= F. myologie = Sp. miología = Pg. myologia = It. miologia, < Gr. μῦς, muscle, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The science of muscles; myological anatomy.

> To instance in all the particulars were to write a whole system of myology.
> G. Cheyne, Phil. Prin. of Natural Religion.

myoma (mī-ō′mą), n.; pl. myomata (-ma-tą). [NL., < Gr. μῦς, a muscle, + -oma.] A neoplasm or tumor composed of muscular tissue.—Myoma cavernosum, myoma teleangiectodes.—Myoma lævicellulare, a myoma composed of smooth muscular fiber. Also called liomyoma.—Myoma striocellulare, a myoma composed of striated muscular tissue. Also called rhabdomyoma.—Myoma teleangiectodes, excessively vascular myoma.

myomalacia (mī″ō-ma-lā′si-ą), n. [NL., < Gr. μῦς, muscle, + μαλακία, softness: see malacia.] Morbid softening of a muscle such as might be induced by an embolus of the nutrient artery.—Myomalacia cordis, softening of the myocardium from obstruction of the coronary arteries.

myomancy (mī′ō-man-si), n. [< Gr. μῦς, mouse, + μαντεία, divination, < μάντις, prophet: see Mantis.] A kind of divination or method of foretelling future events by the movements of mice.

> Some authors hold myomancy to be one of the most ancient kinds of divination, and think it is on this account that Isaiah (lxvi. 17) reckons mice among the abominable things of the idolater. Rees, Cyc.

myomantic (mī-ō-man′tik), a. [As myomancy (-mant-) + -ic.] Of or pertaining to myomancy.

myomata, n. Plural of myoma.

myomatous (mī-om′a-tus), a. [< myoma(t-) + -ous.] Pertaining to, of the nature of, or affected with a myoma.

myomectomy (mī-ō-mek′tō-mi), n. [< NL. myoma + Gr. ἐκτομή, a cutting out.] Removal of a uterine myoma by abdominal section.

myomere (mī′ō-mēr), n. [< Gr. μῦς, a muscle, + μέρος, a part.] A muscular metamere; a myocomma or myotome.

> The rudimentary myotomes or myomeres of the tail.
> Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 186.

myomorph (mī′ō-môrf), n. A member of the Myomorpha; a murine rodent.

Myomorpha (mī-ō-môr′fą), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. μῦς, a mouse, + μορφή, form.] A superfamily of simplicidentate rodents; one of three prime divisions of Glires simplicidentati, containing the murine rodents, the others being Hystricomorpha and Sciuromorpha. They have no postorbital processes, slender zygomatic arches, the angular part of the mandible springing from the lower edge of the incisor socket (except in Bathyerginæ), perfect clavicles (except in Lophiomyidæ), and the tibia and fibula ankylosed to some extent. Myomorpha include 9 families: Myoxidæ, dormice; Lophiomyidæ, skullcaps; Muridæ, mice and rats, etc.; Spalacidæ, mole-rats; Geomyidæ, gophers; Saccomyidæ, pocket-rats and -mice; Theridomyidæ (fossil); Dipodidæ, jerboas; and Zapodidæ, jumping deermice. See cuts under mole-rat, Muridæ, Geomyidæ, and deer-mouse.

myomorphic (mī-ō-môr′fik), a. [< Myomorpha + -ic.] Murine in form or structure; pertaining to the Myomorpha, or having their characters.

myomotomy (mī-ō-mot′ō-mi), n. [< NL. myoma + Gr. τομή, a cutting.] Removal of a uterine myoma by abdominal section; myomectomy.

myon (mī′on), n.; pl. mya (-ą). [NL., < Gr. μυών, a cluster of muscles, < μῦς, a muscle: see muscle[1].] Any individual unit of musculature; a muscular integer. Coues, The Auk, V. 104.

myonicity (mī-ō-nis′i-ti), n. [< myonic* (< Gr. μυών, a muscular part of the body) (see myon) + -ity.] The characteristic property of living muscle, namely its power of contracting.

myonosus (mī-on′ō-sus), n. [NL., < Gr. μῦς, muscle, + νόσος, disease.] In pathol., a disease of the muscles.

myopalmus (mī-ō-pal′mus), n. [< Gr. μῦς, muscle, + παλμός, a vibration, quivering, < πάλλειν, poise, vibrate, quiver.] A twitching of the muscles; subsultus tendinum.

myopathic (mī-ō-path′ik), a. [< myopath-y + -ic.] Of or pertaining to myopathy.

myopathy (mī-op′a-thi), n. [< NL. myopathia, < Gr. μῦς, muscle, + -πάθεια, < πάθος, disease.] Disease of a muscle.

myope (mī′ōp), n. [= F. myope = Sp. miope = Pg. myope = It. miope, < LL. myops (myop-), < Gr. μύωψ (μυωπ-), short-sighted, lit. 'closing the eye,' i. e. blinking, < μύειν, close, + ὤψ (ωπ-), eye.] A short-sighted person. Also myops.

myophan (mī′ō-fan), n. [< Gr. μῦς, muscle, + -φανης, < φαίνεσθαι, appear.] The layer developed in many Infusoria that contains muscle-like fibrillæ. Haeckel.

myophore (mī′ō-fōr), n. [< NL. myophorus: see myophorous.] A part or an apparatus of the shell of a mollusk specialized for the attachment of a muscle, as in the genus Eligmus.

myophorous (mī-of′ō-rus), a. [< NL. myophorus, < Gr. μῦς, muscle, + -φορος, < φέρειν = E. bear[1].] Bearing or connected with a muscle, as a myophore; provided with a myophore, as a mollusk.

myophysical (mī-ō-fiz′i-kąl), a. [< myophysic-s + -al.] Pertaining to myophysics.

myophysics (mī-ō-fiz′iks), n. [< Gr. μῦς, muscle, + φυσικά, physics: see physic and physics.] The physics of muscle.

> Such outstanding questions of myophysics as the pre-existence of muscular currents, the presence of a parelectrotonic layer, the number and nature of cross-disks, etc.
> G. S. Hall, German Culture, p. 221.

★myopia (mī-ō′pi-ą), n. [NL., < LL. myops, < Gr. μυωπία*, also μυωπίασις (Galen), < μύωψ, short-sighted: see myope.] Short-sightedness; near-sightedness: the opposite of hypermetropia. In this condition, parallel rays of light are brought to a focus before they reach the retina, the accommodation being relaxed; the near-point and far-point of distinct vision approach the eye. Also called brachymetropia.

myopic (mī-op′ik), a. [< myop-y + -ic.] In pathol., of or relating to myopia; affected with myopia; short-sighted; near-sighted. Also brachymetropic.

myopolar (mī-ō-pō′lăr), a. [< Gr. μῦς, muscle, + πόλος, pole: see pole, polar.] Pertaining to the poles of muscular action, or to muscular polarity.

> Correcting for the movement of the indifference point along the myopolar tract. Amer. Jour. Psychol., I. 185.

Myoporaceæ (mī-op-ō-rā′sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Lindley, 1836), < Gr. μύειν, close, + πόρος, pore (see pore[2]), + -aceæ.] A family of dicotyledonous sympetalous shrubs of the order Polemoniales, typified by the genus Myoporum. It is distinguished by a two-lipped or oblique corolla, didynamous stamens, a two- or four-celled ovary with one or two seeds in each cell, drupaceous fruit, axillary flowers, and usually alternate leaves. There are four or five genera and about 80 species known, mainly Australian.

myoporaceous (mī-ō-pō-rā′shius), a. Belonging to, resembling, or pertaining to the Myoporaceæ.

Myoporum (mī-op′ō-rum), n. [NL. (Banks and Solander, 1786), so called in allusion to the spots covering the leaves, which suggest pores closed with a semi-transparent substance; < Gr. μύειν, close, + πόρος, a pore.] A genus of plants, type of the family Myoporaceæ, characterized by somewhat bell-shaped flowers and ovary-cells one-ovuled. About 25 species are known, ranging from Australia to Japan. They are smooth or glutinous shrubs or low trees bearing small white flowers, introduced to some extent into greenhouses. M. serratum of Australia is called blueberry-tree; M. lætum of New Zealand, named guitarwood, is useful for shade, and its wood takes a fine polish. M. Sandwicense of the Sandwich Islands, etc., affords a fragrant wood which has been substituted for sandalwood, hence the name bastard sandalwood.

Myopotamus (mī-ō-pot′a-mus), n. [NL., < Gr. μῦς (μυός), mouse, + ποταμός, river. Cf. hippopotamus.] A South American genus of hystricomorphic rodents of the family Octodontidæ and the subfamily Echimyinæ; the coypous. There is but one species, M. coypus. See cut under coypou.

myops (mī′ops), n. [LL.: see myope.] Same as myope.

myopsid (mī-op′sid), a. [NL., irreg. < Gr. μύειν, close, + ὄψις, vision.] Having the cornea of the eye closed, so that the water does not touch the lens, as certain decapod cephalopods: opposed to oigopsid.

myosarcoma (mī″ō-sär-kō′mą), n.; pl. myosarcomata (-ma-tą). [NL., < Gr. μῦς, muscle, + σάρκωμα, a fleshy excrescence: see sarcoma.] In pathol., a tumor composed in part of muscular and in part of sarcomatous tissue.

myosarcomatous (mī″ō-sär-kom′a-tus), a. [< myosarcoma(t-) + -ous.] Of, pertaining to, or affected with myosarcoma.

myoscope (mī′ō-skōp), n. [< Gr. μῦς, muscle, + σκοπεῖν, view.] An apparatus or instrument for the observation of muscular contraction.

> With the aid of an apparatus which he terms the myoscope, M. F. Laulanié has studied the contraction phenomena of muscles retained in their normal environment and connections. Jour. of Roy. Micros. Soc., 2d ser., VI. i. 47.

myosin (mī′ō-sin), n. [< Gr. μῦς, muscle, + -ose + *-in*².] A globulin, the chief ingredient which separates from muscle-plasma on coagulation. It is a proteid body forming an elastic amorphous non-fibrous mass, insoluble in pure water but readily soluble in 5 to 10 per cent. salt solution. It begins to coagulate at 55° C. It is insoluble in a saturated salt solution.

As we know that the reagents in question dissolve the peculiar constituent of muscle, myosin, it is to be concluded that the interseptal substance is chiefly composed of myosin. Huxley, Crayfish, p. 186.

★myosis (mī-ō′sis), n. [NL., < Gr. μύειν, close, be shut, as the eye.] Abnormal contraction of the pupil of the eye.

myositic (mī-ō-sit′ik), a. [< NL. myosis (-it-) + -ic.] In med., pertaining to myosis; causing contraction of the pupil: said of certain medicines, as opium.

myositis (mī-ō-sī′tis), n. [NL., irreg. < Gr. μῦς (μυός), a muscle, + -itis.] In pathol., inflammation of a muscle; myitis.

Myosotis (mī-ō-sō′tis), n. [NL. (Dillenius, 1719), < L. myosotis, also myosota, < Gr. μυοσωτίς, also μύόσωτον, also as two words μυός οὐς, μυός ὠτίς, the plant mouse-ear, forget-me-not, < μῦς, gen. μυός, mouse, + οὖς (ὠτ-), ear.] A genus of dicotyledonous sympetalous plants of the family Boraginaceæ and the tribe Lithospermeæ, known by the flowers without bracts, their rounded lobes convolute in the bud. About 35 species are scattered widely over colder regions. They are small plants with alternate leaves, usually weak stems and racemes of blue, pink, or white flowers. M. palustris is the true forget-me-not, but the name is extended to the whole genus. See forget-me-not, 2, mouse-ear, and scorpion-grass. See also cut under circinate.

myospasmus (mī-ō-spaz′mus), n. [NL., < Gr. μῦς, mouse, + σπασμός, spasm.] Spasm or cramp of a muscle.

myotatic (mī-ō-tat′ik), a. [< Gr. μῦς, muscle, + τάσις (τατ-), tension, < τείνειν (√ τα), stretch: see tend.] Pertaining to the tension of a muscle.—Myotatic contraction, contraction produced by suddenly stretching the muscles, as by blows on their tendons. Also called tendon-reflex, deep-reflex, or tendon-jerk. —Myotatic irritability, the property of responding to sudden stretching by a contraction: said of a muscle.

myotic (mī-ot′ik), a. and n. [< myosis (-ot-) + -ic.] I. a. Pertaining to or causing myosis, or contraction of the pupil.

II. n. A drug which causes myosis.

myotility (mī-ō-til′i-ti), n. [For myomotility*, < Gr. μῦς, muscle, + E. motility.] Contractility of muscles; myonicity.

myotome (mī′ō-tōm), n. [= F. myotome, < Gr. μῦς, muscle, + τέμνειν, ταμεῖν, cut.] 1. A muscular segment or metamere; a myocomma. See cut under Pharyngobranchii.

In the lowest Vertebrata . . . the chief muscular system of the trunk consists of the episkeletal muscles, which form thick lateral masses of longitudinal fibres, divided by transverse intermuscular septa into segments (or Myotomes) corresponding with the vertebræ. Huxley, Anat. Vert., p. 45.

2. An instrument for dividing a muscle.

myotomic (mī-ō-tom′ik), a. [< myotome, or myotom-y, + -ic.] 1. Divided or dividing into myotomes; of or pertaining to a myotome.—2. Of or pertaining to myotomy.

myotomy (mī-ot′ō-mi), n. [= F. myotomie = Pg. myotomia = It. miotomia, < Gr. μῦς (μυός), muscle, + τέμνειν, ταμεῖν, cut.] 1. Dissection of muscles; muscular anatomy.—2. A surgical operation consisting in the division of muscle.

myotonic (mī-ō-ton′ik), a. [As myoton-y + -ic.] Pertaining to muscular tone, or myotony.

myotony (mī-ot′ō-ni), n. [< Gr. μῦς, muscle, + τόνος, tension: see tone.] Muscular tone.

Myoxidæ (mī-ok′si-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Myoxus + -idæ.] A family of myomorphic rodents; the dormice. They have no cæcum, a long hairy tail, large eyes and ears, small fore limbs, and a general resemblance to small squirrels, in habits as well as in form. There are 4 genera—Myoxus, Muscardinus, Eliomys, and Graphiurus. The absence of a cæcum is unique among Rodentia.

Myoxinæ (mī-ok-sī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Myoxus + -inæ.] The dormice as a subfamily of Muridæ. See Myoxidæ.

myoxine (mī-ok′sin), a. Having the characters of a dormouse; resembling a dormouse.

Myoxus (mī-ok′sus), n. [NL., < LGr. μυοξός, Gr. μυωξός, the dormouse, < μῦς, mouse (the second element is uncertain).] A genus of dormice of the family Myoxidæ, having a distichous bushy tail and simple stomach. M. glis of Europe is the type. See cut under dormouse.

myre[1]†, n. A Middle English spelling of mire[1].

myre[2]†, v. i. A Middle English spelling of mire[3].

myriacanthous (mir″i-a-kan′thus), a. [= F. myriacanthe, < Gr. μυρίος, numberless (see myriad), + ἄκανθα, thorn, spine.] Having very numerous spines: specifically applied to fish of the genus Myriacanthus.

Myriacanthus (mir″i-a-kan′thus), n. [NL., < Gr. μυρίος, numberless, + ἄκανθα, thorn, spine.] A genus of rays founded by Agassiz in 1837. They abounded in the Lias.

myriad (mir′i-ad), n. and a. [= F. myriade = Pg. myriada = It. miriade, < Gr. μυριάς (μυριαδ-), a number of ten thousand, < μυρίος, numberless, countless; as a def. numeral, μύριοι, pl., ten thousand.] I. n. 1. The number of ten thousand.

Thou seest, brother, how many thousands, or rather how many myriads, that is, ten thousands, of the Jews there are which believe. Bp. Pearson, Expos. of Creed, ii.

2. An indefinitely great number.

But, O, how fallen! how changed
From him, who in the happy realms of light, Clothed with transcendent brightness, didst outshine Myriads, though bright! Milton, P. L., i. 87.

Tho' world on world in myriad myriads roll Round us, each with different powers.
Tennyson, Death of Wellington, ix.

II. a. Numberless; innumerable; multitudinous; manifold.

Then of the crowd ye took no more account
Than of the myriad cricket of the mead,
When its own voice clings to each blade of grass,
And every voice is nothing.
Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

myriad-minded (mir′i-ad-mīn″ded), a. Of vast intellect or great versatility of mind.

Our myriad-minded Shakspere. Coleridge, Biog. Lit., xv.

Myriaglossa (mir″i-a-glos′ä), n. pl. [NL., prop. Myrioglossa*, < LGr. μυριόγλωσσος, of numberless tongues, < μυρίος, numberless, + γλῶσσα, tongue: see *gloss*².] Those mollusks whose admedian (lateral) teeth are indefinite in number (forty to fifty), and which have a median tooth. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 641.

myriagram, myriagramme (mir′i-a-gram), n. [< F. myriagramme, prop. myriogramme*, < Gr. μύριοι, ten thousand, + LGr. γράμμα, a small weight: see *gram*².] In the metric system, a weight of 10,000 grams, or 22.0462 pounds avoirdupois.

myrialiter, myrialitre (mir′i-a-lē″tėr), n. [= Pg. myriolitro = It. mirialitro, < F. myrialitre, prop. myriolitre*, < Gr. μύριοι, ten thousand, + F. litre, liter: see *liter*².] A measure of capacity, containing 10,000 liters, or one decastere, equal to 2,642 United States gallons.

myriameter, myriametre (mir′i-a-mē″tėr), n. [= Pg. myriametro = It. miriametro, < F. myriamètre, prop. myriomètre*, < Gr. μύριοι, ten thousand, + F. mètre, meter: see *meter*³.] In the metric system, a measure of length, equal to 10 kilometers, or 6.2137 English miles, or 6 miles 376 yards.

myrianide (mir′i-a-nīd), n. [< NL. Myrianida (see def.), < Gr. μυρίος, numberless.] A marine worm of the family Syllidæ, Myrianida pinnigera, with the head rounded in front, three clavate antennæ, and the segments white transversely marked with yellow. It is a littoral European species, about 1¼ inches long, remarkable for its reproduction.

The Myrianide discloses a . . . wonderful history, for of this beautiful worm the posterior half becomes self-divided into as many as six parts, each of them acquiring the cephalic appendages of the original before they take leave and separate themselves. In this condition the worm wanders about with a concatenated train behind of six big-bellied mothers. Johnston, British Non-parasitical Worms, p. 193.

myriapod (mir′i-a-pod), a. and n. [Prop. myriopod, < F. myriapode, myriopode, < NL. myriopus* (-pod-), < MGr. μυριόπους, having ten thousand feet, < Gr. μύριοι, ten thousand, + πούς (ποδ-) = E. foot.] I. a. Having very numerous legs; specifically, pertaining to the Myriapoda, or having their characters.

II. n. A member of the Myriapoda; a centiped or milleped. Also myriapodan.

Myriapod or Milleped (Julus flavozonatus), a chilognath.

Myriapoda (mir-i-ap′ō-dä), n. pl. [NL., prop. Myriopoda, neut. pl. of myriopus*: see myriapod.] A class of articulate animals of the subkingdom Arthropoda; the centipeds and millepeds. They have a long worm-like body of cylindric or flattened form, composed of from 10 to more than 200 rings or segments, scarcely or not at all differentiated into thorax and abdomen; a distinct head; and one or two pairs of legs to each somite of the body. There is a pair of antennæ, and the jaws are mandibulate. Respiration is tracheal, through small pores or spiracles along the sides of the body. Reproduction is oviparous or ovoviviparous, and the sexes are distinct. There is no proper metamorphosis, but the young have fewer segments and legs than the adults, the normal number being acquired by successive molts. Excluding the pauropods and malacopods, the Myriapoda occur under two well-defined types, forming two orders—the Chilognatha or Diplopoda, millepeds or gally-worms, and the Chilopoda or Syngnatha, centipeds. See cuts under centiped, milleped, cephalic, basilar, and myriapod.

myriapodan (mir-i-ap′ō-dan), a. and n. [< myriapod + -an.] Same as myriapod.

myriapodous (mir-i-ap′ō-dus), a. [< myriapod + -ous.] Same as myriapod.

myriarch (mir′i-ärk), n. [< Gr. μυριάρχης, μυριάρχος, commander of ten thousand men, < μύριοι, ten thousand, + ἀρχός, ruler, < ἀρχειν, rule.] A commander of ten thousand men.

myriare (mir′i-ār), n. [= Pg. myriare, < F. myriare, < Gr. μύριοι, ten thousand, + F. are, are: see *are*².] A land-measure of 10,000 ares, or 1,000,000 square meters, equal to 247.105 acres.

Myrica (mi-rī′kä), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1737), < Gr. μυρίκη, the tamarisk.] A strongly marked genus of shrubs, type of the family Myricaceæ, and characterized by staminate catkins, an ovary with one cell and one ovule, and the seed not lobed. About 40 species are known, found in temperate or warm climates, nearly throughout the world. The waxy-crusted berries of M. cerifera, which abounds in the coast-sands of the Atlantic United States, yield bay-

Bayberry, or Wax-myrtle (Myrica cerifera).

1, branch with male catkins; 2, branch with female catkins; a, a male catkin on a larger scale; b, a male flower; c, a female flower; d, fruit with the incrustation of wax; e, the nut with incrustation removed.

berry-tallow, formerly in considerable use for candles, and employed as a domestic remedy for dysentery. Various other species, as M. cordifolia of South Africa, afford a useful wax. Some yield edible fruits, as M. Nagi, the yangmei of China, the sophee of East Indian mountain regions, and M. Faya of Madeira. The genus Myrica, readily recognized by the peculiar nervation of its leaves, is very abundant in the fossil state, and more than 150 fossil species have been described, found in the Cretaceous and Tertiary formations of nearly all parts of the world in which these formations are found to contain vegetable remains.

Myricaceæ (mir-i-kā′sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Lindley, 1833), < Myrica + -aceæ.] A family of dicotyledonous apetalous plants of the order Myricales, consisting of the genus Myrica.

myrica-tallow (mi-rī′kä-tal″ō), n. Myrtle-wax: bayberry-tallow or -wax.

myricin, myricine (mi-rī′sin), n. [< Myrica + *-in*², *-ine*².] One of the substances of which wax is composed. Myricin is the matter left undissolved when wax is boiled with alcohol. It constitutes from 20 to 30 per cent. of the weight of beeswax, and is a grayish-white solid, a palmitate of melissyl.

myricyl (mi-rī′sil), n. [< Myrica + -yl.] Same as melissyl.

myriet, a. A Middle English form of merry[1].

Myrina (mi-rī′nä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. μύρινος (var. μαρίνος, as if < L. marinus), a sea-fish. Cf. Muræna.] In Günther's system, a group of Muræniдæ platyschistæ. They have gill-openings separated by an interspace, nostrils labial, tongue not free, and end of tail surrounded by the fin. The genus contains about 14 tropical or subtropical eels.

Myrinæ (mi-rī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Myrus + -inæ.] A subfamily of Ophichthyidæ, having the tail surrounded by a fin as is usual in eels: contrasted with Ophichthyinæ.

myringitis (mir-in-jī′tis), n. [NL., < myringa, the membrana tympani, + -itis.] In pathol., inflammation of the membrana tympani.

Myriolepidinæ (mir″i-ō-lep-i-dī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Myriolepis (-id-) + -inæ.] A subfamily of Hexagrammidæ exemplified by the genus Myriolepis. It includes chiroid fishes with blunt head, entire opercle, and obsolete anal spines, and was established for the reception of Erilepis zonifer, a marine fish found in rather deep water off the Californian coast. Properly Erilepidinæ.

myriolepidine (mir″i-ō-lep′i-din), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Myriolepidinæ, or having their characters.

II. n. A myriolepidine chiroid fish.

Myriolepis (mir-i-ol′e-pis), n. [NL., < Gr. μύριοι, ten thousand, + λεπίς, a scale.] The typical genus of Myriolepidinæ: called Erilepis by Gill.

myriophyllite (mir″i-ō-fil′īt), n. [< LGr. μυριόφυλλος, with numberless leaves (see myriophyllous), + *-ite*².] A kind of fossil root with numerous fibers, found in the coal-measures.

myriophyllous (mir″i-ō-fil′us), a. [< LGr. μυριόφυλλος, with numberless leaves, < Gr. μυρίος, numberless, + φύλλον, leaf.] Literally, having ten thousand leaves; specifically, in bot., having a large number of leaves.

Myriophyllum (mir″i-ō-fil′um), n. [NL. (Vaillant, 1719) (L. myriophyllon), < LGr. μυριόφυλλον, spiked water-milfoil, neut. of μυριόφυλλος, with numberless leaves: see myriophyllous. Cf. milfoil.] A genus of dicotyledonous choripetalous plants, the water-milfoil, belonging to the family Haloragidaceæ, characterized by an ovary with two or four deep furrows. About 20 species are known, growing in fresh water throughout the world. They are plume-like, erect, creeping, or floating plants, with small sessile pinkish flowers solitary in the axils of the usually dissected leaves.

myriopod, Myriopoda, etc. More correct forms of myriapod, etc.

myriorama (mir″i-ō-rä′mä), n. [NL., < Gr. μυρίος, numberless, + ὅραμα, view, < ὁρᾶν, see.] A picture made up of interchangeable parts which can be harmoniously arranged to form a great variety of picturesque scenes. The parts are usually fragments of landscapes on cards.

myrioscope (mir′i-ō-skōp), n. [< Gr. μυρίος, numberless, + σκοπεῖν, view.] 1. A variation of the kaleidoscope, consisting of a square box having a sight-hole in front, and two plane mirrors at the rear arranged at a suitable angle. On horizontal rollers a piece of embroidery or other ornamental pattern is caused to traverse the bottom of the box, when the multiplied images coalesce in such a manner as to form geometrical patterns.

2. A form of this device used for exhibiting carpets; a carpet-exhibitor. The mirrors are so arranged as to repeat a carpet-pattern in its correct relations, and thus show from a small piece how the carpet will look when laid down. It is sometimes supplied with an attachment for causing a strip bearing pieces of different carpets to pass through the machine so as to exhibit the different patterns in turn.

myriosporous (mir″i-ō-spō′rus), a. [< Gr. μυρίος, numberless, + σπόρος, a seed.] In bot., containing or producing a great number of spores.

myristic (mī-ris′tik), a. [< Myristica.] Derived from or related to nutmeg.—Myristic acid, an acid ($C_{14}H_{28}O_2$) found in spermaceti, oil of nutmeg, and some other vegetable oils, generally as a glyceride, myristin.

Myristica (mī-ris′ti-kä), n. [NL., < LGr. μυριστικός, fit for anointing, < Gr. μυρίζειν, anoint, < μύρον, an unguent: see myronic.] 1. A genus of dicotyledonous apetalous trees, type of the family Myristicaceæ, and characterized by dioecious regular flowers with a three-lobed calyx and united filaments, a single ovary-cell and ovule, and alternate leaves. About 80 species are known, mainly in the East Indies. They are aromatic trees, with small white or yellow flowers, the leaves often pellucid-dotted, and the fleshy fruits split in two or four parts, disclosing an arillode, usually colored, which incloses the hard seed. M. fragrans is the nutmeg-tree, a bushy evergreen, 40 or 50 feet high, native in the eastern Moluccas, cultivated in the Malay peninsula and islands, Penang, etc. See *mace*² and nutmeg. For other species, see becuiba-nut, dali, dollee-wood, and nutmeg.

Branch of Nutmeg (Myristica fragrans), with male flowers. a, the female flower; b, the stamens of the male flower; c, the fruit.

2. [l. c.] In phar., the kernel of the seed of Myristica fragrans. It is aromatic and somewhat narcotic. See cut under arillode.—3. In zoöl., a genus of gastropods. Swainson, 1840.

Myristica melongena.

Myristicaceæ (mī-ris-ti-kā′sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Lindley, 1836), < Myristica + -aceæ.] A family of dicotyledonous apetalous trees and shrubs of the order Ranales, typified by the genus Myristica. It embraces 15 genera and 255 species, natives of the tropics.

Myristicivora (mī-ris-ti-siv′ō-rä), n. [NL.: see myristicivorous.] A genus of fruit-pigeons of the subfamily Carpophaginæ, having the tail short and the plumage black and white; the nutmeg-pigeons.

myristicivorous (mī-ris-ti-siv′ō-rus), a. [< NL. Myristica + L. vorare, devour.] Devouring or habitually feeding upon nutmegs.

myristin (mī-ris′tin), n. [< myrist(ic) + *-in*².] The crystalline constituent of oil of nutmeg: a glyceride of myristic acid.

myrkt, a., n., and v. A Middle English form of *murk*¹.

myrmecobe (mėr′mē-kōb), n. An animal of the genus Myrmecobius.

Myrmecobiidæ (mėr″mē-kō-bī′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Myrmecobius + -idæ.] The myrmecobes regarded as a family.

Myrmecobiinæ (mėr-mē-kō-bi-ī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Myrmecobius + -inæ.] A subfamily of Dasyuridæ, sometimes elevated to rank as a family Myrmecobiidæ, containing the single genus Myrmecobius, and distinguished from Dasyurinæ by the long extensile tongue and larger number of molar teeth.

myrmecobiine (mėr-mē-kō′bi-in), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to the Myrmecobiidæ, or having their characters.

II. n. A member of the Myrmecobiidæ.

Myrmecobius (mėr-mē-kō′bi-us), n. [NL., < Gr. μύρμηξ (μυρμηκ-), an ant, + βίος, life.] 1. A genus of insectivorous marsupials, typical of the subfamily Myrmecobiinæ. The tongue is protrusile and vermiform, as in other ant-eaters. The teeth are more numerous than in any other extant mammalian quadruped. M. fasciatus, of Australia, is about the size of a squirrel, of a chestnut-red color, the back fasciate with white bands on a dark ground. The animal lives on the ground, feeds on ants, and is known by the name of ant-eater.

2. In entom., a genus of dermestid beetles, erected by Lucas in 1846. The only species is M. agilis, an active little black beetle, one twelfth of an inch long, found in ants' nests in Algeria.

Myrmecoleon (mėr-mē-kō′lē-on), n. [NL., < Gr. μυρμηκολέων, 'ant-lion,' < μύρμηξ (μυρμηκ-), ant, + λέων, lion.] See Myrmeleon.

myrmecological (mėr″mē-kō-loj′i-kal), a. [< myrmecolog-y + -ical.] Of or relating to ants.

Myrmecological studies. Nature, XXXIII. 240.

myrmecology (mėr-mē-kol′ō-ji), n. [< Gr. μύρμηξ (μυρμηκ-), an ant, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] That branch of entomology which treats of ants.

Myrmecophaga (mėr-mē-kof′a-gä), n. [NL., fem. of myrmecophagus: see myrmecophagous.] 1. The typical genus of ant-eaters of the family Myrmecophagidæ. M. jubata is the great or maned ant-eater or ant-bear of South America. See cuts under ant-bear, Edentata, and xenarthral.—2. In ornith., a genus of ant-birds: same as Formicarius.

myrmecophage (mėr′mē-kō-fāj), n. An ant-eater of the genus Myrmecophaga.

Myrmecophagidæ (mėr″mē-kō-faj′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Myrmecophaga + -idæ.] A South American family of vermilinguate edentate quadrupeds, typified by the genus Myrmecophaga, and alone representing the suborder Vermilinguia of the order Edentata or Bruta; the ant-eaters or ant-bears. They are entirely toothless, with tubular mouth, long worm-like protrusile tongue, short stout limbs, prehensile or bushy tail, and hind feet pentadactyl or tetradactyl. The family is divided into Myrmecophaginæ and Cycloturinæ.

Myrmecophaginæ (mėr-mē-kof-a-jī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Myrmecophaga + -inæ.] A subfamily of Myrmecophagidæ, represented by the genera Myrmecophaga and Tamandua, with the fore feet pentadactyl and the third digit enlarged with a very long claw. Falcifer and Uroleptes have been substituted for these names by some systematists.

myrmecophagine (mėr-mē-kof′a-jin), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to the Myrmecophaginæ, or having their characters.

II. n. A member of the Myrmecophaginæ.

myrmecophagous (mėr-mē-kof′a-gus), a. [< NL. myrmecophagus, < Gr. μύρμηξ (μυρμηκ-), ant, + φαγεῖν, eat.] Ant-eating; specifically, of or pertaining to the Myrmecophagidæ.

Myrmecophila (mėr-mē-kof′i-lä), n. [NL., < myrmecophilus: see myrmecophilous.] 1. A genus of crickets of the family Gryllidæ, which live in ant-hills, and closely resemble cockroaches in form, though they are of diminutive size and great activity. M. pergandei is a North American species. M. acervorum is the commonest European species; another is M. ochracea.

2. pl. [l. c.] Myrmecophilous insects: a general designation, having no classificatory implication. Among the insects which live in ant-hills as inquilines are included representatives of coleopters, hymenopters, lepidopters, dipters, orthopters, and homopters, especially the first-named of these; and some arachnidans also come in the same category.

myrmecophilous (mėr-mē-kof′i-lus), a. [< NL. myrmecophilus, < Gr. μύρμηξ (μυρμηκ-), ant, + φίλος, loving.] Fond of ants: applied to insects which live in ant-hills, also to plants which are cross-fertilized or otherwise benefited by ants.

In the preface to the descriptions of his exceedingly beautiful and well-known myrmecophilous plants, Beccari puts forward the very view taken by Prof. Henslow. Nature, XXXIX. 172.

Myrmeleon (mėr-mē′lē-on), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1748), for Myrmecoleon, q. v.] A genus of Myrmeleonidæ; the ant-lions. See ant-lion. M. immaculatus is the best-known American species. M. europæus and M. formicarius are found in Europe. Also Myrmecoleon.

Myrmeleonidæ (mėr-mē-lē-on′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Myrmeleon + -idæ.] The ant-lion family of planipennine neuropterous insects. Also Myrmecoleonidæ, Myrmecoleontidæ, Myrmeleontidæ, Myrmeleonides, Myrmelionidæ. See ant-lion.

Myrmica (mėr-mī′kä), n. [NL., < Gr. μύρμηξ (μυρμηκ-), ant.] The typical genus of Myrmicidæ and of Myrmicinæ, established by Latreille in 1802. It contains some of the commonest and best-known species, as the red ants.

Myrmicidæ (mėr-mis′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Myrmica + -idæ.] A family of stinging ants of the order Hymenoptera, founded by Leach in 1817 on the genus Myrmica, and distinguished from all other ants by the two-jointed instead of one-jointed petiole of the abdomen.

Myrmicinæ (mėr-mi-sī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Myrmica + -inæ.] The Myrmicidæ as a subfamily of Formicidæ.

myrmicine (mėr′mi-sin), a. Having the characters of the Myrmicidæ; pertaining to the Myrmicidæ.

Myrmidon (mėr′mi-don), n. [= F. myrmidon, < L. Myrmidones, < Gr. Μυρμιδόνες, a warlike people of Thessaly, sing. Μυρμιδών (see def. 1).] 1. One of a warlike ancient Greek people of Phthiotis in Thessaly, over whom, according to the legend, Achilles ruled, and who accompanied him to Troy. Hence—2. [l. c.] A devoted and unquestioning or unscrupulous follower; one who executes without scruple his master's commands.—Myrmidons of the law, bailiffs, sheriffs' officers, policemen, and other inferior administrative officers of the law. [Colloq.]

I found all these household treasures in possession of the myrmidons of the law. Thackeray.

Myrmidonian (mėr-mi-dō′ni-an), a. [< Myrmidon + -ian.] Of or pertaining to the Myrmidons.

Some beam of comfort yet on Greece may shine,
If I but lead the Myrmidonian line.
Pope, Iliad, xvi. 57.

myrobalan (mī-rob′a-lan), n. [Formerly also mirobolan, myrobolan, myrobolam, myrabolan, mirabolan, etc.; < F. myrobolan = Sp. mirabolano = Pg. myrobolano = It. mirabolano, < L. myrobalanum, < Gr. μυροβάλανος, < μύρον, an unguent, + βάλανος, acorn, or similar fruit.] The dried drupaceous fruit of several species of Terminalia, chiefly T. Bellerica and T. Chebula.

On account of their astringent pulp, these fruits were formerly in great repute as a remedy for diarrhea, etc., but they are now used only, unless in the East, for dyeing and tanning. The Indian or citrine myrobalan, also called hara-nut, is the product of T. citrina, but the other kinds are also Indian. The so-called emblic myrobalans are from an unrelated tree, Phyllanthus Emblica. See Phyllanthus, belleric, hara-nut, ink-nut, and Terminalia.

There (and but there) growes the all-healing Balm,
There ripes the rare cheer-cheek Myrobalan, Minde-gladding Fruit, that can vn-olde a Man.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Schisme.

These barks lade out . . . Myrabolans drie and condite.
Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 216.

myronate (mī′rō-nāt), n. [< myron(ic) + -ate[1].] A salt of myronic acid.—Potassium myronate, a glucoside ($C_{10}H_{16}NS_2O_9K + H_2O$) found in the seeds of black mustard, which is hydrolyzed by a ferment giving potassium sulphate, glucose, and oil of mustard; sinigrin.

myronic (mī-ron′ik), a. [= F. myronique, < Gr. μύρον, an unguent, perfume, any sweet juice distilling from plants and used for unguents or perfumes.] An epithet used only in the following phrase.—Myronic acid, an acid found in black mustard. See myronate.

myropolist† (mī-rop′ō-list), n. [< Gr. μυροπώλης, a dealer in perfumes, < μύρον, perfume, + πωλεῖν, sell.] One who sells unguents or perfumery. Johnson.

myrosin (mī′rō-sin), n. [< myr(onic) + -ose + -in[2].] A glucoside enzym contained in the seeds of black mustard and many other cruciferous plants. By its action potassium myronate is decomposed, forming potassium hydrogen sulphate, glucose, and oil of mustard.

Myroxylon (mī-rok′si-lon), n. [NL., < Gr. μύρον, a sweet juice from plants, + ξύλον, wood.] 1. A name given by Linnæus (filius) in 1781 to Toluifera, a genus of trees of the family Fabaceæ. About 8 species are known, all South American, having the leaves and whitish flowers much as in the related Myrospermum. For species, see balsam of Peru, balsam of Tolu, and Brazilian balsam (all under balsam), myrrh-seed, and quinquino.

2. A genus of small trees or shrubs of the ★family Flacourtiaceæ, of about 45 species.

myrrh (mėr), n. [Now spelled according to the L.; early mod. E. mirre, < ME. mirre, < AS. myrre, myrra = OS. myrra = D. mirre = OHG. myrrā, MHG. mirre, G. myrrhe = Sw. Dan. myrrha = OF. mirre, F. myrrhe = Sp. mirra = Pg. myrrha = It. mirra, < L. myrrha, murrha, murra, < Gr. μύρρα, myrrh, the balsamic juice of the Arabian myrtle, < Ar. murr (= Heb. mōr), myrrh, < murr, bitter. Cf. Marah.] 1. A gummy resinous exudation from several species of the genus Balsamea. Most of the product (the proper myrrh) is from B. Myrrha, a spiny shrub with scanty foliage, small green axillary flowers, and small oval fruits. The myrrh of Scripture was doubtless largely obtained from this plant. For a second kind, see besabol. A third is from the same plant as the balm of Gilead (which see, under balm). These plants are found in parts of Arabia and eastern Africa. Myrrh is an astringent tonic. It is also used for incense, perfumery, and minor purposes. The myrrh carried by the Ishmaelites into Egypt is thought to have been the same as ladanum. See Commiphora, and compare bdellium.

They [the wise men] saw the young child with Mary his mother, and . . . presented unto him gifts; gold, and frankincense, and myrrh. Mat. ii. 11.

A royal oblation of gold, frankincense, and myrrh is still annually presented by the queen on the feast of Epiphany in the Chapel Royal in London, this custom having been in existence certainly as early as the reign of Edward I.
Encyc. Brit., XVII. 121.

2. The sweet cicely of Europe. See Myrrhis. [Eng.]—India myrrh. Same as besabol.—Turkey myrrh, a former commercial name of the true myrrh.

myrrhic (mir′ik), a. [< myrrh + -ic.] Pertaining to or obtained from myrrh: as, myrrhic acid.

myrrhin (mėr′in), n. [< myrrh + -in[2].] The fixed resin of myrrh.

myrrhine (mėr′in), a. See murrine.

Myrrhis (mir′is), n. [NL., < L. myrrhis, murris, < Gr. μυῤῥίς, a plant, sweet cicely, < μύῤῥα, myrrh: see myrrh.] A name given by Scopoli in 1772 to Chærophyllastrum (Heister, 1759), a genus of plants of the family Apiaceæ. It is closely related to Washingtonia, but its fruit is not attenuate at the base and has broad, almost winged ribs separated by deep channels. The only well-known species is C. odoratum (Scandix odorata of Linnæus), the sweet cicely or sweet chervil of Europe, native in the mountains as far east as the Caucasus and long cultivated, a graceful plant with white flowers in compound umbels, finely divided leaves, and pleasant-flavored roots and stems.

myrrhol (mir′ol), n. [< myrrh + -ol.] The volatile oil of myrrh.

myrrhophore (mir′ō-fōr), n. [< Gr. μύρρα, myrrh, + -φορός, bearing, < φέρειν = E. bear[1].] Myrrh-bearer; specifically, in the Gr. Ch. and in the fine arts, a name given to one of the Marys who came to see the sepulcher of Christ. They are usually represented as bearing vases of myrrh.

myrrh-plaster (mėr′ plȧs″tėr), n. A plaster made by incorporating with lead-plaster myrrh, camphor, and balsam of Peru.

myrrh-seed (mėr′sēd), n. The balsamic seed of Toluifera pubescens, native of the United States of Colombia.

myrrhy (mėr′i), a. [< myrrh + -y[1].] Smelling of, perfumed with, or producing myrrh.

The myrrhy lands. Browning, Waring, i. 6.

Myrsinaceæ (mėr-si-nā′sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Lindley, 1836), < Myrsine + -aceæ.] A family of dicotyledonous sympetalous plants of the order Primulales, typified by the genus Myrsine. It embraces 33 genera and about 1000 species, natives of tropical and subtropical regions.

myrsinaceous (mėr-si-nā′shius), a. Belonging to, resembling, or pertaining to the family Myrsinaceæ.

Myrsine (mėr′si-nē), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1737), < Gr. μυρσίνη, a myrtle: see myrtle.] A genus of dicotyledonous sympetalous shrubs and trees, type of the family Myrsinaceæ, known by its single seed immersed in the placenta, and its laterally clustered flowers. There are about 40 species, in tropical and subtropical Asia, Africa, and Madagascar, with small flowers, and smooth rigid leaves, usually evergreen. M. Africana, widely distributed in Africa, is called African box or myrtle. M. marginata is a Chinese species found in the province of Kwangtung. M. semiserrata is a shrub or small tree of India with handsome reddish wood used in Nepal for carpenter's work. A large number of species formerly placed in this genus are now referred to Rapanea.

Myrsineæ (mėr-sin′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Robert Brown, 1810), < Myrsine + -eæ.] A tribe of trees and shrubs typified by the genus Myrsine. About 550 species in 27 genera are known, all tropical.

myrt†, n. [ME. mirt; < L. myrtus, myrtle: see myrtle.] Myrtle.

The seed of mirt, if that thou maist it gete,
Of birch, of yvy, crabbe, and wild olyve,
Lete yeve hem nowe and nowe for channge of mete.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 21.

Myrtaceæ (mėr-tā′sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Persoon, 1807), < Myrtus + -aceæ.] A family of dicotyledonous archichlamydeous (chiefly choripetalous) trees and shrubs of the order Myrtales, typified by the genus Myrtus, and known by the numerous stamens and leaves without stipules, generally opposite, dotted, and with a marginal vein. There are about 1,700 species, of 74 genera and 3 tribes, natives of warm climates, usually with racemed flowers and pervaded by a fragrant volatile oil: some are valuable as spices, as myrtle, clove, pimento; others for edible fruit, as the guava, jamrosade, monkey-pot, and Brazil-nut; others for timber, as the gum-trees (Eucalyptus) of Australia and the iron-trees (Metrosideros) of Java.

myrtaceous (mėr-tā′shius), a. [< L. myrtaceus, of myrtle, < myrtus, myrtle: see myrtle.] In bot., of, resembling, belonging, or pertaining to the family Myrtaceæ.

Myrtales (mėr-tā′lēz), n. pl. [NL. (Lindley, 1833), < Myrtus, q. v.] An order of dicotyledonous archichlamydeous plants, known by its undivided style and two or more ovules in each cell of the ovary, which is united to the calyx, or included in it. It comprises 16 families, of which the Myrtaceæ, Melastomaceæ, and Onagraceæ are the most important.

Myrteæ (mėr′tē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (A. L. de Jussieu, 1825), < Myrtus + -eæ.] A tribe of shrubs and trees of the family Myrtaceæ, type genus Myrtus, and characterized by an ovary of two or more cells, the fruit an indehiscent berry or drupe, and the leaves opposite and dotted. It includes 33 genera, among them Eugenia, Caryophyllus (clove, etc.), and Psidium.

myrtiform (mėr′ti-fôrm), a. [= F. myrtiforme = Sp. mirtiforme = Pg. myrtiforme = It. mirtiforme, < L. myrtus, myrtle, + forma, form.] Resembling myrtle or myrtle-berries.—Myrtiform ★fossa. See fossa[1].

myrtle (mėr′tl), n. [Formerly mirtle, mirtil; < OF. mirtil, mirtille, myrtille, a myrtle-berry, also the lesser kind of myrtle (= Pg. myrtillo = It. mirtillo), dim. of myrte, murte, F. myrte, Sp. mirto = Pg. myrto = It. mirto (= ME. mirt: see myrt), < L. myrtus, murtus, myrta, murta, < Gr. μύρτος (also μυρσίνη, μυρρίνη), < Pers. mūrd, the myrtle.] 1. A plant of the genus Myrtus, primarily M. communis, the classic and favorite common myrtle. It is a bush or small tree with shining evergreen leaves and fragrant white flowers, common in the Mediterranean region. In ancient times it was sacred to Venus, and its leaves formed wreaths for bloodless victors; it was also a symbol of civil authority. It is used in modern times for bridal wreaths. The plant is an unimportant astringent. Its aromatic berries have been used to flavor wine and in cookery. Its flowers, as also its leaves, afford perfumes, the latter used in sachets, etc. Its hard mottled wood is prized in turnery. M. Lumal and M. Meli

1, branch with flowers of myrtle (Myrtus communis); 2, branch with fruits; a, vertical section of a flower; b, calyx, torus, and pistil; c, the fruit; d, vertical section of the seed, showing the embryo.

in Chile furnish valuable hard timber. Myrteola Nummularia, the cranberry-myrtle, is a little trailing vine with edible berries, found from Chile southward.

2. A name of various similar plants of other genera of the myrtle family (Myrtaceæ), and of other families, many unrelated.—Australian myrtle (besides true myrtles), the lillypilly (which see).—Blue myrtle. See Ceanothus.—Bog-myrtle, candleberry-myrtle, the sweet-gale. See gale[3] and Myrica.—Crape-myrtle. See Indian lilac, under lilac.—Dutch myrtle. (a) The sweet-gale. [Prov. Eng.] (b) A broad-leafed variety of the true myrtle.—Fringe myrtle, the myrtaceous genus Chamælaucium of Australia.—Jews' myrtle. See Jews'-myrtle.—Juniper myrtle, the Australian genus Verticordia.—Myrtle flag, grass, or sedge, names in Great Britain of the sweet-flag, alluding to its scent.—Otaheite myrtle, one or more species of the euphorbiaceous genus Securinega.—Peach myrtle, the myrtaceous Hypocalymma of Australia.—Running myrtle, more often simply myrtle, a name of the common periwinkle. [U. S.]—Sand-myrtle, a smooth, dwarf shrub, Leiophyllum buxifolium of the Ericaceæ, found in the eastern United States.—Tasmania myrtle. See Fagus.—Wax-myrtle, Myrica cerifera.

myrtle-berry (mėr′tl-ber″i), n. The fruit of the myrtle.

myrtle-bird (mėr′tl-bėrd), n. The golden-crowned warbler or yellow-rump, Dendrœca coronata. It is one of the most abundant of the warblers in most parts of the United States and Canada, is migratory and insectivorous, breeding in the far north, and wintering in most of the States east of the Mississippi. It is about 5½ inches long, slaty-blue streaked with black, below white streaked with black, the throat and large blotches in the tail white, the rump, a crown-spot, and each side of the breast bright-yellow, bill and feet black.

myrtle-green (mėr′tl-grēn), n. A rich pure green of full chroma but low luminosity.

myrtle-wax (mėr′tl-waks), n. The product of the Myrica cerifera. Also called myrica-tallow.

Myrtus (mėr′tus), n. [NL. (Tournefort, 1700), < L. myrtus, < Gr. μύρτος, myrtle: see myrtle.] A genus of shrubs, type of the family Myrtaceæ and of the tribe Myrteæ. It is characterized by the numerous ovules in the usually two or three ovary-cells, small cotyledons, and the calyx-lobes fully formed in the bud. There are about 60 species, mostly in South America beyond the tropics, some in tropical America, and a dozen in Australasia. The typical species, however, M. communis, is native in Asia, and has long been naturalized in southern Europe. See myrtle.

Myrus (mī′rus), n. [NL., < Gr. μῦρος, a kind of sea-eel.] A genus of eels, typifying the subfamily Myrinæ.

myself (mī-self′), pron. [< ME. my selfe, me selfe, my selve, me selve, my-selven, < AS. gen. mīn selfes, dat. mē selfum, acc. me selfne, nom. ic selfa; being the pron. ic, mē, with the adj. self in agreement: see me[1] and self. Cf. himself.] An emphatic or reflexive form of the first personal pronoun I or me, either nominative or (as originally) objective. In the nominative it is always used for emphasis, in apposition with I or alone; in the objective it is either reflexive or emphatic, being, when emphatic, usually in apposition with me. Compare himself, herself, etc.

He is my lege man lelly thou knowes,
For holly the londes that he has he holdes of mi-selue.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 1175.

I wol myselven gladly with you ryde.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 803.

I had as lief not be as live to be
In awe of such a thing as I myself.
Shak., J. C., i. 2. 96.

Which way I fly is hell; myself am hell.
Milton, P. L., iv. 75.

Myself will mount the rostrum in his favour,
And strive to gain his pardon. Addison, Cato, ii. 2.

The fact is, I was a trifle beside myself—or rather, out of myself, as the French would say.
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, ii.

myselven†, pron. A Middle English variant of myself.

Mysidæ (mis'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Mysis + -idæ.] A family of schizopod podophthalmic crustaceans, typified by the genus Mysis; the opossum-shrimps. The abdominal region is long, jointed, and ended by caudal swimmerets; there are six pairs of ambulatory thoracic limbs, to which the external gills are attached, and which also function as a kind of brood-pouch in which the eggs are carried about, whence the vernacular name.

Mysis (mī'sis), n. [NL., < Gr. μύσις, a closing the lips or eyes, < μύειν, close, as the lips or eyes.] The typical genus of Mysidæ, founded by Latreille in 1802. M. chameleon is a common species of the North Atlantic. See opossum-shrimp.

mysophobia (mī-sō-fō'bi-ạ), n. [NL., < Gr. μύσος, uncleanness, + φόβος, flight, panic, fear.] A morbid fear of contamination, as of soiling one's hands by touching anything.

mystacial (mis-tā'si-ạl), a. [< mystax (mystac-) + -ial.] Same as mustachial.

Mystacina (mis-tạ-sī'nạ), n. [NL., < Gr. μύσταξ, the upper lip, the beard upon it (see mystax), + -ina[1].] A genus of molossoid emballonurine bats. The tail perforates the interfemoral membrane and lies upon its upper surface; the middle finger has three phalanges; the wing-membrane has a thickened leathery edge; the soles of the feet are expansive and somewhat sucker-like; and the pollex and hallux have each a supplementary claw. The single species, M. tuberculata, is confined to New Zealand, composing with Chalinolobus the whole indigenous mammalian fauna. The peculiarities of the genus cause it to be made by some authors the type of a subfamily Mystacinæ.

Mystacinæ (mis-tạ-sī'nē), n. pl. [NL., pl. of Mystacina.] A group of molossine Emballonuridæ, represented by the genus Mystacina.

mystacine (mis'tạ-sin), a. Having the characters of Mystacina; pertaining to the Mystacinæ.

mystagogic (mis-tạ-goj'ik), a. [< mystagog-ue + -ic.] Having the character of, relating to, or connected with a mystagogue or mystagogy; pertaining to the interpretation of mysteries. Jer. Taylor, Rules of Conscience, iii. 4.

mystagogical (mis-tạ-goj'i-kạl), a. [< mystagogic + -al.] Same as mystagogic.

mystagogue (mis'tạ-gog), n. [< F. mystagogue = Sp. mistagogo = Pg. mystagogo = It. mistagogo, < L. mystagogus, < Gr. μυσταγωγός, one introducing into mysteries, < μύστης, one initiated (see mystery[1]), + ἄγειν, lead (> ἀγωγός, a leader).] 1. One who instructs in or interprets mysteries; one who initiates.—2. Specifically, in the early church, the priest who prepared candidates for initiation into the sacred mysteries. Smith, Dict. Christ. Antiq.—3†. One who keeps church relics and shows them to strangers. Bailey.

mystagogus (mis-tạ-gō'gus), n.; pl. mystagogi (-jī). [L.: see mystagogue.] Same as mystagogue.

That true interpreter and great mystagogus, the Spirit of God. Dr. H. More.

mystagogy (mis'tạ-gō-ji), n. [< F. mystagogie, < Gr. μυσταγωγία, initiation into mysteries, < μυσταγωγός, one who introduces into mysteries: see mystagogue.] 1. The principles, practice, or doctrines of a mystagogue; the interpretation of mysteries.—2. In the Gr. Ch., the sacraments.

mystax (mis'taks), n. [NL., < Gr. μύσταξ, the upper lip, a mustache: see mustache.] In entom., a brush of stiff hairs on the lower part of the face, immediately over the mouth-cavity; it is conspicuous in certain Diptera, especially of the family Asilidæ.

mystert, n. See mister[2].

mysterial (mis-tē'ri-ạl), a. [< OF. misterial = It. misteriale, < ML. misterialis, mysterialis (LL. in adv. mysterialiter), mysterious, pertaining to a mystery, < L. mysterium, a mystery: see mystery[1].] Containing a mystery or an enigma.

Beauty and Love, whose story is mysterial.
B. Jonson, Love's Triumph.

mysteriarch (mis-tē'ri-ärk), n. [< LL. mysteriarches, < Gr. μυστηριάρχης, one who presides over mysteries, < μυστήριον, mystery (see mystery[1]), + ἀρχός, chief, < ἄρχειν, rule.] One who presides over mysteries.

mysterious (mis-tē'ri-us), a. [Formerly also misterious; = F. mystérieux = Sp. misterioso = Pg. mysterioso = It. misterioso, full of mystery, < L. mysterium, mystery: see mystery[1].] 1. Partaking of or containing mystery; obscure; not revealed or explained; unintelligible.

By a silent, unseen, mysterious process, the fairest flower of the garden springs from a small insignificant seed.
Bp. Horne, Works, IV. xxix.

God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm.
Cowper, Light Shining out of Darkness.

2. Expressing, intimating, or implying a mystery: as, a mysterious look; his manner was very mysterious and important.=Syn. Mysterious, Mystic, Cabalistic, dark, occult, enigmatical, incomprehensible, inscrutable. Mysterious is the most common word for that which is unknown and excites curiosity and perhaps awe; the word is sometimes used where mystic would be more precise. Mystic is especially used of that which has been designed to excite and baffle curiosity, involving meanings in signs, rites, etc., but not with sufficient plainness to be understood by any but the initiated. Mystic is used poetically for mysterious; it may imply the power of prophesying. The meaning of cabalistic is shaped by the facts of the Jewish Cabala. The word is therefore applicable especially to occult meanings attributed to written signs.

mysteriously (mis-tē'ri-us-li), adv. In a mysterious manner; by way of expressing or implying a mystery; obscurely: as, he shook his head mysteriously.

mysteriousness (mis-tē'ri-us-nes), n. 1. The quality of being mysterious; obscurity; the quality of being hidden from the understanding and calculated to excite curiosity or wonder.—2. That which is mysterious or obscure. Jer. Taylor.—3. The behavior or manner of one who wishes or affects to imply a mystery: as, he told us with much mysteriousness to wait and see.

mysterize† (mis'tẹ-rīz), v. t. [< myster-y + -ize.] To interpret mystically.

The Cabalists, . . . mysterizing their ensigns, do make the particular ones of the twelve tribes accommodable unto the twelve signs in the zodiack, and twelve months in the year. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., v. 10.

★mystery[1] (mis'tẹ-ri), n.; pl. mysteries (-riz). [Formerly also mistery; < ME. mysterie = F. mystère = Sp. misterio = Pg. mysterio = It. misterio, < L. mysterium, < Gr. μυστήριον, secret doctrine or rite, mystery, < μύστης, one initiated, < μυεῖν, initiate into the mysteries, teach, instruct, < μύειν, close the lips or eyes, < μῦ, ■ slight sound with closed lips.] 1. pl. In ancient religions, rites known to and practised by certain initiated persons only, consisting of purifications, sacrificial offerings, processions, songs, dances, dramatic performances, and the like: as, the Eleusinian mysteries. Hence—2. (a) In the Christian Church, especially in the early church and in the Greek Church, a sacrament. This name originally had reference partly to the nature of a sacrament itself as concealing a spiritual reality under external form and matter, and partly to the fact that no catechumen was instructed in the doctrine of the sacraments (except partially as to baptism) or admitted to be present at their administration except through baptism as an initiation. (b) pl. The consecrated elements in the eucharist; in the singular, the eucharist.

My duty is to exhort you . . . to consider the dignity of that holy mystery [the Holy Sacrament], and the great peril of the unworthy receiving thereof.
Book of Common Prayer, Communion Office, First [Exhortation.

(c) Any religious doctrine or body of doctrines that seems above human comprehension.

They counte as Fables the holie misteries of Christian Religion. Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 82.

Great is the mystery of godliness. 1 Tim. iii. 16.

3. In general, a fact, matter, or phenomenon of which the meaning, explanation, or cause is not known, and which awakens curiosity or inspires awe; something that is inexplicable; an enigmatic secret.

'Twas you incensed the rabble:
Cats, that can judge as fitly of his worth
As I can of those mysteries which heaven
Will not have earth to know. Shak., Cor., iv. 2. 35.

Over whose actions the hypocrisy of his youth, and the seclusion of his old age, threw a singular mystery.
Macaulay, History.

Mystery does indeed imply ignorance, and in the removal of both the principle of curiosity is involved; but there may be ignorance without mystery.
Mark Hopkins, Essays, p. 10.

4. A form of dramatic composition much in vogue in the middle ages, and still played in some parts of Europe in a modified form, the characters and events of which were drawn from sacred history.

Properly speaking, Mysteries deal with Gospel events only, their object being primarily to set forth, by an illustration of the prophetic history of the Old Testament, and more particularly of the fulfilling history of the New, the central mystery of the Redemption of the world, as accomplished by the Nativity, the Passion, and the Resurrection.
A. W. Ward, Eng. Dram. Lit., I. 23.

mystery[2]† (mis'tẹ-ri), n.; pl. mysteries (-riz). [Commonly confused with mystery[1], to which it has been accom. in spelling; prop. mistery, < ME. misterie, mysterie, for mister, mistere, mester, mester, etc., a trade, craft, etc., ult. < L. ministerium, office, occupation: see mister[2].] Occupation; trade; office; profession; calling; art; craft.

Preestes been aungeles, as by the dignitee of hir mysterye. Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

Gouernour of the mysterie and companie of the Marchants aduenturers for the discouerie of Regions.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 266.

'Tis in the malice of mankind that he thus advises us [to steal]; not to have us [thieves] thrive in our mystery.
Shak., T. of A., iv. 3. 456.

mystic (mis'tik), a. and n. [Formerly also mistick, mystick; < F. mystique = Sp. místico = Pg. mystico = It. mistico, < L. mysticus, < Gr. μυστικός, secret, mystic, < μύστης, one who is initiated: see mystery[1].] I. a. 1. Pertaining to any of the ancient mysteries.

The ceremonial law, with all its mystic rites, . . . to many, that bestow the reading on it, seems scarce worth it; yet what use the apostles made of it with the Jews!
Boyle, Works, II. 278.

2. Hidden from or obscure to human knowledge or comprehension; pertaining to what is obscure or incomprehensible; mysterious; dark; obscure; specifically, expressing a sense comprehensible only to a higher grade of intelligence or to those especially initiated.

And ye five other wandering fires, that move
In mystic dance not without song, resound
His praise. Milton, P. L., v. 178.

3. Of or pertaining to mystics or mysticism.

No mystic dreams of ascetic piety had come to trouble the tranquillity of its humanistic devotion. J. Caird.

4. In the civil law of Louisiana, sealed or closed: as, a mystic testament.—Mystic hexagram. See hexagram, 2.—Mystic recitation, the recitation of those parts of the Greek liturgy which are ordered to be said in a low or inaudible voice, like the secreta of the Western offices: opposed to the ecphoneses (see ecphonesis, 2).=Syn. 2 and 3. Cabalistic, etc. See mysterious.

II. n. One who accepts or preaches some form of mysticism; specifically [cap.], one who holds to the possibility of direct conscious and unmistakable intercourse with God by a species of ecstasy. See Quietist, Pietist, Gichtelian.

mystical (mis'ti-kạl), a. [< mystic + -al.] Same as mystic.

Almighty God, who hast knit together thine elect in one communion and fellowship in the mystical body of thy Son.
Book of Common Prayer, Collect for All Saints' Day.

The mystical Pythagoras, and the allegorizing Plato.
I. D'Israeli, Amen. of Lit., II. 399.

'Tis the sunset of life gives me mystical lore,
And coming events cast their shadows before.
Campbell, Lochiel's Warning.

Mystical body of the church. See body.—Mystical fan. See flabellum.—Mystical sense of Scripture, a sense to be apprehended only by spiritual experience.—Mystical theology, the knowledge of God or of divine things, derived not from observation or from argument, but wholly from spiritual experience, and not discriminated or tested by the reason.

mystically (mis'ti-kạl-i), adv. In a mystic manner, or by an act implying a secret meaning; in Greek liturgies, in a low or inaudible voice; secretly. See mystic recitation, under mystic.

mysticalness (mis'ti-kạl-nes), n. The quality of being mystical. Bailey, 1727.

Mysticete (mis-ti-sē'tē), n. pl. [NL., irreg. for mystacocete*, < Gr. μύσταξ, the upper lip (see mustache), + κῆτος, pl. κήτη, a whale: see Cete[3].] A suborder of Cete or Cetacea, having no teeth developed, the upper jaw being provided with baleen plates; the balænoid whales or whalebone-whales: opposed to Denticete. The supramaxillary bone is produced outward in front of the orbits, the rami of the lower jaw remain separate, the nasal bones project forward, and the olfactory organs are well developed. There are two families, Balænopteridæ and Balænidæ. See cut under Balænidæ.

mysticete (mis'ti-sēt), a. [< NL. Mysticete.] Having baleen instead of teeth in the upper jaw; belonging to the Mysticete.

mysticism (mis'ti-sizm), n. [= F. mysticisme = Sp. misticismo = Pg. mysticismo = It. misticismo; as mystic + -ism.] 1. The character of being mystic or mystical; mysticalness.—2. Any mode of thought, or phase of intellectual or religious life, in which reliance is placed upon a spiritual illumination believed to transcend the ordinary powers of the understanding.

The lofty mysticism of his [Plato's] philosophy.
D. Stewart, Philos. Essays, ii. 5.

Mysticism is a phase of thought, or rather perhaps of feeling, which from its very nature is hardly susceptible of exact definition. It appears in connection with the endeavor of the human mind to grasp the divine essence or the ultimate reality of things, and to enjoy the blessedness of actual communication with the Highest.
Encyc. Brit., XVII. 128.

3. Specifically, a form of religious belief which is founded upon spiritual experience, not discriminated or tested and systematized in thought. Mysticism and rationalism represent opposite poles of theology, rationalism regarding the reason as the highest faculty of man and the sole arbiter in all matters of religious doctrine; mysticism, on the other hand, declaring that spiritual truth cannot be apprehended by the logical faculty, nor adequately expressed in terms of the understanding.

mystick[1]†, a. and n. An obsolete spelling of mystic.

mystick[2] (mis'tik), n. Same as mistico.

Two or three picturesque barks, called mysticks, with long latine sails, were gliding down it.
Col. Irving, A Visit to Palos.

mystification (mis″ti-fi-kā'shǫn), n. [= F. mystification = Pg. mystificação; as mystify + -ation.] 1. The act of mystifying; something designed to mystify; the act of perplexing one or playing on one's credulity; a trick.

It was impossible to say where jest began and earnest ended. You read in constant mistrust lest you might be the victim of a mystification when you least expected one.
Edinburgh Rev.

2. The state of being mystified.

mystificator (mis'ti-fi-kā-tǫr), n. [< mystify, after F. mystificateur.] One who mystifies.

mystify (mis'ti-fī), v. t.; pret. and pp. mystified, ppr. mystifying. [< F. mystifier = Pg. mystificar, irreg. < Gr. μυστικός, mystic, + L. -ficare, < facere, make: see -fy.] To perplex purposely; play on the credulity of; bewilder; befog.

Mr. Pickwick . . . was considerably mystified by this very unpolite by-play.
Dickens, Pickwick, ii.

Mystropetaleæ (mis″trō-pe-tā'lē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (J. D. Hooker, 1856), < Mystropetalon + -eæ.] A tribe of dicotyledonous apetalous plants of the family Balanophoraceæ, consisting of the genus Mystropetalon.

Mystropetalon (mis-trō-pet'a-lon), n. [NL. (Harvey, 1839), < Gr. μύστρον, μύστρος, a spoon, + πέταλον, a leaf: see petal.] A genus of leafless root-parasites, constituting the tribe Mystropetaleæ of the family Balanophoraceæ. It is known by the two or three free stamens, cubical pollen-grains, and two-lipped staminate and bell-shaped pistillate flowers. It contains two South African species, fleshy scaly herbs, without green color, producing a dense head of flowers.

mytacism (mī'ta-sizm), n. [Also, erroneously, metacism; = F. métacisme, prop. mytacisme = Pg. meticismo, < LL. mytacismus, also mœtacismus, erroneously metacismus, < LGr. μυτακισμός, fondness for the letter μ, < Gr. μῦ, the letter μ.] A fault of speech or of writing, consisting of a too frequent repetition of the sound of the letter m, either by substituting it for others through defect of utterance, or by using several words containing it in close conjunction.

mytane†, myteyne†, n. Middle English forms of mitten.

myte†, n. A Middle English spelling of mite[1], mite[2].

myter†, n. and v. A Middle English spelling of miter.

myth (mith), n. [Formerly also mythe; = F. mythe = Sp. mito = Pg. mytho = It. mito (D. G. Dan. mythe = Sw. myt), < LL. mythos, NL. mythus, < Gr. μῦθος, word, speech, story, legend.] 1. A traditional story in which the operations of natural forces and occurrences in human history are represented as the actions of individual living beings, especially of men, or of imaginary extra-human beings acting like men; a tale handed down from primitive times, and in form historical, but in reality involving elements of early religious views, as respecting the origin of things, the powers of nature and their workings, the rise of institutions, the history of races and communities, and the like; a legend of cosmogony, of gods and heroes, and of animals possessing wondrous gifts.—2. In a looser sense, an invented story; something purely fabulous or having no existence in fact; an imaginary or fictitious individual or object: as, his wealthy relative was a mere myth; his having gone to Paris is a myth. Myth is thus often used as a euphemism for falsehood or lie.
=Syn. 1. Myth, Fable, Parable. See the quotation.

What is a myth? A myth is, in form, a narrative; resembling, in this respect, the fable, parable, and allegory. But, unlike these, the idea or feeling from which the myth springs, and which, in a sense, it embodies, is not reflectively distinguished from the narrative, but rather is blended with it; the latter being, as it were, the native form which the idea or sentiment spontaneously assumes. Moreover, there is no consciousness, on the part of those from whom the myth emanates, that this product of their fancy and feeling is fictitious. The fable is a fictitious story, contrived to inculcate a moral. So the parable is a similitude framed for the express purpose of representing abstract truth to the imagination. Both fable and parable are the result of conscious invention. In both, the symbolical character of the narrative is distinctly recognized. From the myth, on the contrary, the element of deliberation is utterly absent. There is no questioning of its reality, no criticism or inquiry on the point, but the most simple unreflecting faith.
G. P. Fisher, Supernatural Origin of Christianity, vi.

mythe†, n. An obsolete spelling of myth.

myth-history (mith'his″tǫ-ri), n. History interspersed with fable; mythical history.

mythi, n. Plural of mythus.

mythic (mith'ik), a. [= F. mythique = Sp. mítico = Pg. mythico = It. mitico (D. G. mythisch = Dan. mythisk = Sw. mytisk), < L. mythicus, < Gr. μυθικός, pertaining to a myth, legendary, < μῦθος, a myth: see myth.] Same as mythical.

mythical (mith'i-kal), a. [< mythic + -al.] 1. Relating to or characterized by myths; described in a myth; existing only in a myth or myths; fabulous; fabled; imaginary.

A comparison of the histories of the most different nations shows the mythical period to have been common to all; and we may trace in many quarters substantially the same miracles, though varied by national characteristics, and with a certain local cast and colouring.
Lecky, Europ. Morals, I. 374.

2. Untrue; invented; false.

The account of pheasants being captured by poachers lighting sulphur under their roosting-trees appears very mythical.
The Academy, June 15, 1889, p. 411.

Mythical theory, in theol., the theory, developed by the German theologian D. F. Strauss, that the miracles and other supernatural events of the Bible are myths: opposed to the naturalistic theory, that they may be explained as natural phenomena, and to the supernatural theory, that they were the results of and witnesses to a supernatural power working on and through nature.

mythically (mith'i-kal-i), adv. In a mythical manner; by means of mythical fables or allegories. Ruskin.

mythicist (mith'i-sist), n. [< mythic + -ist.] One who asserts that persons and events appearing or alleged to be supernatural are imaginary or have for their basis a myth.

The mythicist says that the thoughts of the Jewish mind conjured up the divine interference, and imagined the facts of the history.
Princeton Rev., July, 1879, p. 162.

mythicizer (mith'i-sī-zėr), n. [< mythicize* (< mythic + -ize) + -er[1].] A mythicist.

The history of the birth of our Lord and His forerunner affords apparent advantage to the mythicizer beyond the other parts of the New Testament, where the events are closer to the narrators.
Contemporary Rev., XLIX. 184.

mythist (mith'ist), n. [< myth + -ist.] A maker of myths.

When poets, and mythists, and theologists of antiquity were accustomed to weave just such fancies as they pleased.
The Independent (New York), June 19, 1862.

mythogenesis (mith-ǫ-jen'e-sis), n. [< Gr. μῦθος, a myth, + γένεσις, production.] The production of or the tendency to originate myths.

The cause of the extraordinary development in man of mythogenesis, as of other faculties, was "an external impulse," "a radical change in the conditions of existence of primitive man."
Mind, XII. 623.

mythographer (mi-thog'ra-fėr), n. [< mythograph-y + -er[1].] A framer or writer of myths; a narrator of myths, fables, or legends.

The statues of Mars and Venus, I imagine, had been copied from Fulgentius, Boccaccio's favourite mythographer.
Warton, Hist. Eng. Poetry, I., Addenda.

mythography (mi-thog'ra-fi), n. [< Gr. μυθογραφία, legend-writing, < μυθογράφος, a writer of legends or myths, < μῦθος, a myth, + γράφειν, write.] 1. Representation of myths in graphic or plastic art; art-mythology.

Mythography, or the expression of the Myth in Art, moved on pari passu with mythology, or the expression of the Myth in Literature: as one has reacted on the other, so is one the interpreter of the other.
C. T. Newton, Art and Archæol., p. 22.

2. Descriptive mythology. O. T. Mason.

mythologer (mi-thol'ǫ-jėr), n. [< mythology + -er[1].] A mythologist.

mythologian (mith-ǫ-lō'ji-an), n. [< mythology + -an.] A mythologist.

Quite opposed to this, the solar theory, is that proposed by Professor Kuhn, and adopted by the most eminent mythologians of Germany.
Max Müller.

mythologic (mith-ǫ-loj'ik), a. [< F. mythologique = Sp. mitológico = Pg. mythologico = It. mitologico, < LL. mythologicus, < Gr. μυθολογικός, pertaining to mythology or legendary lore, < μυθολογία, mythology: see mythology.] Same as mythological.

mythological (mith-ǫ-loj'i-kal), a. [< mythologic + -al.] Relating to mythology; proceeding from mythology; of the nature of a myth; containing myths: fabulous: as, a mythological account of the creation.

The mythological interpretation of these I purposely omit.
Raleigh, Hist. World, II. xvi. 6.

mythologically (mith-ǫ-loj'i-kal-i), adv. In a mythological manner; by reference to mythology; by the employment of myths.

mythologise, mythologiser. See mythologize, mythologizer.

mythologist (mi-thol'ǫ-jist), n. [After F. mythologiste = Sp. mitologista = Pg. mythologista = It. mitologista; as mythology + -ist.] One who is versed in mythology; one who writes on mythology or explains myths.

mythologize (mi-thol'ǫ-jīz), v.; pret. and pp. mythologized, ppr. mythologizing. [< F. mythologiser; as mythology + -ize.] I. intrans. 1. To construct or relate mythical history.

The supernatural element in the life of St. Catharine may be explained partly by the mythologising adoration of the people, ready to find a miracle in every act of her they worshipped, partly by her own temperament and modes of life.
J. A. Symonds, Italy and Greece, p. 57.

2. To explain myths.

II. trans. 1. To make into a myth.

This parable was immediately mythologised.
Swift, Tale of a Tub, Author's Pref.

2. To render mythical.

Our religion is geographical, belongs to our time and place; respects and mythologizes some one time, and place, and person, and people.
Emerson, N. A. Rev., CXXVI. 414.

3. To interpret in relation to mythology. [Rare.]

Ovid's Metamorphosis Englishized, Mythologized, and Represented in Figures.
Sandys, title of tr. of Ovid's Metamorph.

Also spelled mythologise.

mythologizer (mi-thol'ǫ-jī-zėr), n. One who or that which mythologizes. Also spelled mythologiser.

Imagination has always been, and still is, in a narrower sense, the great mythologizer.
Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 85.

mythologue† (mith'ǫ-log), n. [< Gr. μῦθος, a myth, + -λογος, < λέγειν, say.] A myth or fable invented for a purpose. [Rare.]

May we not . . . consider his history of the fall as an excellent mythologue to account for the origin of human evil?
Dr. A. Geddes, Pref. to Trans. of the Bible.

mythology (mi-thol'ǫ-ji), n.; pl. mythologies (-jiz). [< F. mythologie = Sp. mitología = Pg. mythologia = It. mitologia, < LL. mythologia, < Gr. μυθολογία, legendary lore, < μῦθος, a myth + -λογία, < λέγειν, say: see -ology.] 1. The science of myths; the science which investigates myths with a view to their interpretation and to discover the degree of relationship existing between the myths of different peoples; also, the description or history of myths. The study of surviving myths among European nations and of the imperfectly developed mythic systems of barbarous or savage races is usually accounted part of the study of folk-lore.

2. A system of myths or fables in which are embodied the convictions of a people in regard to their origin, divinities, heroes, founders, etc. See myth.

mythonomy (mi-thon'ǫ-mi), n. [< Gr. μῦθος, a myth, + νόμος, law.] The deductive and predictive stage of mythology. O. T. Mason.

mythopeic, mythopœic (mith-ǫ-pē'ik), a. [< Gr. μυθοποιός, making mythic legends, < μῦθος, a myth, legend, + ποιεῖν, make.] Myth-making; producing or tending to produce myths; suggesting or giving rise to myths. Also mythopoetic.

Though we may thus explain the mythopœic fertility of the Greeks, I am far from pretending that we can render any sufficient account of the supreme beauty of their chief epic and artistical productions.
Grote, Hist. Greece, i. 16.

mythopeist, mythopœist (mith-ǫ-pē'ist), n. [As mythopeic + -ist.] A myth-maker.

The Vedic mythopœist is never weary of personifying this particular part of celestial nature [the dawn].
Keary, Prim. Belief, p. 145.

mythoplasm (mith'ǫ-plazm), n. [< Gr. μῦθος, myth, + πλάσμος, anything molded, a fiction, < πλάσσειν, mold, fabricate.] A narration of mere fable.

mythopœic, mythopœist. See mythopeic, mythopeist.

mythopoetic (mith″ǫ-pǫ-et'ik), a. [< Gr. μῦθος, myth, + ποιητικός, capable of making: see poetic.] Same as mythopeic.

mythus (mī'thus), n.; pl. mythi (-thī). [NL., < Gr. μῦθος, myth: see myth.] Same as myth, 1.

Mytilacea (mit-i-lā'sē-ä), n. pl. [NL. (Cuvier, 1817), < Mytilus + -aceæ.] 1. The mussel family, in a broad sense; the Mytilidæ. In De Blainville's classification (1825) this family consisted of Mytilus (including Modiola and Lithodomus) and Pinna.

2. A superfamily or suborder of bivalves, comprising the families Mytilidæ, Aviculidæ, Prasinidæ, and those differentiated from them.

mytilacean (mit-i-lā′sē-an), a. and n. I. a. Mussel-like; mytiloid or mytiliform; pertaining to the Mytilacea.

II. n. A mussel or some similar shell; any member of the Mytilacea.

mytilaceous (mit-i-lā′shius), a. [< NL. Mytilus + -aceous.] Resembling a mussel; mytiliform; mytiloid; of or pertaining to the Mytilacea.

Mytilaspis (mit-i-las′pis), n. [NL. (Targioni-Tozzetti, 1868), < Gr. μυτίλος, a sea-mussel, + ἀσπίς, a round shield.] A large and important genus of scale-insects, of the homopterous family Coccidæ and subfamily Diaspinæ. They belong among the armored scales, and have the scale long, narrow, more or less curved, with the exuviæ at the anterior extremity. The genus is cosmopolitan, as are many of its species. M. pomorum (= ulmi) is the oyster-shell scale-insect of the apple. Some discussion has arisen respecting the precedence of this genus or Lepidosaphes of Shimer, proposed in January, 1868, and most systematists will probably adopt the latter name. See cut under scale-insect.

Mytilidæ (mī-til′i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Fleming, 1828), < Mytilus + -idæ.] A family of byssiferous (byssogenous) asiphonate bivalve mollusks, typified by the genus Mytilus; the mussels. The shell is equivalve, inequilateral, thickly coated with epidermis, with a weak and generally toothless hinge and marginal ligament. The animal is dimyarian, with a large posterior and a small anterior muscle; the mantle is united by its margins behind into a fringed rudiment of an anal siphon. A well-developed byssus is always present. The species are mostly marine. Mytilus, Modiolus, and Lithodomus are representative genera. These and their allies constitute the subfamily Mytilinæ. See cuts under Mytilus, Modiola, Dreissenidæ, and date-shell.

mytiliform (mī-til′i-fôrm), a. [< L. mytilus (see Mytilus), a mussel, + forma, form.] Shaped like a mussel-shell; resembling a mussel; mytiloid.

Mytilinæ (mit-i-lī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Mytilus + -inæ.] A subfamily of Mytilidæ, represented by the genus Mytilus and closely related forms.

mytilite (mit′i-līt), n. [< NL. Mytilus + *-ite*2.] A fossil mussel-shell like, or supposed to be, a member of the genus Mytilus, or referred to an old genus Mytilites.

mytiloid (mit′i-loid), a. and n. [< L. mytilus (see Mytilus), a mussel, + Gr. εἶδος, form.] I. a. Like a mussel; mytiliform; of or pertaining to the Mytilidæ.

II. n. A member of the family Mytilidæ; a mussel.

mytilotoxin (mit″i-lō-tok′sin), n. [< Gr. μυτίλος, a sea-mussel, + τοξ(ικόν), poison, + *-ine*2.] A leucomaine ($C_6H_{15}NO_2$) found in the common mussel. It is an active poison.

Mytilus (mit′i-lus), n. [NL., < L. mytilus, mitulus, < Gr. μυτίλος, μυτύλος, a sea-mussel, < μῦς, a shell-fish: see mouse and niche.] A genus of bivalves to which very different limits have been assigned. In modern systems it is the typical genus of Mytilidæ, characterized by its terminal umbones. M. edulis is the commonest mussel, found on most coasts, adhering by the byssus in multitudes to rocks, submerged wood, etc. They are often used for food, sometimes cultivated, and used in large quantities for manure. Also written Mytillus, Mytulus.

Sea-mussel (Mytilus smaragdinus).

myxa (mik′sä), n.; pl. myxæ (-sē). [NL., < Gr. μύξα, nostril, beak, also mucus: see mucus.] In ornith., the terminal part of the under mandible of a bird, as far as the symphysis or gonys extends, corresponding to the dertrum of the upper mandible. [Little used.]

★myxedema (mik-sē-dē′mä), n. [< Gr. μύξα, mucus, + E. edema.] A disease having the following characters: (1) An increase and degeneration of connective tissue over the body, so that it yields an extraordinary quantity of mucin, and hence an edematoid condition of the skin, which does not, however, pit on pressure. This is accompanied by dystrophy of epidermic structures and failure of dermal secretions; anæsthesia, paresthesiac neuralgias, and digestive troubles also are complained of. (2) Muscular and mental sluggishness, which may advance to extreme dementia; subnormal temperature in most cases, and high arterial tension in many. (3) Atrophy or other disease of the thyroid gland, this being the essential lesion upon which all the other symptoms depend. The disease usually occurs in women over forty years of age, but has been observed in men and children.

myxedematous (mik-sē-dem′a-tus), a. [< myxedema(t-) + -ous.] Pertaining to, of the nature of, or affected with myxedema.

Myxine (mik-sī′nē), n. [< Gr. μύξα, slime, + *-ine*2.] A genus of myzonts which have a very slimy body and attach themselves to fishes by means of their sucker-like mouth, typical of the family Myxinidæ; the hags. See cut under *hag*1, 3.

Myxinidæ (mik-sin′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Myxine + -idæ.] A family of hyperotretous marsipobranchs, cyclostomes, or myzonts, represented by the genus Myxine. (a) In Gill's ichthyological system, hags with six pairs of branchial sacs which open by ducts confluent with an inferior median canal discharging by one aperture. These hags have an elongate eel-like form, and live in the colder waters of both the northern and the southern hemisphere. They are destructive to other fishes. Often when a fish is caught upon the line, they bore into the body and feed upon the flesh. They are known as hags, hagfishes, slime-eels, and suckers. (b) In Günther's system, a family of cyclostomatous fishes whose nasal duct penetrates the palate, including the Myxinidæ proper and the Heptatremidæ or Bdellostomidæ.

myxinoid (mik′si-noid), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to the Myxinidæ or Myxinoidea, or having their characters.

II. n. A myzont (a) of the family Myxinidæ or Myxinoidæ, or (b) of the order Myxinoidea.

myxochondroma (mik″sō-kon-drō′mä), n.; pl. myxochondromata (-ma-tä). [NL., < Gr. μύξα, mucus, + NL. chondroma, q. v.] A tumor composed of mucous tissue mixed with cartilage; myxoma united with chondroma.

myxofibroma (mik″sō-fī-brō′mä), n.; pl. myxofibromata (-ma-tä). [NL., < Gr. μύξα, mucus, + NL. fibroma, q. v.] A tumor composed of mucous tissue mixed with connective tissue.

Myxogastres (mik-sō-gas′trēz), n. pl. [NL. (Fries), < Gr. μύξα, mucus, + γαστήρ, stomach.] Same as Myxomycetes.

myxogastric (mik-sō-gas′trik), a. [< NL. Myxogastr-es + -ic.] Same as myxogastrous.

myxogastrous (mik-sō-gas′trus), a. [< NL. Myxogastr-es + -ous.] Pertaining to the Myxogastres.

myxolipoma (mik″sō-li-pō′mä), n.; pl. myxolipomata (-ma-tä). [NL., < Gr. μύξα, mucus, + NL. lipoma, q. v.] A tumor composed of mucous mixed with fatty tissue.

myxoma (mik-sō′mä), n.; pl. myxomata (-ma-tä). [NL., < Gr. μύξα, mucus, + -oma.] A tumor consisting of mucous tissue—that is, a tissue with round, fusiform, or stellate cells in a transparent, semifluid, intercellular substance containing a large amount of mucin. Also called collonema.

myxomatous (mik-som′a-tus), a. [< myxoma(t-) + -ous.] Pertaining to a myxoma; affected with myxoma.

Myxomycetaceæ (mik-sō-mī-sē-tā′sē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Myxomycetes + -aceæ.] Same as Myxomycetes.

Myxomycetes (mik″sō-mī-sē′tēz), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. μύξα, mucus, + μύκητες, pl. μύκης, a mushroom, fungus.] A group of low organisms, the slime-molds, showing characteristics of both animals and plants. Botanists have studied them most. Three orders, Acrasiales, Plasmodiophorales, and Myxogastrales are recognized. They form slimy yellow, brown, or purple (never green) masses of motile protoplasm during active growth, and are then destitute of cell-wall. Under certain conditions they secrete a cellulose wall and pass into a resting state. This resting state is brought about either by the absence of the requisite moisture, producing larger, somewhat irregular masses, the so-called sclerotium s age, or when the plasmodium seems to have concluded its vegetative period, the protoplasm then becoming heaped into a mass which breaks up internally into a large number of rounded bodies, the spores, each one of which is provided with a cell-wall. Under proper conditions these spores burst their walls and become motile nucleated masses of protoplasm (swarm-spores) which divide separately by simple fission. After a few days two or more of these swarm-spores coalesce and form new plasmodia, which differ only in size from the original. They occur on decaying logs, tan-bark, decaying mosses, etc. See Mycetozoa.

myxomycetous (mik″sō-mī-sē′tus), a. [< NL. Myxomycetes + -ous.] Pertaining to the Myxomycetes.

myxon† (mik′son), n. [< L. myxon, myxo(n-), < Gr. μύξων, also μυξίνος, a smooth sea-fish, a kind of mullet, appar. < μύξα, mucus: see mucus.] A mullet of the family Mugilidæ.

myxopod (mik′sō-pod), n. and a. [< NL. myxopus (-pod-), < Gr. μύξα, mucus, + πούς (ποδ-) = E. foot.] I. n. A protozoan animal possessing pseudopodia, as distinguished from a mastigopod, one which has cilia or flagella; one of the Myxopoda. See cut under Protomyxa.

II. a. Same as myxopodous.

Myxopoda (mik-sop′ō-dä), n. pl. [NL.: see myxopod.] Protozoans whose locomotive appendages assume the form of pseudopodia: synonymous with Rhizopoda. Huxley.

myxopodous (mik-sop′ō-dus), a. Of or pertaining to the Myxopoda; possessing pseudopodia. Also myxopod.

myxosarcoma (mik″sō-sär-kō′mä), n.; pl. myxosarcomata (-ma-tä). [NL., < Gr. μύξα, mucus, + σάρκωμα, a fleshy excrescence: see sarcoma.] A tumor composed of mucous and sarcomatous tissue.

myxosarcomatous (mik″sō-sär-kom′a-tus), a. [< myxosarcoma(t-) + -ous.] Pertaining to a myxosarcoma.

Myxospongiæ (mik-sō-spon′ji-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. μύξα, mucus, + σπογγιά, a sponge: see sponge.] A division of the Spongida or Porifera, established for the reception of the genus Halisarca, consisting of certain gelatinous sponges.

myxospore (mik′sō-spōr), n. [< Gr. μύξα, mucus, + σπόρος, seed.] In certain fungi, a spore produced in the midst of a gelatinous mass, without evident differentiation of ascus or basidium as in ascospores or basidiospores.

myxosporous (mik-sō-spō′rus), a. [< myxospore + -ous.] Containing, producing, or resembling a myxospore.

myxotheca (mik-sō-thē′kä), n.; pl. myxothecæ (-sē). [NL., < Gr. μύξα, mucus, + θήκη, a sheath.] The inferior unguicorn of a bird's bill, or horny sheath of the end of the lower mandible, corresponding to the dertrotheca of the upper mandible.

Myzomela (mī-zom′e-lä), n. [NL., < Gr. μύζειν, mutter, + μέλος, song.] The typical genus of Myzomelinæ, containing most of the species of the subfamily, nearly 30 in number. The bill is long and slender, and curved; the tail is two thirds as long as the wing; the coloration of the males is chiefly black and red, with or without yellow on the under parts, and that of the females is generally plain olive above. M. cardinalis is known as the cardinal honey-eater; M. sanguinoleata as the sanguineous or cochineal creeper; the former inhabits New Hebrides, the latter Australia.

Myzomelinæ (mī-zom-e-lī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Myzomela + -inæ.] A subfamily of Meliphagidæ, typified by the genus Myzomela.

myzomeline (mī-zom′e-lin), a. Pertaining to the Myzomelinæ, or having their characters.

myzont (mī′zont), a. and n. [< NL. myzon (in pl. Myzontes), < Gr. μύζων (μυζοντ-), ppr. of μύζειν, suck.] I. a. Sucking or suctorial, as a lamprey or hag; of or pertaining to the Myzontes; cyclostomous or marsipobranchiate, as a fish.

II. n. Any member of the Myzontes; a lamprey or hag.

Myzontes (mī-zon′tēz), n. pl. [NL., pl. of myzon: see myzont.] A class of vertebrates in which the skull is incompletely developed and there is no lower jaw. The brain is distinctly developed. The heart is also well developed, and partitioned into an auricle and a ventricle. The gills have a pouch-like form. In the adult the mouth is circular and suctorial. The Myzontes are the lampreys and hags, representing two orders, Hyperoartia and Hyperotreta. Also called Cyclostomi, Marsipobranchii, and Monorhina.

Myzostomida (mī-zō-stom′i-dä), n. pl. [NL., < Myzostomum + -ida.] An order of doubtful affinities, referred by some to the worms and by others approximated to the mites. It comprises symmetrical animals provided with an external chitinous cuticle, five pairs of movable parapodia, each with a hook and supporting rod, and an alimentary canal with oral and anal apertures, through which latter the eggs are extruded. They are parasitic on crinoids and in starfishes. Also Myzostomata.

Myzostomidæ (mī-zō-stom′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Myzostomum + -idæ.] A family of Myzostomida with ramified alimentary canal, parapodia connected by muscles which converge to a central muscular mass, body-cavity divided into paired chambers by incomplete septa, and usually four pairs of suckers. They are hermaphrodite or dioecious; the ova are evacuated through a cloaca; and the male generative apertures are situated laterally.

myzostomous (mī-zos′tō-mus), a. Of or pertaining to the Myzostomida or having their characters.

Myzostomum (mī-zos′tō-mum), n. [NL., < Gr. μύζειν, suck, + στόμα, the mouth.] The typical genus of Myzostomidæ, comprehending certain small creatures which are parasitic upon crinoids. They are not over one fifth of an inch in length, and have the form of a flattened disk. Siebold, 1843, after Myzostoma of Leuckart, 1827.

★ N, n (en), 1. The fourteenth letter and eleventh consonant in the English alphabet, having a corresponding place also in the alphabets from which ours comes. The comparative scheme of forms in these alphabets and in the Egyptian (see A) is as follows:

Egyptian. Hieroglyphic. Hieratic. | Phenician. | Early Greek and Latin.

The value of the character has been the same through the whole history of its use. It stands for the "dental" nasal, the nasal sound corresponding to d and t, as does m to b and p, and ng to g and k. This sound, namely, implies for its formation the same check or mute-contact as d and t, with sonant vibration of the vocal cords as in d, and further with unclosure of the passage from the mouth into the nose, and nasal resonance there. Among the nasals, it is by far the most common in English pronunciation (more than twice as common as m, and eight times as common as ng). While all the nasals are semivocalic or liquid, n is the only one which (like l, but not more than half as often) is used with vocalic value in syllable-making: namely, in unaccented syllables, where an accompanying vowel, formerly uttered, is now silenced: examples are token, rotten, open, lesson, reason, oven; such form, on an average, about one in eight hundred of English syllables. The sign n has no variety of sounds; but before ch, j, in the same syllable (as in inch, hinge) it takes on a slightly modified — a palatalized — character; and similarly it is gutturalized, or pronounced as ng, before k and g (hard), as in ink, finger; and its digraph ng (see G) is the usual representative of the guttural or back-palatal nasal, which in none of our alphabets has a letter to itself. N is doubled under the same circumstances as other consonants, and in a few words (as kiln, damn, hymn) is silent. In the phonetic history of our family of languages, n is on the whole a constant sound: that is to say, there is no other sound into which it passes on a large scale; but its loss, with accompanying vowel-modification, has been a frequent process.

2. As a medieval numeral, 90, and with a stroke over it (N̄), 90,000.—3. In chem., the symbol for nitrogen.—4. [l. c. or cap.] In math., an indefinite constant whole number, especially the degree of a quantic or an equation, or the class of a curve.—5. An abbreviation (a) of north or northern; (b) [l. c.] of noun (so used in this work); (c) [l. c.] of neuter; (d) [l. c.] of nail (or nails), a measure.

na (nä), adv. An obsolete or dialectal (Scotch) form of no[1].

Na. In chem., the symbol for sodium (NL. natrium).

N. A. An abbreviation (a) of North America, or North American; (b) of National Academy, or National Academician; (c) in microscopy, of numerical aperture (see objective).

naam†, n. An archaic form of nam[2].

naambarr (näm′bär), n. [Australian.] The prickly tea-tree, Melaleuca stypheloides, of New South Wales. It is a tall tree with hard wood, almost imperishable under ground, the bark in thin layers, used for thatching, etc.

nab[1] (nab), v. t.; pret. and pp. nabbed, ppr. nabbing. [Formerly also knab, as var. of knap[1]; but also nap, < Sw. nappa = Dan. nappe, catch, snatch at, seize: see nap[5].] To catch or seize suddenly or by a sudden thrust and grasp. (a) To seize and make off with: as, to nab a purse. (b) To capture or arrest: as, he was nabbed by the police. [Colloq.]

Ay, but if so be a man's nabbed, you know.
Goldsmith, Good-natured Man, iii.

nab[2] (nab), n. [For knab, var. of knap[2], as knob of knop. Cf. Icel. nabbi, a knob, knoll.] 1. The summit of a mountain or rock; any piece of rising ground: same as knob (c).

Will you just turn this nab of heath, and walk into my house?
E. Brontë, Wuthering Heights, xxi. (Davies.)

2. The cock of a gun-lock. E. H. Knight.—3. A projecting box screwed to the jamb of a door, or to one door of a pair, to receive the latch or bolt, or both, of a rim-lock.—4†. A hat; a head-covering.

Kite. Off with your hats!
Pear. Ise keep on my nab.
Farquhar, Recruiting Officer, ii. 3.

There were those who preferred the Nab, or trencher hat, with the brim flapping over their eyes.
Fielding, Jonathan Wild, ii. 6. (Davies.)

Nabalus (nab′ạ-lus), n. [NL. (Cassini, 1826); according to Gray so called (in allusion to its lyrate leaves) < Gr. νάβλα, a harp; according to others, from a N. Amer. name for the rattlesnake-root.] A genus of cichoriaceous plants, the rattlesnake-roots, embracing about twenty species. They are natives of Asia and America.

Nabatæan, Nabatean (nab-ạ-tē′an), a. and n. [Also Nabathæan; < LL. Nabataei, Nabathæi, < Gr. Ναβαταῖοι, also Ναβάται, < Heb. Nebhāyóth: see def.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the Nabatæans: as, Nabatæan kings; Nabatæan inscriptions.

II. n. One of the Arab people dwelling in ancient times on the east and southeast of Palestine, often identified with the people mentioned in the Old Testament under the name of Nebaioth (Isa. lx. 7), and in the first book of Maccabees (v. 25) as Nabathites. Their ancestor Nebajoth is spoken of as the first-born of Ishmael (Gen. xxv. 13). They are referred to in Assyrian inscriptions of the seventh century B. C., but the period of their greatest historical importance was the century immediately preceding and that immediately succeeding the Christian era. They seem to have been for a long time the chief traders between Egypt and the valley of the Euphrates. Important Nabatæan inscriptions have been recovered, and the rock-inscriptions in the valleys around Mount Sinai have been attributed to them.

Nabathite (nab′ạ-thīt), n. [As Nabath(æan) + -ite[3].] Same as Nabatæan.

nab-cheat†, n. [< nab[2], 4, + cheat[3].] A cap; a hat.

Thus we throw up our nab-cheats, first for joy.
Fletcher, Beggar's Bush, ii. 1.

nabee (nab′ē), n. [E. Ind.] Same as bikh.

nabk (nabk), n. [Ar. (?).] One of the plants which is alleged to have furnished the crown of thorns, Zizyphus Spina-Christi, a bush of northern Africa and adjacent parts of Asia.

nabob (nā′bob), n. [Also (in defs. 1, 2) nawab; cf. F. nabab = Sp. nabab = Pg. nababo = It. naba = G. nabob, a nabob (def. 3), < E.; < Hind. nawwāb, a deputy governor, < Ar. nawwāb, pl. (used as sing., as a title of honor) of nāib (> Turk. nāib), a deputy, viceroy; cf. nawb, supplying the place of another.] 1. A viceroy or governor of a province in India under the Mogul empire: as, the nabob of Oudh; the nabob of Surat. The nabob was, properly speaking, a subordinate provincial governor, who acted under a soubah or viceroy.—2. [Prop. nawab.] An honorary title conferred upon Mohammedans of distinction.—3. An Anglo-Indian who has acquired great wealth and lives in Eastern luxury; hence, any very rich and luxurious man. [Colloq.]

He that goes out an insignificant boy in a few years returns a great Nabob.
Burke, On Fox's E. I. Bill (Works, ed. 1852, III. 506).

nabs (nabz), n. [Origin obscure.] A person: with possessive pronouns. Cf. nibs.

nacarat (nak′ạ-rat), n. [< F. nacarat, < Sp. Pg. nacarado, < Sp. nácar, Pg. nacar, mother-of-pearl, nacre: see nacre.] 1. A light-red color; scarlet.

A small box I had bought for its brilliancy, of some tropic shell of the colour called nacarat. C. Brontë, Villette, xxix.

2. A crape or fine linen fabric dyed fugitively of this tint, and used by women to give a rose-ate hue to their complexions. Brande.

nache†, n. An obsolete variant of natch[2].

nache-bone†, n. An obsolete variant of natch-bone.

nacker, n. Another spelling of knacker[2].

nacket (nak′et), n. [Cf. OF. naquer, bite, gnaw.] 1. A small cake or loaf.—2. A luncheon; a piece of bread eaten at noon.

Triptolemus . . . seldom saw half so good a dinner as his guest's luncheon, . . . and even the lady herself . . . "could not but say that the young gentleman's nacket looked very good." Scott, Pirate, xi.

3. A small parcel or packet. [Scotch in all uses.]

nacre (nā′kėr), n. [Formerly naker; < F. nacre, OF. nacaire = Pr. necari = Sp. nácar, nácara = Pg. nacar = It. naccaro, nacchera, gnacchera, nacre, < ML. nacara, nacer, nacrum, a pearl-shell, nacre; cf. Kurdish nakāra, an ornament of different colors, nacre, < Ar. nakīr, hollowed out, nukrat, small round hollow, nakara, hollow out; Heb. nākar, dig, nekārāh, a pit. Cf. naker[1].] Mother-of-pearl. Nacre of commercial value is obtained from many sources, as the top-shells (Turbinidæ), tower-shells (Trochidæ), earshells (Haliotidæ), river-mussels (Unionidæ), pearl-oyster shells (Aviculidæ), etc.

nacré (nak-rā′), a. [F., < nacre, nacre: see nacre.] Having an iridescence resembling that of mother-of-pearl; nacreous: a French word applied in English to decorative objects: as, nacré porcelain.

★nacreous (nā′krē-us), a. [< nacre + -ous.] 1. Consisting of, resembling, or pertaining to nacre or mother-of-pearl: as, a nacreous luster; a nacreous layer.—2. Producing or possessing nacre, as shells which have a certain luster or lustrous layer on their inner surface.

nadde†, nadt†. Contracted Middle English forms of ne hadde, had not. Chaucer.

nadder† (nad′ėr), n. [< ME. nadder, naddre, neddre, an adder: see adder[1].] The earlier form of adder[1].

O servant traytour, false, hoomly hewe,
Lyk to the naddre [var. nedder] in bosom sly, untrewe.
Chaucer, Merchant's Tale, l. 542.

Thei speke not, but thei maken a maner of hissynge, as a Neddre dothe. Mandeville, Travels, p. 205.

nadir (nā′dėr), n. [< ME. nadir, < OF. nadir, nadaïr, F. nadir = Sp. Pg. It. nadir, < Ar. Pers. nazīr, in full nazīr assamt, nadir, lit. corresponding to the zenith, < nazīr, alike, corresponding (< nazara, be alike), + as-samt, the zenith, the azimuth: see azimuth, zenith.] 1. That point of the heavens which is vertically below any station upon the earth. It is diametrically opposite to the zenith, or point of the heavens vertically above the station. The zenith and the nadir are thus the two poles of the horizon, the nadir being the inferior pole.

The two theories differed as widely as the zenith from the nadir in their main principles.
Hawthorne, Blithedale Romance, vii.

Hence—2. The lowest point; the point of extreme depression.

The reign of William the Third, as Mr. Hallam happily says, was the Nadir of the national prosperity.
Macaulay, Hallam's Const. Hist.

Nadir of the sun, in astron., the axis of the conical shadow cast by the earth. Crabb. [Rare.]

nadir-basin (nā′dėr-bā″sn), n. A vessel of mercury used for observing the nadir with a meridian-circle.

nadorite (nad′ọr-īt), n. [< Nador (see def.) + -ite[2].] A mineral containing antimony, lead, oxygen, and chlorin, occurring in brownish orthorhombic crystals at Djebel-Nador in Algeria.

nads†, n. [A form of adz, due to misdivision of an adz.] An adz.

An ax and a nads to make troffe for thy hogs.
Tusser, Husbandrie, p. 36.

nae (nā), a. A Scotch form of no[2].

nænia, n. See nenia.

naething (nā′thing), n. A Scotch form of nothing.

nævе, neve[4] (nēv), n. [< L. nævus, mole, a birthmark, spot, blemish: see nævus.] 1. A blemish on the skin, as a mole or blotch; a birth-mark; a nævus.

So many spots, like nævеs, our Venus soil?
Dryden, Death of Lord Hastings, l. 55.

Hence—2. A blemish of any kind.

Besides these outward nevеs or open faults, errors, there be many inward infirmities. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 539.

nævi, n. Plural of nævus.

nævoid (nē′void), a. [< nævus + -oid.] Resembling a nævus.

nævose (nē′vōs), a. [< NL. nævosus:* see nævous.] Same as nævous.

nævous (nē′vus), a. [< NL. nævosus,* < L. nævus, mole, wart, a birth-mark: see nævus.] Spotted, as if marked with nævi.

nævus (nē′vus), n.; pl. nævi (-vī). [L., a mole, wart, birth-mark, spot, a blemish, prob. for gnævus,* < √ gna, produce, bear, in gnatus, natus, born, nasci, be born: see natal[1], ken[2].] 1. A congenital local discoloration of the skin, including nævus vascularis and nævus pigmentosus. Also called birth-mark, mother's mark, and nævus maternus. Compare mole[1]. Hence—2. In zoöl., a spot or mark resembling a nævus.—Nævus pigmentosus, a pigmented mole; a spot of excessive pigmentation on the skin, with more or less hypertrophy of corium, epidermis, or epidermal structures (hairs). The pigment is found both in the rete mucosum and in the corium.—Nævus pilosus, a pigmented mole with an excessive growth of hair. Also called nævus pilaris.—Nævus spilus, a smooth pigmented mole.—Nævus unius lateris, a pigmented mole of a kind the distribution of which corresponds to that of one or more cutaneous nerves. Also called papilloma neuropathicum.—Nævus vascularis, a vascular nævus, an angioma of the skin or skin and subcutaneous tissue, which may or may not rise above the level of surrounding skin, may be from a bright-red to a dark-purple color, according to its depth, and may be small or very extensive. Also called strawberry-mark and claret-cheek.—Nævus verrucosus, a pigmented mole with a warty surface.

nag[1] (nag), v.; pret. and pp. nagged, ppr. nagging. [Also written knag; prop. (orig.) gnag, related to gnaw as drag to draw; cf. Sw. Norw. nagga, gnaw, nibble, tease; a secondary form of the verb represented by gnaw, q. v.] I. trans. 1. To nick; chip; slit. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—2. To irritate or annoy with continued scolding, petty faultfinding, or urging; pester with continual complaints; torment; worry.

'that by which a thing is known,' from the root gno*, Teut. knā*, Gr. γιγνώσκειν, L. noscere, gnoscere* = AS. cnāwan, E. know (see know[1]), but this view ignores phonetic difficulties in the relations of the above forms, and fails to explain the appar. cognate Ir. ainm, W. enw, and OBulg. imę = Serv. ime = Bohem. jme, jmeno = Pol. imie = Russ. imya = OPruss. emnes, name. It seems probable that all the words cited are actually related, and that the appar. irregularities are due to interference or conformation. From the L. form are ult. E. nominal, nominate, etc., cognomen, etc., noun, pronoun, renown, etc., with the technical nome[3], nomen, agnomen, nomial, binomial, etc.; from the Gr. are ult. E. synonym, paronym, patronymic, metronymic, etc., onym, mononym, polyonymous, etc. From the E. noun are name, v., neven.] 1. A word by which a person or thing is denoted; the word or words by which an individual person or thing, or a class of persons or things, is designated, and distinguished from others; appellation; denomination; designation. In most communities of European civilization at the present day the name a person bears is double — consisting of the family name or surname and the Christian or distinctively personal name, which latter ordinarily precedes the surname, but in some countries stands last. Either of these name-elements may and (the personal name especially) often does consist of two or more names as component parts. An ancient Roman of historical times had necessarily two names, one distinguishing his family or gens, the nomen, or nomen gentilicium, and the other, the prænomen, distinguishing the individual: as, Caius Marius—that is, Caius of the gens of the Marii. Every Roman citizen belonged also to a familia, a branch or subdivision of his gens, and hence had or might have a third name, or cognomen, referring to the familia. This cognomen was always borne by men of patrician estate; and in the case of men of distinction a fourth name or epithet (cognomen secundum, or agnomen) was sometimes added, in reference to some notable achievement of the individual: thus, Lucius Cornelius Scipio Asiaticus was Lucius, of the Scipio branch of the Cornelian gens, who had won personal distinction in Asia. Women as a rule bore only the feminine form of the nomen of their gens: as, Cornelia, Tullia. But sometimes, especially at a comparatively late date, they received also an individual prænomen, which was the feminine form of the prænomen of the husband, or, still later, was given to them, as in the case of boys, in infancy.

Ye Aldirman schal clepene vpe ij. men be name.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 276.

But, gode sir, neuenes me thi name? York Plays, p. 474.

So never took that useful name in vain.
Tennyson, Sea-Dreams.

=Syn. 1. Name, Appellation, Title, Designation, Denomination, Style. Name is the simplest and most general word for that by which any person or thing is called: as, "His name is John," Luke i. 63. An appellation is a descriptive and therefore specific term, as Saint Louis; John's appellation was the Baptist; George Washington has the appellation of Father of his Country. A title is an official or honorary appellation, as reverend, bishop, doctor, colonel, duke. A designation is a distinctive appellation or title, marking the individual, as Charles the Simple, James the Less. Denomination is to a class what designation is to an individual: as, coin of various denominations; a common use of the word is in application to a separate or independent Christian body or organization. Style may be essentially the same as appellation, but it is now generally limited to a name assumed or assigned for public use: as, the style of his most Christian Majesty; they transacted business under the firm style of Smith & Co.—4. Repute, credit, note.

Nandidæ (nan′di-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Nandus + -idæ.] A family of acanthopterygian fishes, typified by the genus Nandus, having different limits. (a) In Günther's system, a family of Acanthopterygii perciformes with perfect ventrals, no bony stay for the preoperculum, and interrupted lateral line. (b) In later systems, restricted to the Nandina.

nandin (nan′din), n. [Jap.] The sacred bamboo, Nandina domestica.

Nandina[1] (nan-dī′nä), n. pl. [NL., < Nandus + -ina[2].] In Günther's classification, the second group of Nandidæ, having no pseudobranchiæ, five ventral rays, and palatine and vomerine teeth. It includes sundry East Indian freshwater fishes.

Nandina[2] (nan-dī′nä), n. [NL. (Thunberg, 1781), < nandin + -ina[1].] A genus of plants of the family Berberidaceæ, characterized by its numerous sepals and petals. It consists of a single species, N. domestica, a tree-like shrub with much-divided leaves and ample panicles of small white flowers; it is the sacred bamboo of China. See sacred bamboo, under bamboo.

nandine[1] (nan′din), a. and n. [< Nandus + -ine[2].] I. a. Of or pertaining to the Nandina. II. n. A fish of the group Nandina.

nandine[2] (nan′din), n. [< Nandinia.] A quadruped of the genus Nandinia, N. binotata, a Nandine (Nandinia binotata).

handsome kind of paradoxure having a double row of spots along the sides, inhabiting Guinea.

Nandinia (nan-din′i-ä), n. [NL., from a native name.] A genus of viverrine quadrupeds of the family Viverridæ and the subfamily Paradoxurinæ; the nandines. J. E. Gray, 1864.

nandu (nan′dö), n. [Tupi-Guarani nhandú.] The South American ostrich, Rhea americana, and other species of that genus. Also nandoo.

Nandus (nan′dus), n. [NL.] The typical genus of fishes of the family Nandidæ, including a few East Indian species.

Nandus marmoratus.

nane (nān), a. and pron. A dialectal (Scotch) form of none[1].

nanest, adv. A Middle English form of nonce.

nanga (nang′gä), n. [African.] A small harp having but three or four strings, used by the negroes of Africa; a negro harp.

nanism (nā′nizm), n. [= F. nanisme; as < L. nanus (> F. nain), < Gr. νᾶνος, also νάννος, a dwarf, + -ism.] Aberration from normal form by decrease in size; the character or quality of being dwarfed or pygmy; dwarfishness: opposed to gigantism.

nanization (nā-ni-zā′shọn), n. [< L. nanus, < Gr. νᾶνος, a dwarf, + -ize + -ation.] The artificial dwarfing or production of nanism in trees, especially as practised by the Japanese.

> Prof. Rein can be poetical without ceasing to be practical as well. He is, perhaps, a little hard on the Japanese love of dwarfing, or Nanization.
> The Academy, No. 888, p. 318.

★nankeen, nankin (nan-kēn′), n. [< Chinese Nanking, lit. 'southern capital,' a city of China now known as Kiang Ning fū, the capital of the province of Kiang-su and formerly the residence of the court, where the fabric was originally manufactured.] 1. A sort of cotton cloth, usually of a yellow color, made at Nanking in China. The peculiar color of these fabrics is natural to the cotton (Gossypium herbaceum, var. religiosum) of which they are made. Nankeen is now imitated in most other countries where cotton goods are woven. See cotton-plant and kino[1].

> His nether garment was of yellow nankeen, closely fitted to the shape, and tied at his . . . knees by large knots of white ribbon. J. F. Cooper, Last of Mohicans, i.

2. pl. Trousers or breeches made of this material.

> Some sudden prick too sharp for humanity — especially humanity in nankeens — to endure without kicking.
> Bulwer, My Novel, i. 2.

Nankeen color, in dyeing, the shade of buff obtained from iron salts.

nanmu (nan′mö), n. [Chin.] A Chinese tree, Persea Nammu. Its wood is highly esteemed in China for house-carpentry, coffins, etc., on account of its durability and fragrance, and is exported to some extent.

nanninose, nannynose (nan′i-nōs), n. Same as maninose.

nanny[1] (nan′i), n.; pl. nannies (-iz). [Short for nanny-goat.] A nanny-goat.

nanny[2] (nan′i), n.; pl. nannies (-iz). [Origin obscure.] In coal-mining, a natural joint, crack, or slip in the coal-measures: nearly the same as cleat[3]. Gresley. [Yorkshire, Eng.]

nanny-berry (nan′i-ber″i), n. The sheepberry, Viburnum Lentago.

nanny-goat (nan′i-gōt), n. [< Nanny, dim. of Nan, a fem. name (see nan[2]), + goat. Cf. billy-goat.] A female goat.

nanoid (nā′noid), a. [< Gr. νᾶνος, a dwarf, + εἶδος, form.] Dwarfish.

nanomelus (nā-nom′e-lus), n. [NL., < Gr. νᾶνος, a dwarf, + μέλος, a limb.] In teratol., a monster with a dwarfed limb.

nanosaur (nā′nọ-sâr), n. A small dinosaur of the genus Nanosaurus.

Nanosaurus (nā-nọ-sâ′rus), n. [NL., < Gr. νᾶνος, a dwarf, + σαῦρος, a lizard.] A genus of small dinosaurs, founded by Marsh in 1877.

nanosomia (nā-nọ-sō′mi-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. νᾶνος, a dwarf, + σῶμα, body.] A dwarfing or dwarfed state of the body; nanism; microsomia.

nanpie (nan′pī), n. [< Nan, a fem. name (see nan[2]), + pie[2]. Cf. magpie.] The magpie. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

Nantes† (nan′tēz), n. pl. [NL., pl. of L. nans (nant-), ppr. of nare, swim.] In zoöl., in Linnæus's system of classification, the third order of the third class, Amphibia, including the Chondropterygii of Artedi, or the sharks, rays, chimæras, and marsipobranchs, and some true fishes erroneously considered to be related to them. See Amphibia, 2 (a).

nantokite, nantoquite (nan′tọ-kīt), n. [< Nantoko (see def.) + -ite[2].] A chlorid of copper occurring in white granular masses having an adamantine luster, found at Nantoko in Chili.

naos (nā′os), n. [< Gr. νᾱός, Ionic νηός, Attic νεώς, Æolic ναῦος, a temple, a sanctuary, lit. a dwelling, < ναίειν, dwell, inhabit.] 1. In archæol., a temple, as distinguished from hieron, a shrine (chapel) or sanctuary (in this latter sense not necessarily implying the presence of any edifice). — 2. In arch., the inclosed chamber or cella of an ancient temple, where were placed the statue and a ceremonial altar of the divinity. It is sometimes restricted to an innermost sanctuary of the cella, which, however, when present, is more properly called sekos or adytum. The open vestibule commonly placed before the naos was called the pronaos, and the corresponding vestibule frequently added at the rear was termed the opisthodomos, or, by some modern writers, the epinaos. See cut under pronaos.

> A passage round the naos was introduced, giving access to the chambers, which added 10 cubits to its dimensions every way, making it 100 cubits by 60.
> J. Fergusson, Hist. Arch., I. 215.

nap[1] (nap), v. i.; pret. and pp. napped, ppr. napping. [< ME. nappen, < AS. hnappian, hnæppian (cf., with added formative, OHG. hnaffezen, naffizan, MHG. nafzen), slumber, doze; cf. hnipian, bend, bow the head, also nipian (in pret. pl. nipeden), nod, slumber; Icel. hnīpa, droop, hnipna = Goth. ga-nipnan, droop, despond. The Cuban negro napinapi, nap, sleep, is perhaps from E.] To have a short sleep; be drowsy.

> Tho cam Sleuthe al by-slobered with two slymed eyen.
> "Ich most sitte to be shryuen," quath he, "or elles shal ich nappe." Piers Plowman (C), viii. 2.

To catch or take one napping. (a) To come upon one when he is unprepared; take at a disadvantage.

> Nay, I have ta'en you napping, gentle love.
> Shak., T. of the S., iv. 2. 46.
>
> I took thee napping, unprepared.
> S. Butler, Hudibras, I. iii. 821.

(b) To detect in the very act: hence the phrase in the quotation.

> Hand Napping — that is, when the criminal was taken in the very act [of stealing cloth].
> Defoe, Tour through Great Britain, III. 143. (Davies.)

nap[1] (nap), n. [< nap[1], v.] A short sleep.

> After dinner, . . . we all lay down, the day being wonderful hot, to sleep, and each of us took a good nap, and then rose. Pepys, Diary, III. 189.

nap[2] (nap), n. [Var. of nop, < ME. noppe (the AS. hnoppa*, in Somner, is not authenticated) = MD. noppe, D. nop (> OF. nope, noppe, F. dial. nope) = MLG. noppe, LG. nobbe, nubbe (cf. G. noppe) = Dan. noppe, nap of cloth: usually explained as orig. knop or knob, but the forms cited forbid this identification.] 1. The woolly or villous substance on the surface of cloth, felt, or other fabric. It is of many varieties, as the uniform short pile of velvet, the knotted pile of frieze and other heavy water-proof cloths, etc. Compare pile.

> Jack Cade, the clothier, means to dress the commonwealth . . . and set a new nap upon it.
> Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iv. 2. 7.
>
> Ay, in a threadbare suit; when men come there
> They must have high naps, and go from thence bare.
> Chapman, Bussy d'Ambois, i. 1.

2. Some covering resembling the nap of cloth.

> The velvet nap which on his wings doth lie.
> Spenser, Muiopotmos, l. 333.

3. A felted cloth used in polishing glass, marble, etc. — 4. pl. The loops of the warp in uncut velvet, which, when cut, form the pile. — 5. Dress; form; presentation.

> A new lauriat, who, for a man that stands upon paines and not wit, hath performed as much as anie storie dresser may doo that sets a new English nap on an olde Latine apothegm. Nashe, Pierce Penilesse (1592).

nap[2] (nap), v. t.; pret. and pp. napped, ppr. napping. [< nap[2], n.] To raise or put a nap on.

nap[3]† (nap), n. [ME., also nep, < AS. hnæp, hnæpp, once irreg. hnæpf, a cup, bowl, = D. nap = MLG. nap = OHG. knapf, napf, naph, MHG. naph, napf, G. napf (> ML. hanapus, nappus, > It. nappo = OF. hanap, > E. hanap, and hanaper, hamper[2], q. v.), a cup, bowl, beaker.] A beaker.

nap[4] (nap), n. [A simpler spelling of knap[2], but in part perhaps < Icel. hnappr, a button, bevy, cluster, a var. of knappr, a knob, button: see knap[2].] A knob; a protuberance; the top of a hill. [Local, Eng.]

nap[5] (nap), v. t.; pret. and pp. napped, ppr. napping. [< Sw. nappa = Dan. nappe, catch, snatch at, seize. Prob. in part a simpler spelling of knap[1]: see knap[1], and cf. nab[1]. Hence, in comp., kidnap.] To seize; grasp. [Prov. Eng.]

nap[6] (nap), v.; pret. and pp. napped, ppr. napping. [A simpler spelling of knap[1], perhaps involving also ult. AS. hnæppan (rare), strike. See knap[1].] I. trans. To strike. [Prov. Eng.]

II. intrans. To cheat.

> Assisting the frail square die with high and low fullums, and other napping tricks.
> Tom Brown, Works, III. 60. (Davies.)

nap[7] (nap), n. An abbreviated form of napoleon, 2.

Napæa (nā-pē′ä), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1753), < L. napæus, < Gr. ναπαῖος, of a wooded vale: see Napæan.] A genus of dicotyledonous plants of the family Malvaceæ and the tribe Malveæ, known by its dicœcious flowers. It consists of a single species, N. dioïca, the glade-mallow, a tall perennial with maple-like leaves and abundant small white flowers, found, though rare, in limestone valleys in the eastern and central United States. See cut on following page.

Napæan (nā-pē′an), a. [< L. napæus, < Gr. ναπαῖος, of a wooded vale or dell (L. nymphæ napææ or simply Napææ, nymphs of a dell), < νάπη, a woodland vale.] Pertaining to the nymphs of dells and glens. Dryden.

nap-at-noon (nap′at-nön′), n. The yellow goat's-beard, Tragopogon pratensis; perhaps also T. porrifolius: so called because their flowers close about midday. [Prov. Eng.]

nape[1] (nāp), n. [< ME. nape; perhaps derived from or identical with nap[4], with orig. ref. to the slight protuberance on the back of the head, above the neck; but this is doubtful.] 1. The Flowering Branch of the Male Plant of Nepæa dioica.

a, female flower; b, fruit; c, seed.

back upper part of the neck, technically called nucha: generally in the phrase nape of the neck.

Furst kit owte the nape in the nek the shuldurs before.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 145.

She turn'd; the very nape of her white neck
Was rosed with indignation. Tennyson, Princess, vi.

2. The thin part of a fish's belly next to the head. A beheaded fish, split along the belly, shows a pair of napes.

nape[1] (nāp), v. t.; pret. and pp. naped, ppr. naping. [< nape[1], n.] To cut through the nape of the neck.

Take a pyke and nape hym and drawe hym in the bely.
I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 140, note.

nape[2]†, n. [ME., < OF. nape, nappe, F. nappe, a cloth, table-cloth, sheet or surface (as of water, etc.), < ML. nappa, napa, L. mappa, a cloth, a napkin, a towel: see map[1], and cf. napkin, apron.] A table-cloth.

Tho ouer nape schalle dowbulle balayde,
To tho uttur syde be seluage brade.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 321.

nape-crest (nāp'krest), n. A bird of the African genus Schizorhis. E. Blyth.

napee (na-pē'), n. [Burmese ngāpi.] A preparation, half pickled, half putrid, of a fish resembling the sprat, highly esteemed as a condiment by the Burmese.

napelline (nā-pel'in), n. [< NL. Napellus (see def.) + -ine[2].] An alkaloid obtained from the root of Aconitum Napellus.

naperer (nā'pėr-ėr), n. [naper(y) + -er[1].] In England, the person having charge of the royal table-linen. The office is connected with that of chief butler, and is marked by the carrying of a napkin.

napery (nā'pėr-i), n. [Formerly also nappery, napperie, napry; < ME. naperye, < OF. naperie, F. napperie, < nappe, a cloth, a table-cloth: see nape[2].] 1. Linen cloths used for domestic purposes, especially for the table; table-cloths, napkins, etc.

Good son, loke that thy napery be soote & also feyre & clene, Bordclothe, towelle & napkyn, foldyn alle bydene.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 120.

Three tables were spread with napery, not so fine as substantial. Lamb, Chimney-Sweepers.

2†. Linen worn on the person; linen underclothing.

And see your napry be cleane, & sort euery thing by it selfe, the cleane from the foule.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 66.

naphe†, n. [F. naphe, Sp. nafa, It. naufa, < Ar. naphah, perfume.] Orange-flower water.

naphew (nā'fū), n. See navew.

naphtha (naf'thą or nap'thą), n. [Formerly also naptha, naphta; = F. naphte = Sp. It. nafta = Pg. naphta, < L. naphtha, < Gr. νάφθα, also νάφθας, a kind of asphalt or bitumen (see def.).] 1. In ancient writers, a more fluid and volatile variety of asphalt or bitumen. Pliny hesitates about including naphtha with bitumen, on account of its volatility and inflammability.

It [an oil in which arrows were steeped] was composed of Naphta. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 346.

Starry lamps and blazing cressets, fed
With naphtha and asphaltus, yielded light
As from a sky. Milton, P. L., i. 729.

2. In modern use, an artificial volatile colorless liquid obtained from petroleum. It is a general term applied to the products of the distillation of crude petroleum between gasolene and refined oil. Ordinary petroleum now yields from 6 to 12 per cent. of this material, the specific gravity of which is from 70° to 62° (Baumé). Naphtha as a solvent has largely taken the place of turpentine, camphene, benzol, and other similar products in industrial art, being often superior, and always much less expensive. In this way it is used in the manufacture of rubber goods, paints and varnishes, floor- and table-cloths; also by dyers and clothing- and glove-cleaners. In its many applications for light and heat it is very largely taking the place both of coal and crude oil for the manufacture of illuminating gas and for street-lighting by naphtha-lamps, as well as for cooking by vapor-stoves in the use of the grade called stove-gasolene.

★naphthalene (naf'thą-lēn), n. [< naphtha + al(cohol) + -ene.] A benzene hydrocarbon ($C_{10}H_8$) usually prepared from coal-tar. It forms white crystalline leaflets, having a peculiar odor. It is used internally as an intestinal antiseptic and as an expectorant. It is insoluble in water, soluble in alcohol and ether. Naphthalene derivatives form an important group of coal-tar colors. Also naphthalin, naphthaline.—Naphthalene red, a coal-tar color used in dyeing, obtained from naphthylamine, belonging to the induline class. It is used for producing light shades on silk. Also known as Magdala red.

naphthalin (naf'thą-lin), n. [< naphtha + al(cohol) + -in[2].] Same as naphthalene.

naphthalize (naf'thą-līz), v. t.; pret. and pp. naphthalized, ppr. naphthalizing. [< naphtha (cf. naphthalene) + -l- + -ize.] To impregnate or saturate with naphtha; enrich (an inferior gas) or carburet (air) by passing it through naphtha.

naphthameĭn (naf-tham'ē-in), n. [< naphtha + am(ine) + -e- + -in[2].] A coal-tar color used in dyeing, formed by oxidizing alpha-naphthylamine. It is in some respects similar to aniline black, and produces grays and violets, but not very fast. Also called naphthalene violet.

★naphthol (naf'thol), n. [< naphtha + -ol.] Any one of the phenols of naphthalene having the formula $C_{10}H_7OH$. One of the group, beta-naphthol, is an antiseptic, and is used locally in skin-diseases. Also called naphtholum and isonaphthol.—Naphthol blue, a coal-tar color used in dyeing, prepared by the action of nitroso-dimethyl-aniline on alpha-naphthol. It gives colors similar to indigo, moderately fast to light but sensitive to acids.—Naphthol green. See green[1].—Naphthol yellow. See yellow.

naphtholize (naf'thō-līz), v. t. To saturate or impregnate with the vapor of naphtha.

★naphthylamine (naf-thil'ą-min), n. [< naphtha + Gr. ὕλη, wood, matter, + amine.] A chemical base ($C_{10}H_7NH_2$) obtained from nitronaphthalene by reducing it with iron-filings and acetic acid. It occurs in fine crystals, insoluble in water, and having a disgusting odor. It unites with acids to form crystallizable salts, and is the source of certain coal-tar dyes.

naphthylic (naf-thil'ik), a. [< naphtha + -yl + -ic.] Containing or relating to naphthalene.

napier-cloth (nā'pėr-klôth), n. A double-faced cloth, having one side of wool, and the other of goat's hair from Cashmere or of vicuna-hair or -wool from South America.

Napierian (nā-pē'ri-ąn), a. [< Napier (see def.) + -ian.] Of or pertaining to John Napier (1550–1617), famous as the inventor of logarithms. See logarithm. Also Neperian.

Napier's analogies, rods (or bones), etc. See analogy, rod, etc.

napifolious (nā-pi-fō'li-us), a. [< L. napus, a turnip, + folium, a leaf.] Having leaves like those of the turnip.

napiform (nā'pi-fôrm), a. [< L. napus, a turnip (see neep[2]), + forma, form.] Having the shape of a turnip—that is, enlarged in the upper part and slender below: as, a napiform root.

napkin (nap'kin), n. [< ME. napkyn; < nape[2] + -kin.] 1. A handkerchief; a kerchief of any kind.

And dip their napkins in his sacred blood.
Shak., J. C., iii. 2. 138.

And take a napkin in your hand,
And tie up baith your bonny een.
Clerk Saunders (Child's Ballads, II. 46).

She hang ae napkin at the door,
Another in the ha';
And a' to wipe the trickling tears
Sae fast as they did fa'.
Fair Annie (Child's Ballads, III. 195).

2. A small square piece of linen cloth, now usually damask, used at table to wipe the lips and hands and to protect the clothes.

Set your napkyns and spoones on the cupbord ready, and lay euery man a trencher, a napkyn, & a spone.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 66.

Here is thy pound, which I have kept laid up in a napkin. Luke xix. 20.

The napkins white, the carpet red;
The guests withdrawn had left the treat.
Pope, Imit. of Horace, II. vi. 195.

napkin-ring (nap'kin-ring), n. A ring in which a table-napkin may be held folded or rolled up when not in use.

napless (nap'les), a. [< nap[2] + -less.] 1. Having no nap, as many textile fabrics.—2. Much worn; deprived of its nap by wear; threadbare.

Never would he Appear i' the market-place, nor on him put
The napless vesture of humility.
Shak., Cor., ii. 1. 250.

Naples yellow. See yellow.

nap-meter (nap'mē"tėr), n. A machine designed to test the wearing quality of cloth. It consists of a double-flanged wheel on which a piece of cloth attached to it is caused to rotate against rasps under a fixed pressure. The number of rotations is shown by counting-wheels and dials, and the endurance of the cloth is shown by the number of rotations required to wear it ★threadbare.

napoleon (nā-pō'lē-on), n. [< F. napoléon, a coin so called after Napoleon Bonaparte.] 1. A modern French gold coin of the value of 20 francs, or slightly less than $4.—2.

Obverse. Reverse.
Napoleon. (Size of the original.)

An English modification of the game of euchre, in which each player bids for the privilege of naming the trump, stating the number of tricks he will win. A bid of "nap" means five tricks.

Napoleon blue, gun, etc. See blue, etc.

Napoleonic (nā-pō-lē-on'ik), a. [< Napoleon (see def.) + -ic.] Of, pertaining to, or characteristic of either of the emperors Napoleon (Napoleon I. (Bonaparte), born 1768 or 1769, died 1821, and Napoleon III., born 1808, died 1873), or their dynasty.

Napoleonism (nā-pō'lē-on-izm), n. [< Napoleon + -ism.] 1. The political system, theory, methods, etc., of the Napoleonic dynasty, or its traditions.—2. Attachment to the Napoleonic dynasty; Bonapartist partizanship: same as Bonapartism.

Moritz Carriere, in his able and fascinating book on "The Moral Order of the World," begins with thanksgiving for the downfall of Napoleonism.
N. A. Rev., CXXVII. 457.

Napoleonist (nā-pō'lē-on-ist), n. [< Napoleon + -ist.] A supporter of the Napoleonic dynasty: same as Bonapartist.

napoleonite (nā-pō'lē-on-īt), n. [< Napoleon + -ite[2].] A granitoid rock composed of anorthite and hornblende with a little quartz, these being concentrically grouped so as to form layers of alternately lighter and darker shade. It is a variety of corsite. Also sometimes called ★orbicular diorite.

★nappe (nap), n. [F., a cloth, table-cloth, sheet or surface (as of water, etc.): see nape[2].] A surface swelling out from a point in the form of a cone or hyperboloid about its vertex.—Jet-nappe, a nappe formed by a jet impinging normally on the rounded end of a rod.

The dimensions of the apparatus may be varied to suit jets of different sizes; it is highly desirable, however, that the jet nappe should well overlap the inner margin of the ring-shaped electrode. Science, VII. 501.

napper[1] (nap'ėr), n. [< nap[1] + -er[1].] One who naps or slumbers.

These are all very moderate nappers, compared to the famous Seven Sleepers. Letters from Fog's Jour., II. 103.

napper[2] (nap'ėr), n. [< nap[2] + -er[1].] 1. One who raises a nap on cloth.—2. A machine for raising a nap on woolen, cotton, or knitted fabrics, by means of a cylinder or cylinders, usually covered with teasels or metallic wire, rotating in contact with the surface of the fabric, which moves with or contrary to the motion of the cylinders. Its additional functions are those of removing surface imperfections, as burs, specks, etc., and giving pliancy to the fabric. Same as napping-machine.

napper[3]†, n. A cheat or thief. [Slang.]

napper[4] (nap'ėr), n. [Origin obscure.] The head. N. E. D. [Slang.]

napperer (nap'ėr-ėr), n. [< naper(y) + -er[1].] An incorrect form of naperer.

napperty (nap'ėr-ti), n. Same as knapperts.

narrowing (nar'ō-ing), n. [Verbal n. of narrow[1], v.] 1. In knitting, the act of reducing the breadth of the work, as by throwing two stitches into one.—2. The part of the work which has been thus narrowed or contracted.

narrowly (nar'ō-li), adv. [< ME. narweliche*, neruhliche, < AS. nearulīce, narrowly, < nearu, narrow: see narrow[1], a.] 1. With little breadth, extent, or scope; restrictedly as regards breadth or scope.

He does not think the church of England so narrowly calculated that it cannot fall in with any regular species of government. Swift, Sentiments of a Ch. of Eng. Man, ii.

2. Sparingly; with niggardliness.—3. Closely; with careful or minute scrutiny; attentively; carefully: as, narrowly watched, inspected, or seen.

We will watch the bishop narrowly,
Lest some other way he should ride.
Robin Hood and the Bishop of Hereford (Child's Ballads, [V. 295).

Look well, look narrowly upon her beauties.
Fletcher, Beggar's Bush, iv. 6.

4. Nearly; within a little; by a small distance.

His ancestor was a brave man, and narrowly escaped being killed in the civil wars. Steele, Spectator, No. 109.

narrow-minded (nar'ō-mīn"ded), a. Of confined views or sentiments; bigoted; illiberal.

narrow-mindedness (nar'ō-mīn"ded-nes), n. The quality of being narrow-minded.

narrowness (nar'ō-nes), n. [< ME. narownes*, < AS. nearuness, narrowness, < nearu, narrow:

see narrow[1], a.] The quality or condition of being narrow, in any sense of that word.

narrow-nosed (nar′ō-nōzd), a. In zoöl., catarrhine: specifically applied to the Catarrhina or Old World apes and monkeys.

narrow-souled (nar′ō-sōld), a. Illiberal; devoid of generosity.

narrow-work (nar′ō-wėrk), n. In coal-mining, all the work done in the mine in the way of opening it, previous to the removal of the pillars: nearly the same as dead-work, or that which is done preparatory to beginning to take out the coal.

narry, a. See nary.

nart†. A contracted form of ne art, art not.

Narthecium (när-thē′si-um), n. [NL., < Gr. νάρθηξ, a tall hollow-stemmed umbelliferous plant: see narthex.] A genus of herbs of the family Melanthiaceæ, known by its single style, stiff open flowers, and rigid linear leaves in two ranks, rising from a creeping rootstock. There are 4 species, of north temperate regions, with yellow flowers in racemes. The name bog-asphodel, applied to the genus, belongs especially to N. ossifragum, the Lancashire asphodel of England, and N. Americanum, a rare plant of New Jersey. Named by Möhring in 1742 and established by Hudson in 1762.

narthex (när′theks), n. [NL., < L. narthex, < Gr. νάρθηξ, a tall hollow-stemmed umbelliferous plant (L. ferula), also a wand of this plant, a case, casket; in LGr. also as in def. 1.] 1. A part of an early Christian or an Oriental church or basilica, at the end furthest from the bema or sanctuary, and nearest to the main entrance. It was originally separated from the nave merely by a railing or screen; but after the earliest Christian centuries it was generally divided from the church proper by a complete wall, in which were the main entrance-doors to the church, the narthex thus forming a capacious and lofty vestibule of the full width of the church. In primitive times the narthex was the part of the church to which the catechumens, the energumens, and the class of penitents called audientes or hearers were admitted. Sometimes it was set apart for the women of the congregation. Occasionally it was double, in which case the inner division was called the esonarthex and the outer division the exonarthex. In the church-building of western Europe, in certain types of monastic churches, notably in those of the Benedictines and Cistercians, the narthex persisted until the end of the twelfth century, and often formed a very important architectural feature, as in the splendid example in the great abbey-church of Vézelay, France. Also called antechurch, antenave, pronaos. See diagram under bema. 2. In antiq., a small box or casket for unguents or perfumes.—3. [cap.] An old genus of umbelliferous plants, now referred to Ferula. See asafetida.

narwet, a. and adv. A Middle English form of narrow[1].

narwhal (när′hwal), n. [Also narwhale, narwal; = F. narval = G. narwal, < Sw. Dan. narhval = Icel. nāhvalr, a narwhal; the Icel. form is appar. lit. 'a corpse-whale,' < nār (nom.; in comp. nā-), a corpse, + hvalr = E. whale, and is usually supposed to be so called from its pale color; but the term seems unusual, and the form does not suit the Sw. Dan. narhval. The name may be a native (Greenland?) term adapted to Icel.; cf. Greenland anarnak, a kind of whale. Cf. walrus, AS. horshwæl, in which the element whale appears.] A cetacean, Monodon monoceros, of the family Delphinidæ and the subfamily Delphinapterinæ; the sea-unicorn, unicorn-whale, or unicorn-fish. One of the teeth of the male is enormously developed into a straight spirally fluted tusk from 6 to 10 feet long. This tusk is sometimes almost as long as the rest of the creature, and furnishes a valuable ivory. The narwhal also yields a superior quality of oil. It inhabits arctic seas. See also cut under Monodon.

Narwhal (Monodon monoceros).

nary (ner′i), a. [Also narry, and formerly narro, narrow; cf. ary, formerly also ery, arra, arrow.] A corruption of ne'er a, never a (the article being sometimes erroneously repeated after the word in which it is contained).

I warrants me, there is narrow a one of all those officer fellows but looks upon himself to be as good as arrow a 'squire of 500*l.* a-year. Fielding, Tom Jones, viii. 2.

As for master and the young squire, they have as yet had narro glimpse of the new light.
Smollett, Humphrey Clinker, W. Jenkins to Mrs. Mary [Jones, p. 186.

nas[1]†. An obsolete contraction of ne was, was not.

nas[2]†. An obsolete contraction of ne has, has not.

nasal (nā′zal), a. and n. [As a noun, in def. 1, ME. nasell, < OF. nasal, nasel, nazel, a part of the helmet which protected the nose; in other senses modern, < F. nasal = Sp. Pg. nasal = It. nasale, < NL. nasalis, of the nose, < L. nasus = E. nose[1]: see nose[1].] I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to the nose or nostrils; narial; rhinal. —2. Uttered with resonance in the nose, or with admission of the expelled air into the nasal passages, by relaxation or dropping of the palatal veil that shuts them off from the pharynx. A nasal sound uttered with complete closure of the mouth-organs is a nasal stop, or check, or mute, or oftenest called a nasal merely: such in English are n, m, ng, uttered respectively in the mouth-positions of d, b, g. There are apt to be in any language as many such as there are positions of mute-closure; thus, in Sanskrit there are five. A nasal uttered in a vowel-position of the mouth-organs is a nasal vowel: such are the French an, on, in, un, the Portuguese ão, etc. Nasal semivowels are also possible. And sometimes the whole utterance is rendered more or less nasal (the "nasal twang") by habitual relaxation of the velar closure.

Nasal Fossa of Man, vertical longitudinal section just to one side of septum: left-hand figure, outer wall of right cavity; right-hand figure, inner or right wall of left cavity, being the left side of the median septum.

1, olfactory nerve, its filaments passing through 2, cribriform plate of ethmoid, to ramify upon Schneiderian membrane (1 is situated in brain-cavity of the skull). V, branches of trigeminus nerve; Pa, palate flooring nasal cavity, roofing the mouth; Sp, free posterior margin of nasal septum; ST, superior turbinal bone; MT, middle turbinal bone (these are both ethmoturbinals); IT, inferior turbinal bone, or maxilloturbinal.

3. In entom., pertaining to the nasus or clypeus. — Nasal bone, ■ nasal. See II., 3.—Nasal canal, crest, duct. See the nouns. — Nasal fossæ. (a) In anat., the nasal passages; the hollow interior or cavity of the nose. In man the nasal fossæ are right and left, separated by the nasal septum, and each is subdivided into three fossæ or meatus, superior, middle, and inferior. (b) In ornith., the depressions upon the bill of a bird in which the external nostrils open. These are usually well-marked fossæ at or near the base of the bill, on either side of the culmen, naked or filled in with feathers, or arched over by an operculum or nasal scale; their characters are often of zoölogical importance. See cuts and diagram under bill.—Nasal helmet, the helmet of the early middle ages to which a nasal was attached. See II., 1.—Nasal index. See craniometry.—Nasal meatus. See meatus.—Nasal plate, in herpet., one of the special plates of the head of a reptile through or between which the nostrils open; a nasal.—Nasal point, in craniom., the nasion.—Nasal scale, in ornith., the horny operculum of a bird's nostril; a naricorn; a rhinotheca.—Nasal septum, the partition between the right and left nasal fossæ, in man complete and consisting of the perpendicular plate of the ethmoid bone or mesethmoid, the vomer, and a large cartilage called triangular.—Nasal spine, a spinous process of bone of the nose. Three such are named in man: (a) frontal, a process of the frontal bone in part supporting the two nasal bones; (b) anterior, ■ median process of each maxillary bone, together forming one spine which projects at the base of the outer nostrils or anterior nares; (c) posterior, a corresponding median process of the conjoined palate-bones in the floor of the posterior nares, at the root of the uvula. The last two processes are sometimes called prenasal and postnasal. The anterior process has some ethnological significance, being best developed in the higher races of men, and is also one of several datum-points in craniometry.—Nasal suture, in entom., the impressed line dividing the clypeus from the front: same as clypeal suture (which see, under clypeal).—Nasal tube, in ornith., a tubular naricorn or rhinotheca, such as occurs in the petrel family and some of the goatsuckers.

II. n. 1. A part of a helmet which protects the nose and adjacent parts of the face. It was made in various forms. Also called nose-piece. See also cut under helmet.

Nasals (adjustable), 13th century.

Neuertheles he a-raught hym vpon the helme, and kutte of the nasell. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 629.

2. A sound uttered through or partly through the nose; especially, a nasal mute or stop, as m, n, ng.—3. In anat., one of the nasal bones. In the higher vertebrates they are a pair of bones of the surface of the skull, in relation with the frontal, lacrymal, or maxillary bones, covering in more or less of the nasal cavity. They are very variable in shape in different animals, less so in position and relations; in man they form the bridge of the nose. In the osseous fishes different bones have been identified as representatives of the nasals. According to Cuvier, they are a pair of separated small tubiform bones in front of the frontals, called by others turbinals. According to Owen, they are represented by an unpaired projecting bone in front of the frontals, more generally considered to be the ethmoid. The nasals were regarded by Owen as forming the neural spine of the foremost, rhinencephalic, or nasal vertebra. See cuts under craniofacial, Crotalus, Lepidosiren, Anura, and holorhinal. ★4. In herpet., a nasal plate or shield.

Nasalis (nā-sā′lis), n. [NL., < L. nasus = E. nose[1]: see nasal.] A remarkable genus of semnopithecine monkeys, containing the proboscis-monkey of Borneo, Semnopithecus nasalis or Nasalis larvatus. Geoffroy St. Hilaire. See cut in next column.

Kahau, or Proboscis-monkey (Nasalis larvatus).

nasality (nā-zal′i-ti), n. [< nasal + -ity.] The state or quality of being nasal.

The Indian sound differs only in the greater nasality of the first letter. Sir W. Jones, Orthog. of Asiatick Words.

nasalization (nā″zal-i-zā′shon), n. [< nasalize + -ation.] The act of nasalizing or uttering with a nasal sound.

nasalize (nā′zal-īz), v.; pret. and pp. nasalized, ppr. nasalizing. [< nasal + -ize.] I. trans. To render nasal, as the sound of a letter or syllable by modification or addition.

II. intrans. To speak or pronounce with a nasal sound; speak through the nose.

nasally (nā′zal-i), adv. In a nasal manner; by or through the nose.

nasard (naz′ärd), n. [= Sp. nasardo, < F. nasard, an organ-stop (cf. OF. nasart, nazart, part of the helmet which protected the nose: same as nasal, n., 1), < L. nasus = E. nose[1].] In organ-building, a mutation-stop, usually similar to the twelfth. Also nasarde, and corruptly nassart, nazard, nazad, nasat.

nasardly (naz′ärd-li), a. [< nasard*, ME. a nashard for an ashard, mod. E. assherd, + -ly[1].] Mean; stupid: a word of vague meaning.

What! such a nazardly Pigwiggen!
Cotton, Burlesque upon Burlesque.

nascency (nas′en-si), n. [= F. naissance = Pr. naissensa, naysensa, naisquenza = OSp. nascencia = It. nascenza, < L. nascentia, birth, origin, < nascen(t-)s, ppr. of nasci, be born: see nascent.] Origin, beginning, or production.

nascent (nas′ent), a. [= F. naissant = Pg. It. nascente, < L. nascen(t-)s, ppr. of nasci, orig. gnasci*, be born, inceptive verb, < √ gna, bear, related to √ gen, bear, beget, = E. ken[2]: see ken[2], genus, etc. From L. nasci are ult. E. nascent, naissant, renascent, renascence, renaissance, etc., natal[1], nation, native, etc., agnate, cognate, etc.] Beginning to exist or to grow; commencing development; coming into being; incipient.

The asperity of tartarous salts, and the fiery acrimony of alcaline salts, irritating and wounding the nerves, produce nascent passions and anxieties in the soul.
Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 86.

Wiping away the nascent moisture from my brow.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends (2d ed.), Pref., p. xii.

Nascent state, in chem., the condition of an element at the instant it is set free from a combination in which it has previously existed.

naseberry (nāz′ber″i), n.; pl. naseberries (-iz). [Also neesberry, nisberry, an accom. form, simulating berry[1] (as also in barberry), < Sp. níspero, medlar, also naseberry-tree, < L. mespilus, medlar: see medlar.] The tree Sapota zapotilla, or its fruit. See Achras, 2, bully-tree, chicle-gum, and sapodilla.—Naseberry bully-tree, a name of two West Indian trees, Sapota zapotilla, commonly the tallest tree of Jamaican woods, and Achras multiflora, the latter distinguished as broad-leafed, the former sometimes as mountain naseberry.

naseberry-bat (nāz′ber-i-bat), n. A West Indian insectivorous and frugivorous bat of the genus Stenoderma or Artibeus, as A. jamaicensis or A. perspicillatus: so called from its fondness for the naseberry.

nasethmoid (nā-zeth′moid), a. [< L. nasus, = E. nose[1], + E. ethmoid.] Of or pertaining to the nasal and the ethmoid bone: as, the nasethmoid suture.

nash-gab (nash′gab), n. Insolent talk; impertinent chatter. Scott, Old Mortality, viii. [Scotch.]

nasi, n. Plural of nasus.

nasically (nā′zi-kal-i), adv. [< nasik + -al + *-ly*².] After the manner of a nasik square or cube.

nasicorn (nā′zi-kôrn), a. and n. [< L. nasus, = E. *nose*¹, + cornu = E. horn.] I. a. Having a horn on the nose, as a rhinoceros; of or pertaining to the Nasicornia; rhinocerotic.

II. n. A member of the Nasicornia; a rhinoceros or rhinocerotid.

Nasicornia (nā-zi-kôr′ni-ạ), n. pl. [NL., < L. nasus, = E. *nose*¹, + cornu = E. horn.] One of the five divisions of Illiger's group Multungulata, containing the rhinoceroses. See Rhinocerotidæ.

nasicornous† (nā′zi-kôr-nus), a. [As nasicorn + -ous.] Same as nasicorn. Sir T. Browne.

nasiform (nā′zi-fôrm), a. [< L. nasus, = E. *nose*¹, + forma, form.] Having the shape or function of a nose.

nasik (nā′sik), a. [From the name of a town in India.] Having, as a magic square or cube, other constant summations than in rows, columns, and diagonals.

nasilabial (nā-zi-lā′bi-al), a. Same as nasolabial.

nasilabialis (nā-zi-lā-bi-ā′lis), n. Same as nasolabialis, 2.

nasimalar (nā-zi-mā′lăr), a. Same as nasomalar.

nasio-alveolar (nā″zi-ō-al-vē′ō-lăr), a. [< nasion + alveolus + *-ar*³.] Pertaining to the nasion and the alveolar point: as, the nasio-alveolar distance.

nasio-bregmatic (nā″zi-ō-breg-mat′ik), a. [< nasion + bregma(t-) + -ic.] Pertaining to the nasion and the bregma, as the arch of the cranium between these two points.

nasio-mental (nā″zi-ō-men′tal), a. [< nasion + mentum + -al.] Pertaining to the nasion and the mentum: as, the nasio-mental length (the distance between these points).

nasion (nā′zi-on), n. [NL., < L. nasus = E. *nose*¹.] In craniom., the median point of the nasofrontal suture. See craniometry.

Nasiterna (nas-i-tėr′nạ), n. [NL., < L. nasiterna, nassiterna, a watering-pot with a large nose or spout, < nasus = E. *nose*¹.] A genus of Psittacidæ; the pygmy parrots. They are the smallest birds of the order, with mucronate tail-feathers, and of a green color varied with other hues. N. pygmæa and N. pusio are examples.

nask†, n. [Origin obscure.] A prison. Halliwell. [Old cant.]

nasky† (nas′ki), a. [Not found in ME.; < Sw. dial. naskug, nasty, dirty; cf. LG. nask, also unnask (with neg. un-, here intensive), nasty; Norw. nask, greedy; orig. appar. with initial s as in Sw. dial. snaskig, Sw. snuskig, nasty, snask, dirt; cf. Sw. snaska = Dan. snaske, eat like a pig; cf. also Norw. naska, champ; other connections uncertain. Not connected with nesh. Hence, by variation, nasty, q. v.] Nasty. Cotgrave, s. maulavé.

Nasmyth hammer. See *hammer*¹.

Nasmyth's membrane. See membrane

naso-alveolar (nā″zō-al-vē′ō-lăr), a. [< L. nasus, = E. *nose*¹, + NL. alveolus + *-ar*³.] Pertaining to the nasal and alveolar points: as, the naso-alveolar line. See craniometry.

nasobasal (nā-zō-bā′sal), a. [< L. nasus, = E. *nose*¹, + Gr. βάσις, base: see basal.] Pertaining to the nose and the base of the skull: as, the nasobasal angle of Welcker. See craniometry.

nasobasilar (nā-zō-bas′i-lăr), a. [< L. nasus, = E. *nose*¹, + E. basilar.] Pertaining to the nasal point and the basion: as, the nasobasilar line. See craniometry.

nasocular (nā-zok′ū-lăr), a. [< L. nasus, = E. *nose*¹, + oculus, eye: see ocular.] Of or pertaining to the nose and the eye; nasorbital: as, the nasocular or lacrymal duct.

naso-ethmoidal (nā″zō-eth-moi′dal), a. [< L. nasus, = E. *nose*¹, + E. ethmoidal.] Of or pertaining to the nasal and ethmoidal regions of the skull.

nasofrontal (nā-zō-fron′tal), a. [< L. nasus, = E. *nose*¹, + frons (front-), forehead: see frontal.] Of or pertaining to the nasal bone and the frontal bone: as, the nasofrontal suture.

nasolabial (nā-zō-lā′bi-al), a. and n. [Also, more prop., nasilabial; < L. nasus, = E. *nose*¹, + labium, lip: see labial.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the nose and the upper lip.

II. n. A nasolabial muscle.

nasolabialis (nā-zō-lā-bi-ā′lis), n.; pl. nasolabiales (-lēz). [NL.: see nasolabial.] 1. In human anat., a small muscle connecting the upper lip with the septum of the nose, being one of a pair of muscular slips given off from the orbicularis oris. The interval between them corresponds to the vertical depression seen on the surface between the nose and the lip. Also called nasalis labii superioris, depressor sexti, mobilis narium, and depressor apicis narium. E. Wilson.

2. The proper lifter of the nostril and upper lip, usually called levator labii superioris alæque nasi. Coues and Shute. Also nasilabialis. See first cut under *muscle*¹.

nasolacrymal (nā-zō-lak′ri-mal), a. [< L. nasus, = E. *nose*¹, + lacryma, tear: see lacrymal.] Pertaining to the nose and to tears: as, the nasolacrymal duct, which carries tears from the eye to the nose.

nasology (nā-zol′ō-ji), n. [< L. nasus, = E. *nose*¹, + Gr. -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The study of the nose or of noses.

Mr. Dickens is as deep in nasology as the learned Slawkenbergius.

S. Phillips, Essays from The Times, II. 336. (Davies.)

nasomalar (nā-zō-mā′lăr), a. [Also nasimalar; < L. nasus, = E. *nose*¹, + NL. mala, the cheek: see malar.] Of or pertaining to the nose and the cheek or cheek-bone.

nasomaxillary (nā-zō-mak′si-lạ-ri), a. [< L. nasus, = E. nose, + maxilla, the jaw-bone: see maxillary.] Of or pertaining to the nasal bone and the upper jaw-bone: as, the nasomaxillary suture.

Nason flute. See *flute*¹.

nasopalatal (nā-zō-pal′a-tal), a. [< L. nasus, = E. *nose*¹, + palatum, the palate: see palatal.] Same as nasopalatine.

nasopalatine (nā-zō-pal′a-tin), a. [< L. nasus, = E. *nose*¹, + palatum, the palate, + *-ine*¹: see palatine.] Of or pertaining to the nose and to the palate or palate-bones; nasopalatal.—Nasopalatine canal or foramen, one of the anterior palatine canals or foramina, for the transmission of a nasopalatine nerve from the nose to the mouth.—Nasopalatine nerve, a branch of Meckel's ganglion which ramifies in the mucous membrane of the nose and mouth. Also called nerve of Scarpa, nerve of Cotunnius, and internal sphenopalatine nerve.

nasopharyngeal (nā-zō-fā-rin′jē-al), a. [< nasopharynx (-pharyng-) + -al.] Pertaining to the nasal fossæ and the pharynx.

nasopharynx (nā-zō-far′ingks), n.; pl. nasopharynges (nā″zō-fa-rin′jēz). [< L. nasus, = E. *nose*¹, + NL. pharynx, q. v.] That part of the pharynx which is behind and above the soft palate, directly continuous with the nasal passages: distinguished from oropharynx.

nasorbital (nā-zôr′bi-tal), a. [< L. nasus, = E. *nose*¹, + orbita, orbit: see orbital.] Of or pertaining to the nose and the orbits of the eyes; orbitonasal; nasocular.

nasosubnasal (nā″zō-sub-nā′zal), a. [< L. nasus, = E. *nose*¹, + sub, under, + nasus = E. nose: see nasal.] Connecting the nasal and the subnasal point. See craniometry.

Nassa (nas′ạ), n. [NL. (Lamarck, 1799), < L. nassa, naxa, a wicker basket with a narrow neck for catching fish, a weel.] The leading genus of Nassidæ. Some of the species are known as dog-whelks. Several abound on the Atlantic coast of the United States, as N. obsoleta and N. trivittata.

Nassau grouper. A West Indian fish: same as *hamlet*².

Nassellaria (nas-e-lā′ri-ạ), n. pl. [NL., < nassella*, dim. of L. nassa, a wicker basket (see Nassa), + -aria.] Haeckel's name of radiolarians with the central capsule originally invariably uniaxial, oval, or conical, with two different poles of the axis, having at one pole the characteristic porous area through which the whole of the pseudopodia project like a bush.

nass-fish (nas′ fish), n. The angler, Lophius piscatorius.

Nassidæ (nas′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Nassa + -idæ.] A family of buccinoid or whelk-like gastropods, typified by the genus Nassa; the dog-whelks. The animal has a large foot, generally bifid behind, a long siphon, and a radula with the median teeth multidentate and the lateral generally bicuspid and with intermediate denticles; the operculum is unguiculate and usually serrate. The shell is generally small, compact, and highly sculptured, with a twisted or plaited columella, and usually a calloused columellar lip. The species are numerous, and occur in all seas. See cut under dog-whelk.

Nassinæ (na-sī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Nassa + -inæ.] The Nassidæ considered as a subfamily of Buccinidæ; the dog-whelks.

nast¹ (nast), n. [< nast-y.] Dirt; nastiness. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

nast²†, An obsolete contraction of ne hast, hast not.

nasten (nâs′tn), v. t. [< *nast*¹ + *-en*².] To render nasty. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

nastily (nâs′ti-li), adv. In a nasty manner; filthily; dirtily; disagreeably; unpleasantly.

nastiness (nâs′ti-nes), n. 1. The character of being filthy; filthiness; dirtiness; filthy habits or condition.

The nastiness of the beastly multitude. Sir J. Hayward.

2. Disgusting taste; nauseousness.

That quality of unmitigated nastiness which so familiarly attests the genuineness of our Western doses.
The Atlantic, XXI. 264.

3. Disagreeableness; unpleasantness: as, the general nastiness of the weather. [Colloq., chiefly in Great Britain.]—4. Meanness; dishonorableness: as, the nastiness of the trick. [Colloq.]—5. That which is filthy; filth.

The swine is as filthy when he lies close in his stye as when he comes forth and shakes his nastiness in the street. South, Sermons, VIII. i.

6. Moral filth or filthiness; grossness or indecency; obscenity.

The common quality, however, of all Dryden's comedies is their nastiness, the more remarkable because we have ample evidence that he was a man of modest conversation.
Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 45.

=Syn. Foulness, defilement, pollution.

nasturtion (nas-tėr′shon), n. See nasturtium, 2.

Nasturtium (nas-tėr′shi-um), n. [NL. (R. Brown, 1812), < L. nasturtium, a cress, with ref. to its somewhat acrid smell, < L. nasus, = E. *nose*¹, + torquere, pp. tortus, twist.] 1. Robert Brown's name for Roripa, a genus of plants of the family Brassicaceæ, having pods with seeds in two rows. There are about 20 species, branching herbs, in water or on land, usually with small white flowers, pinnately divided leaves, and pods short or elongated. They bear the general name of water-cress, Flowering Plant of Roripa Nasturtium.

a, flower; b, pod.

but Roripa Nasturtium is the water-cress proper, a creeping herb of springs and brooks, much cultivated, a native of Europe and temperate Asia, naturalized in America and elsewhere, particularly in New Zealand, where it is said to grow so vigorously as to choke up rivers. Other species, as the wide-spread R. palustris, the marsh-cress, are weedy-looking plants of little consequence.

2. [l. c.] One of various species of the genus Tropæolum. The most common is T. majus, the Indian cress or lark's-heel, a showy climber, the large flowers varying from orange to scarlet and crimson. A smaller sort with paler flowers is T. minus. A third kind is the tuberous nasturtium, T. tuberosum. These plants are considered antiscorbutic; the fruits are pickled and used in the place of capers, and the leaves and flowers serve for a salad.

3. [l. c.] A rich orange color. See *capucine*².

Nastus (nas′tus), n. [NL. (A. L. de Jussieu, 1789), so called as having the stem not hollow, but filled with pith; < Gr. ναστός, filled, solid.] A genus of tall grasses of the tribe Bambuseæ, known by the numerous empty glumes, the grain adnate to the pericarp. There are 2 or 3 species, natives of the Mascarene Islands, of tree-like habit, with leaves like those of the bamboo, and one-flowered spikelets in panicles. N. Borbonicus of the Isle of Réunion (or Isle of Bourbon) forms a belt entirely around the mountains of the island. It is a fine species, reaching a height of 50 feet.

nasty (nâs′ti), a. [Or. obscure: poss. a var. of nasky.] 1. Filthy; dirty; foul; unclean. (a) Physically filthy or dirty.

Honeying and making love
Over the nasty sty. Shak., Hamlet, iii. 4. 94.

I am a nastyer heap than those, and may Taint thy sweet Lustre by my filth's excess.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, ii. 135.

A people breaths not more savage and nasty; crusted with dirt. Sandys, Travailes, p. 85.

(b) Of filthy habits.

Therefore the Lord, this Day, with loathsom Lice
Plagues poor and rich, the nastie and the nice,
Both Man and beast.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Lawe.

This day our captain told me that our landmen were very nasty and slovenly, and that the gun-deck, where they lodged, was so beastly and noisome with their victuals and beastliness as would much endanger the health of the ship. Winthrop, Hist. New England, p. 12.

(c) Morally filthy; indecent; ribald; indelicate: applied to speech or behavior.

Sir Thomas More, in his answer to Luther, has thrown out the greatest heap of nasty language that perhaps ever was put together. Bp. Atterbury.

2. Nauseous; disgusting to taste or smell: as, a nasty medicine.—3. In a weakened sense, disagreeable; bad. [Colloq., Eng.]

Lady A—— said here [in England] at a dinner, . . . speaking to her husband, . . . who thought it proper not to touch his soup, Do take some, A——: it's not at all nasty. R. G. White, England Without and Within, xvi.

4. Foul; stormy; disagreeable; unpleasant: applied to the weather. Compare dirty and foul[1] in the same sense. [Colloq., Eng.]

A stormy day [is called in England] a nasty day.
R. G. White, England Without and Within, xvi.

5. Troublesome; annoying; difficult to deal with, or threatening trouble; of a kind to be avoided: as, a nasty customer to deal with; a nasty cut or fall.—6. Ill-natured; mean; dishonorable; hateful: as, a nasty remark; a nasty trick. [Colloq.]

She is a nasty, hardened creature; and I do hate her. . . . How a woman can be so nasty I can't imagine.
Trollope, Is he Popenjoy? lix.

=Syn. 1 and 3. Nasty, Filthy, Foul, Dirty. These words are on the descending scale of strength. Nasty is the strongest word in the language for that which is offensive to sight, smell, or touch by the quality of its uncleanness or uncleanliness. The English fondness for the colloquial use of the word in connection with bad weather, and figuratively for anything disagreeable, is not matched by anything in America; on the contrary, the word is considered too strong for ordinary or delicate use, and foul is used of bad weather. All the words apply to that which is filled or covered in considerable degree with anything offensive. The moral uses of the word correspond with the physical.

nasty-man (nȧs′ti-man), n. See garroting.

Nasua (nā′sū-ȧ), n. [NL., < L. nasus = E. nose: see nose[1].] The only genus of coatimondis, of the subfamily Nasuinæ. Several described species are reducible to two, N. narica and N. rufa; but there are several subspecies. See cut under coati.

Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 22.

2. In a narrower sense, a political society composed of a sovereign or government and subjects or citizens, and constituting a political unit; an organized community inhabiting a certain extent of territory, within which its sovereignty is exercised.

A nation may be defined as a body of population which its proper history has made one in itself, and as such distinct from all others.
A. W. Ward, Eng. Dram. Lit., Int., p. xvi.

A nation is an organized community within a certain territory; or, in other words, there must be a place where its sole sovereignty is exercised.
Woolsey, Introd. to Inter. Law, § 52.

Nation is nearly synonymous with people, and in the United States it is applied to the whole body of the people coming under the jurisdiction of the Federal government. Cooley, Const. Limit. (5th ed.), Prin. Const. Law, 20.

Hence —3. A tribe, community, or congregation, whether of men or animals.

Even all the nation of unfortunate
And fatall birds about them flocked were.
Spenser, F. Q., II. xii. 36.

There his well-woven toils and subtle trains
He laid, the brutish nation to enwrap.
Spenser, Astrophel, l. 98.

You are a subtile nation, you physicians!
B. Jonson, Sejanus, i. 2.

But lawyers are too wise a nation
T' expose their trade to disputation.
S. Butler, Hudibras, III. iii. 483.

4. A division of students for voting purposes, according to their place of birth, as in the universities of Aberdeen and Glasgow, and formerly in that of Paris.

These several nations [in the university of Paris] first came into existence some time before the year 1219, and all belonged to the faculty of arts. . . . Each of the nations . . . was, like a royal colony, in a great measure self-governed. Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 835.

Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 236.

5. Nationalism; devotion or strong attachment to one's own nation or country.

In antiquity they [the Jews] developed an intense sentiment of nationality. J. Fiske, Idea of God, p. 72.

nationalization (nash″on-al-i-zā′shon), n. [< nationalize + -ation.] 1. The act of rendering national in character instead of local.

Calhoun's letter to Pakenham was the official proclamation of the nationalization of slavery, only, however, so far as it imposed duties upon the Union, but by no means with regard to any corresponding rights.
H. von Holst, John C. Calhoun (trans.), p. 239.

2. The act of making national as regards possession, use, and control; especially, as advocated by many socialists, the abolition of private property, as in lands, railways, etc., and the vesting of it in the nation for national use: as, the nationalization of land.

Without compensation, nationalization of the land is flagrantly unjust and quite hopeless; with compensation, its benefits are remote and doubtful.
Orpen, tr. of Laveleye's Socialism, p. 299.

Nationalization of the land makes its appearance in the list of many a London Working Men's Club. Nationalization of ordinary capital and state regulation of wages appear hardly less frequently.
Contemporary Rev., LIII. 149.

Besides the natural inhabitants of the aforesaid places, they had, even in those days, traffic with Jews, Turks, and other foreigners.
Hakluyt (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 20).

3. Produced or implanted at birth or when constituted or made; conferred by nature; inherent or innate; not acquired or assumed: as, natural disposition; natural beauty; a natural gait.

A wretch whose natural gifts were poor.
Shak., Hamlet, i. 5. 51.

God loving to bless all the means and instruments of his service, whether they be natural or acquisite.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 269.

Acasto has natural good sense, good nature, and discretion, so that every man enjoys himself in his company.
Steele, Spectator, No. 386.

4. Born; being such as one or it is from birth.

I saw in Rosetto two of those naked saints, who are commonly natural fools, and are had in great veneration in Egypt.
Pococke, Description of the East, I. 14.

5. In keeping with or proper to the nature, character, or constitution; belonging to birth or constitution; normal: as, the natural position of the body in sleep; the natural color of the hair; hence, as easy, spontaneous, etc., as if constituting a part of or proceeding from the very nature or constitution: as, oratory was natural to him.

For custome doth imitate nature, and that which is accustomable, the very same thing is now become naturall.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 257.

These cloaks throughout the whole island be all of one colour, and that is the natural colour of the wool.
Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), ii. 4.

A certaine contriued forme and qualitie, many times naturall to the writer, many times his peculier by election and arte.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 123.

Persons in affrightment have carried burdens, and leaped ditches, and climbed walls, which their natural power could never have done.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 261.

Hence—6. Not strained or affected; without affectation, artificiality, or exaggeration; easy; unaffected: applied to persons or to their conduct or manners, etc.

On the stage he was natural, simple, affecting;
'Twas only that when he was off he was acting.
Goldsmith, Retaliation.

With respect to the exercise of the æsthetic judgment, children should be encouraged to be natural, and to pronounce opinion for themselves.
J. Sully, Outlines of Psychol., p. 552.

7. Obedient to the better impulses of one's nature; affectionate; kindly.

Was this a natural mother, was this naturally done, to publish the sin of her own son?
Latimer, Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1550.

No child can be too natural to his parent.
B. Jonson, Catiline, iii. 2.

8. In a state of nature; unregenerate; carnal; physical.

The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God. 1 Cor. ii. 14.

You see, children, what comes o' follerin' the nateral heart; it 's deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked. She followed her nateral heart, and nobody knows where she 's gone to.
H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 335.

9. Formed, produced, or brought about by nature, or by the operations of the laws of nature; real; not artificial or cultivated: as, natural scenery; a natural bridge.

This rock is famous for a natural tunnel, passing directly through its heart.
B. Taylor, Northern Travel, p. 276.

Confining our attention, in the first place, to natural meadow grass, let us glance at the process [of hay-making].
Encyc. Brit., I. 379.

A good deal of the beauty of natural objects turns on association.
J. Sully, Outlines of Psychol., p. 535.

10. Being in conformity with the laws of nature; happening in the ordinary course of things, without the intervention of accident or violence; regulated or determined by the laws which govern events, actions, etc.: as, natural consequences; a natural death.

To haue and enioy the said office of Gouernour, to him the said Sebastian Cabota during his naturall life, without amouing or dimissing from the same roome.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 268.

There is something in this more than natural, if philosophy could find it out.
Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2. 385.

It would seem natural that we should first of all have asked the question how the mere understanding could arrive at all this knowledge a priori, and what extent, what truth, and what value it could possess. If we take natural to mean what is just and reasonable, then nothing could be more natural. But if we understand by natural what takes place ordinarily, then, on the contrary, nothing is more natural and more intelligible than that this examination should have been neglected for so long a time.
Kant, tr. by Max Müller.

Saving men from the natural penalties of dissolute living eventually necessitates the infliction of artificial penalties in solitary cells, on tread-wheels, and by the lash.
H. Spencer, Man vs. State, p. 19.

11. Of or pertaining to nature; connected with or relating to the existing system of things; treating of or derived from nature as known to man, or the world of matter and mind; belonging to nature: as, natural philosophy or history; natural religion or theology; natural laws.

I call that natural religion which men might know . . . by the mere principles of reason, improved by consideration and experience, without the help of revelation.
Bp. Wilkins.

The study of mental life has led us into paths far removed from those along which the explanation of natural phænomena is wont to move.
Lotze, Microcosmus (trans.), I. 267.

12. Same as naturalistic, 3.

It is difficult to give an exact definition or even description of what I have called the natural view of man. Perhaps it may be best defined, negatively, as the view which denies to reason any spontaneous or creative function in the human constitution.
W. R. Sorley, Ethics of Naturalism, p. 20.

13. In math., having 1 as the base of the system: applied to a function or number belonging or referred to such a system: as, natural numbers (that is, those beginning with 1); natural sines, cosines, etc. (those taken in arcs whose radii are 1).—14. In music, a term applied either (a) to the diatonic or normal scale of C (see scale); or (b) to an air or modulation of harmony which moves by easy and smooth transitions, changing gradually or but little into nearly related keys; or (c) to music produced by the voice, as distinguished from instrumental music; or (d) to the harmonics or overtones given off by any vibrating body over and above its original sound.—Natural act, an act which is connected with its subject by a natural cause.—Natural allegiance. See allegiance, 1.—Natural astrology. See astrology.—Natural bait, any article of food proper to a fish, used to induce the fish to take the hook, as distinguished from an artificial bait or imitation of the fish's natural food: sometimes simply called bait, when the artificial article is distinguished as a lure. Among natural baits are many small fishes, as minnows; frogs; certain crustaceans, as crawfish; worms of various kinds; mollusks of various kinds; some insects or their larvæ; spawn of various fishes and crustaceans, etc.—Natural being. See being.—Natural belief, an instinctive, a priori cognition.—Natural body, according to St. Paul's teaching, the physical body in its present visible condition; literally, the psychical body—that is, the body belonging to the soul, as the breath of life: opposed to spiritual body, the body belonging and adapted to the spirit or highest part of man's nature. See soul, psychical, spiritual.

It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body and there is a spiritual body.
1 Cor. xv. 44.

Natural cause, a cause which acts by natural necessity, as opposed to compulsion and to freedom.—Natural child, cognition, etc. See the nouns.—Natural consciousness, the form of consciousness possessed by all men; primary consciousness.—Natural day, a space of twenty-four hours.

In the space of a day naturel—
This is to seyn, in foure and twenty houres.
Chaucer, Squire's Tale, l. 108.

Natural definition, a definition which states the essential parts of the thing defined, as when man is defined as a substance composed of a body and an intellective soul.—Natural dualism, finger-breadth, flannel, gas, goodness, etc. See the nouns.—Natural egotistical idealism, the doctrine that the immediate object in perception is a mode of the mind which it is determined to present by its own natural laws.—Natural harmonic, in musical instruments of the viol, lute, or harp families, one of the harmonics or overtones of an open string: opposed to artificial harmonic, which is derived from a stopped string. Also used pleonastically for any harmonic.—Natural harmony, in music, harmony without modulations or derived chords.—Natural hexachord, in mediæval music, the second hexachord (and also the fifth): so called because it began on C, the key-note of the "natural" key. See key[1].—Natural history, immutation†, infirmity. See the nouns.—Natural infancy, a phrase sometimes used by law-writers to designate infancy under the age of seven years, as being a period of natural and complete incapacity in a legal sense.—Natural intervals. See interval.—Natural key. See key[1].—Natural law, the expression of right reason or the dictate of religion, inhering in nature and man, and having ethically a binding force as a rule of civil conduct; the will of man's Maker. Blackstone. See law of nature, under nature.—Natural liberty. See liberty.—Natural line of sight. See sight.—Natural logarithm. See logarithm.—Natural logic, love, magic, magnet, man, marmalade, method, motion. See the nouns.—Natural modulation, in music, a modulation of easy and direct character, as from a given key (tonality) to one of its near relatives.—Natural necessity, necessity which springs from within, from an internal principle of development, not from outward compulsion.—Natural obligation, an expression used in the civil law, in two different cases: (a) Where two different persons, though no agreement express or implied had been made, came into such a relation that the pretor was induced to impute to it some of the legal characteristics of an obligation: for example, the fact of becoming unduly enriched at another person's expense. (b) Where an obligation was imperfect, so that no action could be maintained on it, and yet certain legal effects, which were not the same in all cases, were attributed to it by law. The equivalent English phrase is imperfect obligation.—Natural order, in bot., an order belonging to the natural system of classification, in contradistinction to one of an artificial system devised for the mere convenience of a student. Nearly all botanists from Jussieu to Bentham and Hooker gave to their natural orders the rank that is given to families in zoölogy. These groups are now properly called families, are based on the names of the type genera, and are formed from these names by adding the termination -aceæ.—Natural persons. See person.—Natural philosophy, originally, the study of nature in general; now, more commonly, the branch of physical science which treats of those properties and phenomena of bodies which are unaccompanied by an essential change in the bodies themselves. It thus includes the various sciences classed under physics. See physics. Abbreviated nat. phil.—Natural pitch, the pitch of a wind-instrument, especially of an organ-pipe, when not overblown.—Natural price, printing, etc. See the nouns.—Natural propensity or appetite, a congenital or innate one, although it may not be actually developed until later in life.—Natural realism, the doctrine that the immediate object of perception is the real external object or thing.—Natural rights. See right.—Natural scale. See natural key, under key[1].—Natural science, a phrase employed in much the same signification as natural history in its widest sense, and used in contradistinction to mental, moral, or mathematical science.—Natural selection, theology, etc. See the nouns.—Natural sign, a sign which stands for its object independently of any human convention. Natural signs are either formal, standing for their objects in virtue of resembling them, or material, standing for their objects by virtue of some natural connection or real relation with them, as a weathercock to the wind. The former are called icons, the latter indices. The distinction seems to have originated with Paulus Venetus.—Natural system, in bot. See Jussieuan, and natural order, above.—Natural whole, in logic, a whole determined by the logical comprehension; either an essential or a mathematical whole.
=Syn. 1, 2, and 4. Natal, etc. See native.

II. n. 1†. That which is natural to one; natural quality, disposition, or expression.

That is, when he [our courtly poet] is most artificiall, so to disguise and cloake it as it may not appeare nor seeme to proceede from him by any studie or trade of rules, but to be his naturall.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 253.

It is with depraved man, in his impure naturalls, that we must maintaine this quarell. Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

And yet this much his courses do approve,
He was not bloody in his natural.
Daniel, Civil Wars, iv. 42. (Nares.)

2†. A natural gift or endowment.

But how out of purpose and place do I name art? When the professors are grown so obstinate contemners of it, and presumers on their own naturals, as they are deriders of all diligence that way. B. Jonson, Alchemist, To the Reader.

3. One born without the usual faculty of reasoning or understanding; a fool; an idiot.

This drivelling love is like a great natural, that runs lolling up and down to hide his bauble in a hole.
Shak., R. and J., ii. 4. 95.

I own the Man is not a Natural; he has a very quick Sense, tho' very slow Understanding.
Steele, Conscious Lovers, ii. 1.

4†. A native; an original inhabitant.

The more severe that these are to the naturalls, the greater their repute with the Spaniards, who enrich themselves by extorting from the other.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 202.

5†. A production of nature.

The abjectest naturalls have their specificall properties, and some wondrous vertues; and philosophy will not flatter the noblest or worthiest naturals in their venoms or impurities. Harvey, Pierce's Supererogation.

6. An oyster of natural wild growth, not planted. [New Jersey.]—7. In music: (a) On the keyboard, a white key (digital) as distinguished from a black key. (b) In notation, the sign ♮, placed before a note to counteract the effect of a sharp or flat in the signature or previously introduced as an accidental. Naturals are not used in signatures except where a change of key takes place and one or more of the sharps or flats of the original signature are to be annulled. Also called a cancel. See accidental, n., and signature. (c) A note affected by a ♮, or a tone thus represented.—8. A kind of wig worn in England early in the eighteenth century.

In 1724 the peruke-makers advertised "full-bottom tyes, full bobs, minister's bobs, naturals, half naturals, Grecian flyes, curley roys, airey levants, qu (= queue) perukes, and bagg wiggs" among the variety of artificial head-gear which they supplied. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 560.

natural-born (naṭ′ū-ral-bôrn), a. 1. Native in a country; not alien.

Natural-born subjects are such as are born within the dominions of the crown of England; that is, within the ligeance, or, as it is generally called, the allegiance of the king. Blackstone, Com., I. x.

No person except a natural-born citizen, or a citizen of the United States at the time of the adoption of this constitution, shall be eligible to the office of president.
Constitution of the United States, art. ii. § 1.

2. So by nature; born so: as, a natural-born fool.

naturalia (naṭ-ū-rā′li-ă), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of L. naturalis, natural: see natural.] The sexual organs.

naturalisation, naturalise. See naturalization, naturalize.

naturalism (naṭ′ū-ral-izm), n. [= F. naturalisme = Sp. naturalismo; as natural + -ism.] 1. A state of nature; uncivilized or unregenerate condition.

Those spirited and wanton cross-worms, as they call themselves, who are striving with speed and alacrity to come up to the naturalism and lawless privileges of the first class.
Bp. Lavington, Moravians Compared and Detected, p. 63. (Latham.)

2. Conformity to nature or to reality; a close adherence to nature in the arts of painting, sculpture, poetry, etc.: opposed to idealism, and implying less of crudeness than realism.

Gogol, the father of Russian naturalism, who wrote fifty years ago, was as full of literary consciousness as Thackeray or Dickens. Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 479.

3. Specifically, in the fine arts, the rendering of nature, as it is, by the arts of design, but without either slavish fidelity or attempt at illusion. It is the mean between idealism and realism.—4. In philos., that view of the world, and especially of man and human history and society, which takes account only of natural (as distinguished from supernatural) elements and forces.

On the basis of Naturalism, we may either look upon man as an individual distinct from other individuals, . . . or we may consider the race as itself an organism, apart from which the individual is unintelligible.
W. R. Sorley, Ethics of Naturalism, p. 17.

5. In theol.: (a) The doctrine that natural religion is sufficient for salvation. (b) The doctrine that all religious truth is derived from a study of nature without any supernatural revelation, and that all religious life is a natural development unaided by supernatural influences.

naturalist (naṭ′ū-ral-ist), n. [= F. naturaliste = Sp. Pg. It. naturalista, < ML. naturalista, a naturalist, < L. naturalis, natural: see natural and -ist.] 1. One who understands natural causes; one who is versed in natural science or philosophy; specifically, one who is versed in or devoted to natural history; in the most restricted sense, a zoölogist or botanist.

Naturalists observe that when the frost seizes upon wine they are only the slighter and more waterish parts of it that are subject to be congealed. South, Sermons, II. xii.

2. One who holds the theological theory or doctrine of naturalism.

So far as the Spirit of God is above reason, so far doth a Christian exceed a mere naturalist.
Bp. Hall, Meditations and Vows, ii. § 34.

★ naturalistic (naṭ″ū-ra-lis′tik), a. [< naturalist + -ic.] 1. Of, pertaining to, or in accordance with nature; natural; not formal, conventional, or conventionalized; hence, simulating or resembling nature: as, a naturalistic effect of light on the stage.

Such vivacious and naturalistic expletives as would scarcely have passed the censor.
Athenæum, No. 2840, p. 421.

2. Realistic.

"No one," as Señor Valdés truly says, "can rise from the perusal of a naturalistic book . . . without a vivid desire to escape" from the wretched world depicted in it.
Harper's Mag., LXXIX. 963.

3. Of, pertaining to, or based on naturalism in its philosophical or theological sense.—Naturalistic theory. See mythical theory, under mythical.

naturality† (naṭ-ū-ral′i-ti), n. [< ME. naturalitie, < OF. (and F.) naturalité = Sp. naturalidad = Pg. naturalidade = It. naturalità, < L. naturalita(t-)s, naturalness, < naturalis, natural: see natural.] The quality of being natural; naturalness.

The goddis by their naturalitie and power close vp the furies, and gouerne the steares.
Golden Boke, x. (Richardson.)

★ naturalization (naṭ″ū-ral-i-zā′shọn), n. [< naturalize + -ation.] The act of naturalizing, or the state of being naturalized; specifically, in law, the act of receiving an alien into the condition, and investing him with the rights and privileges, of a natural subject or citizen. In the United States, by Rev. Stat., 1878, title xxx., §§ 2165, etc., persons of age, of the classes enumerated below, may be naturalized, with their resident minor children, upon taking an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and renouncing all allegiance to a foreign prince or state: those over 21 who have (a) resided here at least five years continuously, and have legally declared their intention to be naturalized and to renounce foreign allegiance more than two years before naturalization; or (b) resided here for a continuous period of five years, of which three were during minority; or (c) resided here one year and have served in and been honorably discharged from the military forces of the United States; or (d) served three years on a merchant vessel of the United States after legal declaration of intention, etc. Citizens, etc., of countries at war with the United States are excepted. There are also provisions—now nearly obsolete—relating to the naturalization of aliens residing in the United States before January 29th, 1795, or between June 18th, 1798, and June 18th, 1812. Widows and children of those who have made legal declaration before death are deemed citizens. In Great Britain, by the Naturalization Act of 1870, an alien resident in the United Kingdom for a term of not less than five years, or who has been in the service of the crown for not less than five years, may obtain a certificate of naturalization, but unless he has lawfully ceased to be a citizen of his former country he is not when there considered by Great Britain a British subject. Also spelled naturalisation.

All States that are liberall of naturalization towards strangers are fit for empire.
Bacon, Kingdoms and Estates.

Such depopulation can only be repaired . . . by some sensible bill of naturalization.
Junius Letters, IV. (1788) 52.

Naturalization implies the renunciation of a former nationality, and the fact of entrance into a similar relation towards a new body politic.
Woolsey, Introd. to Inter. Law, § 66.

naturalize (naṭ′ū-ral-īz), v.; pret. and pp. naturalized, ppr. naturalizing. [= F. naturaliser = Sp. Pg. naturalizar = It. naturalizzare; as natural + -ize.] I. trans. 1. To reduce to a state of nature; identify with, or make a part of, nature.

Human freedom must be understood in some different sense from that with which our anthropologists are familiar, if it is to stand in the way of the scientific impulse to naturalise the moral man.
T. H. Green, Prolegomena to Ethics, § 6.

2. To make natural; render easy and familiar by custom and habit.

He rises fresh to his hammer and anvil; custom has naturalized his labours to him. South.

3. To confer the rights and privileges of a natural subject or citizen upon; receive under sanction and form of law as a citizen or subject. See naturalization.

Then the best way for a foreigner to break your exclusiveness is to be naturalized.
Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 938.

4. To receive or adopt as native, natural, or vernacular; incorporate into or make part and parcel of a language; receive into the original or common stock: as, to naturalize a foreign word or expression.

She must be foudroyant and pyramidal — if these French adjectives may be naturalized for this one particular emergency. O. W. Holmes, Elsie Venner, xxi.

5. So to adapt to new conditions of life that those conditions shall appear to be native to the person or thing naturalized; to introduce and acclimatize or cause to thrive as if indigenous: as, to naturalize a foreign plant or animal. [A plant that is naturalized is not merely habituated to the climate, but grows without cultivation. A naturalized animal is not only acclimatized, as an elephant or a tiger in captivity, but shifts for itself and propagates, as rabbits in Australia or English sparrows in America.]

Living so amongst those Blacks, by time and cunning they seeme to bee naturalized amongst them.
Capt. John Smith, True Travels, I. 48.

Our melons, our peaches, our figs, our apricots, and cherries are strangers among us, imported in different ages, and naturalized in our English gardens.
Addison, The Royal Exchange.

6. In musical notation, to apply a natural or cancel (♮) to.

II. intrans. 1. To explain phenomena by natural laws, to the exclusion of the supernatural.

We see how far the mind of an age is infected by this naturalizing tendency; let us note a few of the thousand and one forms in which it appears.
Bushnell, Nature and the Supernat., i.

2. To become like a native.

I have naturalized here [in London] perfectly, and have been more kindly received than is good for my modesty to remember. Jeffrey.

3. To become a citizen of another than one's native country.

Also spelled naturalise.

naturally (nat′ū-ral-i), adv. 1. By nature; not by art or habit: as, he was naturally eloquent.

Fire, whose flame if ye marke it, is alwaies pointed, and naturally by his forme couets to clymbe.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 78.

We naturally know what is good, but naturally pursue what is evil. Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, i. 55.

2. Spontaneously; without art or cultivation.

For syth he wrought it not naturallye but willingly [purposely], he wrought it not to the vttermost of his power, but with such degrees of goodnes as his hye pleasure lyked to lymit. Sir T. More, Works, p. 129.

There is no place where wheat naturally grows. Johnson.

3. Without affectation or artificiality; with ease or grace.

That part
Was aptly fitted and naturally perform'd.
Shak., T. of the S., Ind., i. 87.

4. According to the usual course of things; by an obvious consequence; of course.

Poverty naturally begets dependence.
Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, xxvii.

naturalness (nat′ū-ral-nes), n. 1. The state of being natural: as, naturalness of conduct.

And to show the naturalness of monarchy, all the forms of government insensibly partake of it, and slide into it.
South, Sermons, III. xii.

2. Conformity to nature, truth, or reality; absence of artificiality, exaggeration, or affectation: as, the naturalness of a person's conduct.

To seek to be natural implies a consciousness that forbids all naturalness forever.
Lowell, Study Windows, p. 205.

★ nature (nā′tūr), n. and a. [< ME. nature, < OF. nature, F. nature = Sp. Pg. It. natura = OFries. nature = D. natuur = MLG. natūre = OHG. natūra, MHG. natūre, natiure, G. natur = Sw. Dan. natur, < L. natura, birth, origin, natural constitution or quality, < nasci, pp. natus, be born, originate: see nascent.] I. n. 1. Birth; origin; parentage; original stock.

"We are broderen," quod he, "of on nature, Kyng Auferius my fader is also."
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 2656.

All of one nature, of one substance bred.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., i. 1. 11.

We who are Jews by nature, and not sinners of the Gentiles. Gal. ii. 15.

2. The forces or processes of the material world, conceived of as an agency intermediate between the Creator and the world, producing all organisms and preserving the regular order of things: as, in the old dictum, "nature abhors a vacuum." In this sense nature is often personified.

And there is in this business more than nature
Was ever conduct of. Shak., Tempest, v. 1. 243.

Thou, nature, art my goddess; to thy law
My services are bound. Shak., Lear, i. 2. 1.

Nature is the last of all causes that fabricate this corporeal and sensible world, and the utmost bound of incorporeal substances. Which, being full of reasons and powers, orders and presides over all mundane affairs.
Proclus (tr. by Cudworth), Comm. in Timæum, i.

Wherefore, since neither all things are produced fortuitously, or by the unguided mechanism of matter, nor God himself may reasonably be thought to do all things immediately and miraculously, it may well be concluded that there is a plastic nature under him, which as an inferior and subordinate instrument doth drudgingly execute that part of his providence which consists in the regular and orderly motion of matter; yet so as that there is also besides this a higher providence to be acknowledged, which, presiding over it, doth often supply the defects of it, and sometimes overrule it; forasmuch as this plastic nature cannot act electively nor with discretion.
Cudworth, Intellectual System, i. 3.

Nature never did betray
The heart that loved her.
Wordsworth, Tintern Abbey.

3. The metaphysical principle of life; the power of growth; that which causes organisms to develop each in its predeterminate way. Aristotle defines nature as the principle of motion in those things that move themselves, meaning by motion especially generation and corruption. Inasmuch as the most striking characteristic of growth is its regularity, nature is also conceived by Aristotle as the principle of inward necessity, as opposed to constraint on the one hand and to chance or freedom on the other. Hence nature is in literature frequently contrasted with fate and with compulsion, as well as with fortune and free election.

There are in sublunary bodies both constant tendencies and variable tendencies. The constant Aristotle calls nature, which always aspires to good, or to perpetual renovation of forms as perfect as may be, though impeded in this work by adverse influences, and therefore never producing any thing but individuals comparatively defective and sure to perish. The variable he calls spontaneity and chance, forming an independent agency inseparably accompanying nature — always modifying, distorting, frustrating the full purposes of nature. Moreover, the different natural agencies often interfere with each other, while the irregular tendency interferes with them all. So far as nature acts in each of her distinct agencies, the phenomena before us are regular and predictable; all that is uniform, and all that, without being quite uniform, recurs usually or frequently, is her work. But, besides and along with nature, there is the agency of chance and spontaneity, which is essentially irregular and unpredictable.
Grote, Aristotle, iv.

Cel. Let us sit and mock the good housewife Fortune. . . . Those that she makes fair she scarce makes honest, and those that she makes honest she makes very ill-favouredly.
Ros. Nay, now thou goest from Fortune's office to Nature's: Fortune reigns in the gifts of the world, not in the lineaments of Nature. Shak., As you Like it, i. 2. 44.

Yet had the number of her days
Been as complete as was her praise,
Nature and Fate had had no strife
In giving limit to her life.
Milton, Epitaph on Marchioness of Winchester, l. 18.

4†. Cause; occasion; that which produces anything.

The nature of his great offence is dead.
Shak., All's Well, v. 3. 23.

5. The material and spiritual universe, as distinguished from the Creator; the system of things of which man forms a part; creation, especially that part of it which more immediately surrounds man and affects his senses, as mountains, seas, rivers, woods, etc.: as, the beauties of nature; in a restricted sense, whatever is produced without artificial aid, and exists unchanged by man, and is thus opposed to art.

All things are artificial; for Nature is the art of God.
Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, i. 16.

He needed not the spectacles of books to read Nature; he looked inwards, and found her there.
Dryden, Essay on Dram. Poesy.

Nature is that world of substance whose laws are laws of cause and effect, and whose events transpire, in orderly succession, under those laws.
Bushnell, Nature and the Supernat., p. 43.

Nature, in the common sense, refers to essences unchanged by man: space, the air, the river, the leaf.
Emerson, Nature, p. 7.

Nature in the abstract is the aggregate of the powers and properties of all things. Nature means the sum of all phenomena, together with the causes which produce them; including not only all that happens, but all that is capable of happening; the unused capabilities of causes being as much a part of the idea of nature as those which take effect. J. S. Mill.

Hence — 6. That which is conformed to nature or to truth and reality, as distinguished from that which is artificial, forced, conventional, or remote from actual experience; naturalness.

With this special observance, that you o'erstep not the modesty of nature: for anything so overdone is from the purpose of playing, whose end, both at the first and now, was and is, to hold, as 't were, the mirror up to nature.
Shak., Hamlet, iii. 2.

Only nature can please those tastes which are unprejudiced and refined. Addison.

7. Inherent constitution, property, or quality; essential character, quality, or kind; the qualities or attributes which constitute a being or thing what it is, and distinguish it from all others; also, kind; sort; species; category: as, the nature of the soul; the divine nature; it is the nature of fire to burn; the compensation was in the nature of a fee.

Lyve thou soleyn, wermis corupcioun!
For no fors is of lak of thy nature.
Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 615.

Things rank and gross in nature.
Shak., Hamlet, i. 2. 136.

I wish my years
Were fit to do you service in a nature
That might become a gentleman.
Fletcher, Spanish Curate, i. 1.

Onely this is certaine, that many regions lying in the same latitude afford Mines very rich of divers natures.
Capt. John Smith, Works, I. 125.

They [the Jews] apprehended the Crown of Thorns which was put upon our Saviour's head was the fittest representation of the nature of his Kingdom.
Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. viii.

The nature of her [Catherine Sedley's] influence over James is not easily to be explained.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

8. An original, wild, undomesticated condition, as of an animal or a plant; also, the primitive condition of man antecedent to institutions, especially to political institutions: as, to live in a state of nature.

That the condition of mere nature — that is to say, of absolute liberty, such as is theirs that are neither sovereigns nor subjects, is anarchy and the condition of war; that the precepts by which men are guided to avoid that condition are the laws of nature; that a commonwealth without sovereign power is but a word without substance, and cannot stand; that subjects owe to sovereigns simple obedience in all things in which their obedience is not repugnant to the laws of God, I have sufficiently proved.
Hobbes, Leviathan, ii. 31.

9. The primitive aboriginal instincts, qualities, and tendencies common to mankind of all races and in all ages, as unchanged or uninfluenced by civilization; especially, the instinctive or spontaneous sense of justice, benevolence, affection, self-preservation, love of show, etc., common to mankind; naturalness of thought, feeling, or action; humanity.

For when the Gentiles, which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these, having not the law, are a law unto themselves. Rom. ii. 14.

Ros. But, to Orlando: did he leave him there,
Food to the sucked and hungry, lioness?
Oli. Twice did he turn his back and purposed so;
But kindness, nobler ever than revenge,
And nature, stronger than his just occasion,
Made him give battle to the lioness.
Shak., As you Like it, iv. 3. 130.

One touch of nature makes the whole world kin,
That all, with one consent, praise new-born gawds.
Shak., T. and C., iii. 3. 175.

If thou hast nature in thee, bear it not.
Shak., Hamlet, i. 5. 81.

Oh mother, do not lose your name! forget not
The touch of nature in you, tenderness!
Beau. and Fl., Thierry and Theodoret, v. 2.

10. The physical or moral constitution of man; physical or moral being; the personality.

As surfeit is the father of much fast,
So every scope by the immoderate use Turns to restraint. Our natures do pursue,
Like rats that ravin down their proper bane,
A thirsty evil; and when we drink we die.
Shak., M. for M., i. 2. 132.

In swinish sleep
Their drenched natures lie as in a death.
Shak., Macbeth, i. 7. 68.

Thus have they made profane that nature which God hath not only cleans'd, but Christ also hath assum'd.
Milton, Church-Government, ii. 3.

Tir'd Nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep!
Young, Night Thoughts, i. 1.

11. Inborn or innate character, disposition, or inclination; inherent bent or disposition; individual constitution or temperament; inbred or natural endowments, as opposed to acquired; hence, by metonymy, a person so endowed: as, we instinctively look up to a superior nature.

His nature is too noble for the world;
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
Or Jove for 's power to thunder. His heart 's his mouth:
What his breast forges, that his tongue must vent.
Shak., Cor., iii. 1. 255.

This can only succeed according to the nature and manners of the person they court, or solicit.
Bacon, Moral Fables, iv., Expl.

It is your nature to have all men slaves
To you, but you acknowledging to none.
B. Jonson, Sejanus, iii. 1.

12. The vital powers of man; vitality; vital force; life; also, natural course of life; lifetime.

And the most part of hem dyen with outen Syknesse, whan nature faylethe hem for elde.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 293.

Till the foul crimes done in my days of nature
Are burnt and purged away. Shak., Hamlet, i. 5. 12.

My offences being many, I would repent out the remainder of nature. Shak., All's Well, iv. 3. 272.

O, sir, you are old;
Nature in you stands on the very verge
Of her confine. Shak., Lear, ii. 4. 149.

13. In theol., the natural unregenerate state of the soul; moral character in its original condition, unaffected by grace.

We all . . . were by nature the children of wrath, even as others. Eph. ii. 3.

Yet if we look more closely we shall find
Most have the seeds of judgment in their mind;
Nature affords at least a glimmering light;
The lines, though touch'd but faintly, are drawn right.
Pope, Essay on Criticism, l. 21.

The Judgment, umpire in the strife
That Grace and Nature have to wage through life.
Cowper, Tirocinium, l. 30.

14. Conscience.

Make thick my blood;
Stop up the access and passage to remorse,
That no compunctious visitings of nature
Shake my fell purpose, nor keep peace between
The effect and it! Shak., Macbeth, i. 5. 46.

15. Spontaneity; abandon; felicity; truth; naturalness.

With Shakspear's nature, or with Jonson's art.
Pope, Dunciad, ii. 224.

nautically (nâ'ti-kal-i), adv. In a nautical manner; in matters pertaining to ships, seamen, or navigation: as, nautically speaking.

Nautilacea (nâ-ti-lā'sē-ą), n. pl. [NL., < Nautilus + -acea.] In old systems, a group of cephalopods, named from the genus Nautilus, corresponding to the family Nautilidæ.

nautilacean (nâ-ti-lā'sē-an), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Nautilacea; nautiliform; nautiloid.

II. n. A member of the Nautilacea; a nautiloid.

nautili, n. Plural of nautilus.

nautilian (nâ-til'i-an), a. [< Nautilus + -ian.] Same as nautiloid. A. Hyatt.

Nautilidæ (nâ-til'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Nautilus + -idæ.] A family of tetrabranchiate cephalopods, typified by the genus Nautilus, to which different limits have been assigned. (a) In the older systems it was equivalent to the Nautiloidea in the widest sense. (b) In Woodward's classification it included all the tetrabranchiates with the body-chamber capacious, the aperture and also the sutures simple, and the siphuncle central or subcentral—thus embracing the restricted Nautilidæ, Lituitidæ, and Trochoceratidæ, as well as Clymeniidæ, of other conchologists. (c) In its narrowest sense it has been restricted to those having the shell essentially similar to that of Nautilus.

nautiliform (nâ'ti-li-fôrm), a. [< L. nautilus, a nautilus, + forma, form.] Formed like a nautilus; resembling a nautilus in shape; nautiloid.

Nautilinidæ (nâ-ti-lin'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Nautilinus (dim. of Nautilus) + -idæ.] A family of goniatite ammonoids having smooth and more or less depressed whorls, and simple sutures with only a broad lateral lobe and undivided ventral lobe. A. Hyatt, Proc. Bost. Soc. Nat. Hist. (1883), p. 308.

nautilite (nâ'ti-līt), n. [= F. nautilite; as nautilus + *-ite*2.] A fossil of the genus Nautilus, or a fossil shell like that of Nautilus.

Nautilitest† (nâ-ti-lī'tēz), n. [NL., < Nautilus + Gr. λίθος.] A genus of cephalopods embracing most of the Ammonitoidea as well as the Nautiloidea.

nautiloid (nâ'ti-loid), a. and n. [< NL. Nautilus + -oid.] I. a. 1. Nautiliform; having the characters of a nautilus; belonging to the Nautiloidea.—2. Resembling a nautilus: specifically applied to those foraminifers whose many-chambered test resembles a nautilus-shell.

II. n. That which is nautiloid, as the test of a protozoan.

Nautiloidea (nâ-ti-loi'dē-ä), n. pl. [NL., < Nautilus + -oidea.] A suborder or an order of tetrabranchiate cephalopods, including those having shells with the suture-line simple or nearly so and the initial chamber conical and with a cicatrix, which is sometimes concealed by a protoconch. Some of its families are Orthoceratidæ, Endoceratidæ, Gomphoceratidæ, Ascoceratidæ.

nautilus (nâ'ti-lus), n.; pl. nautili (-lī). [NL., < L. nautilus, a nautilus, < Gr. ναυτίλος, a sailor, a nautilus, a poet. form for ναύτης, a sailor, < ναῦς, a ship: see *nautic, nave*².] 1. The Argonauta argo, or any other cephalopod believed to sail by means of the expanded tentacular arms.—2. [cap.] A genus of tetrabranchiate cephalopods, type of the Nautilacea or Nautilidæ, to which very different limits have been assigned. (a) By Linnæus it was made to include all the camerate or tetrabranchiate cephalopods as well as foraminiferous shells having like forms. It was afterward gradually restricted. (b) By recent writers it is restricted to the living pearly nautilus and related extinct species.

Nautilus elegans, half natural size.

3. A Portuguese man-of-war. See Physalia.—4. A form of diving-bell which requires no suspension, sinking and rising by the agency of condensed air.—Glass nautilus, Carinaria cymbium, a heteropod of the family Carinariidæ: so called from the hyaline transparency of the shell. Also called Venus's-slipper. See cut under Carinaria.—Paper-nautilus, any species of Argonauta.—Pearly nautilus, any species of the restricted genus Nautilus.

A European form of Diving-bell or Nautilus.

Water admitted through the cock a into the pipes b b flows into the exterior chambers c c, causing the apparatus to sink. When the water in c c is displaced by air, the nautilus rises. It may also be hauled up by ropes. Air for ventilation and for displacement of the water-ballast is supplied by air-pumps from above through flexible tubes connected with the interior chamber, and is allowed to pass into the chambers c c by opening valves. Dead-lights in the sides and top admit light to the interior.

nautilus-cup (nâ'ti-lus-kup), n. An ornamental goblet or standing-cup the bowl of which is a nautilus-shell, or made in imitation of a nautilus-shell.

navagium† (nā-vā'ji-um), n. [ML., < L. navis, a ship: see *nave*² and -age.] A duty devolving on certain tenants to carry their lord's goods in a ship. Dugdale.

naval (nā'val), a. and n. [= F. Sp. Pg. naval = It. navale, < L. navalis, pertaining to a ship or ships, < navis = Gr. ναῦς, a ship: see *nave*².] I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to a ship or ships, their construction, equipment, management, or use; specifically, of or pertaining to a navy: as, naval architecture; a naval victory; a naval force; a naval station or hospital; naval stores.

By the transformation of the ships into sea-deities, Virgil would insinuate, I suppose, the great advantages of cultivating a naval power, such as extended commerce, and the dominion of the ocean. Jortin, Dissertations, vi.

2. Possessing a navy: as, a naval power.—Naval armies. See army, 2.—Naval cadet. See midshipman, 2.—Naval crown, engineering, hospital. See the nouns.—Naval law, a system of regulations for the government of the United States navy under the acts of Congress.—Naval office, in colonial times preceding the declaration of independence by the United States, a government office for the entry and clearance of vessels and other business connected with the administration of the Navigation Act.—Naval officer. (a) An officer belonging to the naval forces of a country. (b) In the United States, an officer of the Treasury Department who, at the larger maritime ports, is associated with the collector of customs. He assists in estimating duties, countersigns all permits, clearances, certificates, etc., issued by the collector, and examines and certifies his accounts. In the American colonies before the Revolution the naval officer was the administrator of the Navigation Act.=Syn. Marine, Nautical, etc. See maritime.

[cap.] [NL. (Bory, 1822).] A genus of diatoms, typical of the family Naviculaceæ, having the oblong or lanceolate frustules free, the valves convex, with a median longitudinal line, and nodules at the center and extremities, valves striated, and the striæ resolvable into dots. The genus is widely distributed, and contains several hundred species, many of which rest on very slight characters.

1, Navicula tumida, different views; 2, Navicula viridis; 3, Navicula punctulata; 4, Navicula sphærophora; 5, Navicula truncata; 6, Navicula scutelloides. (All magnified.)

Naviculaceæ (nā-vik-ū-lā′sē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Navicula + -aceæ.] A family of diatoms, typified by the genus Navicula.

navicular (nā-vik′ū-lär), a. and n. [= F. naviculaire = Sp. Pg. navicular = It. navicolare, < LL. navicularis, relating to ships or shipping, < L. navicula, a small ship or boat: see navicula.] I. a. 1. Relating to small ships or boats; shaped like a boat; cymbiform. Specifically—2. In anat., scaphoid: applied to certain bones of the hand and foot. See II.—3. In entom., oblong or ovate, with a concave disk and raised margins, as the bodies of certain insects.—4. In bot., resembling or belonging to the genus Navicula; boat-shaped.—Navicular fossa, the scaphoid fossa at the base of the pterygoid bone, giving attachment to the tensor palati muscle.

II. n. In anat.: (a) The scaphoid bone of the carpus; the radiale, or bone of the proximal row on the radial side of the wrist. See cut under hand. (b) The scaphoid bone of the tarsus, a bone of the proximal row, on the inner or tibial side, in special relation with the astragalus and the cuneiform bones. See cut under foot. (c) A large transversely extended sesamoid bone developed in the tendon of the deep flexor, at the back of the distal phalangeal articulation of the foot of the horse, between the coronary and the coffin-bone. See cut under fetter-bone.

naviculare (nā-vik-ū-lā′rē), n.; pl. navicularia (-ri-ä). [NL., neut. of LL. navicularis, relating to ships or shipping: see navicular.] A navicular or scaphoid bone: more fully called os naviculare.

naviculoid (nā-vik′ū-loid), a. [< L. navicula, a small ship or boat, + Gr. εἶδος, form.] Boat-shaped; scaphoid; navicular.

naviform (nā′vi-fôrm), a. [< L. navis, a ship, + forma, form.] Resembling a boat; navicular: applied to parts of plants.

navigability (nav′i-gā-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. navigabilité; as navigable + -ity: see -bility.] The state or condition of being navigable; navigableness.

navigable (nav′i-gā-bl), a. [= F. navigable = Sp. navegable = Pg. navegavel = It. navigabile, navicabile, < L. navigabilis, < navigare, pass over in a ship: see navigate.] 1. Capable of being navigated; affording passage to ships: as, a navigable river. At common law, in England, a river is deemed navigable as far as the tide ebbs and flows. In the United States the legal meaning of navigable has been much extended, and it includes generally all waters practically available for floating commerce by any method, as by rafts or boats.

> The Loire . . . is a very goodly navigable river.
> Coryat, Crudities, I. 49.

2. Subject to a public right of water-passage for persons or property.

navigableness (nav′i-gā-bl-nes), n. The property of being navigable; navigability.

navigably (nav′i-gā-bli), adv. So as to be navigable.

navigant† (nav′i-gant), n. [< OF. navigant = Sp. navegante = It. navigante, navicante, a navigator, < L. navigan(t-)s, ppr. of navigare, pass over in a ship: see navigate.] A navigator. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 213.

navigate (nav′i-gāt), v.; pret. and pp. navigated, ppr. navigating. [< L. navigatus, pp. of navigare (> It. navigare, navicare = Pg. Sp. navegar = Pr. navejar, naveyar = OF. navier, also nager, F. nager, also naviguer), sail, go by sea, sail over, navigate, < navis, a ship, + agere, lead, conduct, go, move: see nave[2] and agent.] I. intrans. 1. To move from place to place in a ship; sail.

> The Phœnicians navigated to the extremities of the Western ocean. Arbuthnot, Anc. Coins.

2. To direct or manage a ship.

II. trans. 1. To pass over in ships; sail on.

> Drusus, the Father of the Emperor Claudius, was the first who navigated the Northern ocean.
> Arbuthnot, Anc. Coins, p. 272.

2. To steer, direct, or manage in sailing; direct the course of, as a vessel, from one place to another: as, to navigate a ship. [The word is also used by extension, in all its senses, of balloons and their use, and colloquially of other means and modes of progression.]

navigating-lieutenant (nav′i-gā-ting-lū-ten″ant), n. See master[1], 1 (b).

navigation (nav-i-gā′shon), n. [= F. navigation = Sp. navegación = Pg. navegação = It. navigazione, navicazione, < L. navigatio(n-), a sailing, a passing over in a ship, < navigare, sail: see navigate.] 1. The act of navigating; the act of moving on water in ships or other vessels; sailing: as, the navigation of the northern seas; also, by extension, the act of "sailing" through the air in a balloon (see aërial navigation, below).—2. The science or art of directing the course of vessels as they sail from one part of the world to another. The management of the sails, etc., the holding of the assigned course by proper steering, and the working of the ship generally, pertain rather to seamanship, though necessary to successful navigation. The two fundamental problems of navigation are the determination of the ship's position at a given moment, and the decision of the most advantageous course to be steered in order to reach a given point. The methods of solving the first are, in general, four: (1) by reference to one or more known and visible landmarks; (2) by ascertaining through soundings the depth and character of the bottom; (3) by calculating the direction and distance sailed from a previously determined position (see dead-reckoning, log[2], and compass); and (4) by ascertaining the latitude and longitude by observations of the heavenly bodies. (See latitude and longitude.) The places of the sun, moon, planets, and fixed stars are deduced from observation and calculation, and are published in nautical almanacs (see almanac), the use of which, together with logarithmic and other tables computed for the purpose, is necessary in reducing observations taken to determine latitude, longitude, and the error of the compass.

3. Ships in general; shipping. [Poetical.]

> Though the yesty waves
> Confound and swallow navigation up.
> Shak., Macbeth, iv. 1. 53.

4. An artificial waterway, or a part of a natural waterway that has been made navigable; a canal. Also navvy. See navvy[1]. [Eng.]

> "The Kennet Navigation"—a very old canal, which connects the waters of the East with those of the West country. The Academy, July 6, 1889, p. 13.

Act of Navigation, an act which was first passed by the British Parliament in 1651, under Cromwell's administration, was reënacted in 1660, and remained in force, with various modifications; it was greatly altered in 1825 and at other times, and finally repealed in 1849. Its object was to encourage the British merchant marine by reserving to it the whole of the import trade from Asia, Africa, and America, and the chief part of that from Europe. This end it accomplished by denying to foreign vessels the right to bring to England any goods not produced in their respective countries, and also by restrictions in regard to fisheries and the coasting-trade. The act was aimed especially at the Dutch, who possessed at that time almost a monopoly of the carrying-trade of the world.—Aërial navigation, the sailing or floating in the air by means of balloons or airships; particularly, the principles, problems, and practice involved in the attempt to pass from place to place through the air by means of balloons or flying-machines capable of being propelled and steered.—Arterial navigation. See arterial.—Inland navigation, the passing of boats or vessels on rivers, lakes, or canals in the interior of a country; conveyance by boats or vessels within a country.—Navigation laws, the various acts and regulations in any country which define the nationality of its ships, the manner in which they shall be registered, the privileges to which they have claim, and the conditions regulating the engagement of foreign ships in the trade of the country in question, either as importers and exporters or with relation to coasting-traffic. The first British navigation law of importance was enacted under Richard II. It provided that no merchandise should be imported into England or exported from the king's realms by any of his subjects except in English ships, under penalty of forfeiture of vessel and cargo.

navigational (nav-i-gā′shon-al), a. [< navigation + -al.] Of or pertaining to navigation; used in navigation.

navigator (nav′i-gā-tor), n. [= F. navigateur = Sp. Pg. navegador = It. navigatore, navicatore, < L. navigator, a sailor: see navigate.] 1. One who navigates or sails; especially, one who directs the course of a ship, or is skilful in the art of navigation. In the merchant marine the commanding officer usually navigates the vessel; in men-of-war, of nearly all nationalities, one of the line-officers or executive officers (in the United States navy the third in rank) is detailed for that duty. In the United States navy the navigator, in addition to his other duties, has charge of the log-book, of the steering-gear, of the anchors and chains, and of the stowage of the hold, and has also general supervision of the ordnance and ordnance-stores.

2. A laborer on a "navigation" or canal (see navigation, 4), or on a railway. Now usually abbreviated navvy (see navvy[2]). [Eng.]

navvy[1] (nav′i), n. [Abbr. of navigation, 4.] Same as navigation, 4.

> In Skipton-in-Craven the canal is vulgarly called "the navvy." The horse-path or towing path is always "the navvy bank"; a bridge in Mill-hill Street is "the navvy brig"; and a garden on one of the slopes of the canal was always called "the navvy garden."
> N. and Q., 4th ser., VI. 425.

navvy[2] (nav′i), n. [Abbr. of navigator, 2.] 1. Same as navigator, 2.—2. A common laborer engaged in such work as the making of canals or railways. [Eng.]

> It has been for years past a well-established fact that the English navvy, eating largely of flesh, is far more efficient than a Continental navvy living on a less nutritive food.
> H. Spencer, Education, p. 239.

3. A power-machine for excavating earth. A common form has an excavating scoop, crab, or analogous device for scooping up earth or gravel, or grasping stones, with a boom and tackle for lifting and operating the scoop, etc., and a steam hoisting-engine, all mounted on a supporting platform provided with car-wheels so that it can be moved on a temporary railway for changing its position. Similar machines are also mounted on large scow-boats for use along water-fronts. Also called steam-excavator.

navy[1] (nā′vi), n.; pl. navies (-viz). [< ME. navie, navye, naveye, navee, < OF. navie, also navei, navey, navoi, navoy, a ship, a fleet, a navy, < LL. navia, ships, neut. pl. for L. naves, fem. pl. of navis, a ship: see nave[2].] 1†. A ship.

> A gret number of naueye to that hauen longet.
> William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 2719.

> And no man may passe that See be Navye, ne be no maner of craft, and therfore may no man knowe what Lond is bezond that See. Mandeville, Travels, p. 273.

2. A company of ships; a fleet.

> My gracious sovereign, on the western coast
> Rideth a puissant navy. Shak., Rich. III., iv. 4. 434.

3. All the ships belonging to a country, collectively; in a wide sense, the ships, their officers and crew and equipment, and the department of the government charged with their management and control. Specifically—(a) All the war-ships belonging to a nation or a monarch; the military marine: in Great Britain distinguished by the title of Royal Navy. In the United States the control of the navy is vested in a cabinet officer called the Secretary of the Navy, the head of the Navy Department. (See department.) The government of the royal navy is vested in the Board of Admiralty, or lords commissioners for discharging the office of lord high admiral. The board consists of the following members: the first lord, who has supreme authority, and is a member of the cabinet; the senior naval lord, who directs the movements of the fleets, and is responsible for their discipline; the second naval lord, who superintends the manning of the fleet, coast-guard, transport department, etc.; the junior naval lord, who deals with the victualing of the fleets, medical department, etc.; a civil lord, member of Parliament, who is also connected with the civil branch of the service; a controller of the navy; and an expert civilian. Under the board is a financial secretary, changing, like the five lords, with the government in power. There is a permanent secretary, and a number of heads of departments. (b) All the ships and vessels employed in commerce and trade: usually called the merchant marine or merchant navy.

4. The men who man a navy or fleet; the officers and men of the military marine.

> Than was the navie appereiled and entred in to shippes.
> Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 644.

nay (nā), adv. [< ME. nay, nai, < Icel. nei (= Sw. nej = Dan. nei), nay, < n-, orig. ne, not, + ei, ever, ay, = AS. ā, ever: see ne and aye[3], and cf. no[1].] 1. No: an expression of negation or refusal.

> "Nai, bi the peril of my soule," quod Pers.
> Piers Plowman (A), vi. 47.
> I tell you nay; but, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish. Luke xiii. 5.

2. Not only so, but; and not only (that which has just been mentioned), but also; indeed; in point of fact: as, the Lord is willing, nay, he desires, that all should repent.

> Nay, if he take you in hand, sir, with an argument,
> He 'll bray you in a mortar. B. Jonson, Alchemist, ii. 1.
>
> Come, do not weep: I must, nay, do believe you.
> Beau. and Fl., Thierry and Theodoret, iii. 2.

To say (any one) nay, to deny; refuse.

> The fox made several excuses, but the stork would not be said nay. Sir R. L'Estrange.

nay (nā), n. [< nay, adv.] 1. A denial; refusal.

> There was no nay, but I must in,
> And take a cup of ale. W. Browne.

2. A negative vote; hence, one who votes in the negative: as, the yeas and nays.—It is no nay†, there is no denying it.

> Wherfore to hym I will, this is noo naye,
> Where euer he be, I say yow certaynly.
> Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 1135.

To nick with nay. See nick[2].

nay (nā), v. [ME. nayen, naien; < nay, adv. Cf. nait[2], nite.] I. intrans. To say nay; refuse.

> With how deef an ere deth crewel torneth awey fro wreches and naieth [var. nayteth] to closyn wepynge eyen. Chaucer, Boëthius, i. meter 1.

II. trans. To refuse; deny.

> A type [of cranium] which has received the name Neanderthaloid, because it reaches the extreme developement in the famous skull discovered in the Neanderthal, near Bonn. W. H. Flower, Jour. Anthrop. Inst., XVI. 377.

neap[1] (nēp), a. and n. [< ME. neep, < AS. nēp, scant or lacking (found alone but once, in the poet. phrase "forthganges nēp," without power of advancing), in comp. nēpflōd, low tide, ebb, lit. 'neap flood'; origin undetermined. The word has been referred in the supposed sense of 'pinched' or 'scanty' to the root of nip[1]. But the history is obscure.] I. a. Low; lowest: applied to those tides which, being half-way between spring tides, have the least difference of height between flood and ebb. See tide.

II. n. 1. A neap tide.

> Her [the sea's] motion of ebbing and flowing, of high springs and dead neapes, are still as certaine and constant as the changes of the moone and course of the sunne.
> Hakewill, Apology, II. viii. 1.

2. The ebb or lowest point of a tide.

> At everie full sea they flourish, but at every dead neape they fade. Greene, Carde of Fancie.
>
> The lowest ebbe may have his flow, and the deadest neepe his full tide. Greene, Tullie's Love.

[In the following passage from "English Gilds" neep sesons is defined by the editor as "the autumn;" by Skeat as "the neap-tide seasons, when boats cannot come to the quay."

> Item, it hath been vsid, the Maire [of Bristol] this quarter specially to oversee the sale of wodde commynge to the bakke and to the key. . . . And that all grete wodde, callid Berkley wodde, be dischargid at the key beyond the Towre there, and all smalwodde to be dischargid at the Bak. Prouydid always that the woddesillers leve not the bak all destitute and bare of wodde, ne soffir not the halyers to hale it all awey, but that they leve resonable stuff upon the bak fro spryng to spryng, to serue the pouere people of penyworthes and halfpeny worthez in the neep sesons. English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 425.]

Deep neap, a neap tide shortly before a full or change of the moon, when there is a higher flood than at other neaps.

neap[2], n. See neep[2].

neap[3] (nēp), n. [Origin obscure.] The tongue or pole of a wagon or ox-cart.

neaped (nēpt), a. [< neap[1] + -ed[2].] Left aground by the spring tides, so that it cannot be floated until the next spring tide: said of a ship or boat. Also beneaped.

Neapolitan (nē-ą-pol′i-tan), a. and n. [< L. Neapolitanus, pertaining to Neapolis, < Neapolis (> It. Napoli, > F. Naples, E. Naples), < Gr. ★nebula (neb'ū-lạ), n.; pl. nebulæ (-lē). [< L. nebula = Gr. νεφέλη, a cloud, mist, vapor: see nebule.] 1. A luminous patch in the heavens, far beyond the limits of the solar system. Some nebulæ are resolvable into clusters, generally globular, in which the separate stars can be distinguished. These are for the most part in the Galaxy. The remaining nebulæ are of two types, according as their spectra are continuous or consist of bright lines. The latter class are greenish-blue, have fairly definite outlines, and show a tendency to concentration toward the galactic circle. Of the three brightest lines in their spectra two unidentified are due to a still unknown substance provisionally named nebulium, and one is the F line of hydrogen. There are numerous other faint lines, detected by photography, several of them due to hydrogen, helium, and (probably) nebulium. There are besides nebulous stars, or stars with haze about them which in some cases is of vast proportions. The continuous spectra indicate that all these nebulæ are solid, liquid, or, if gaseous, enormously condensed. The nebulæ in Andromeda, Orion, and Argo are visible to the naked eye.

2. In pathol., a cloud-like spot on the cornea.—Dumb-bell nebula, a nebula which, seen in a telescope of small power, appears to have a form like a dumb-bell inscribed in a fainter ellipse, but with a more powerful instrument is seen to have a spiral structure.—Planetary nebula, a circular or elliptical gaseous nebula, with a well-defined outline.—Resolvable nebula, a nebula in which a powerful telescope detects many points of light, which, however, are not usually distinguished as perfectly as in a cluster.—Ring nebula, or annular nebula, a nebula which appears like a ring with a dark center.—Spiral nebula, a nebula which presents the appearance either of a contorted stream or of a number of such streams proceeding from a center.

nebular (neb'ū-lạr), a. [= F. nébulaire, < NL. nebularis, < L. nebula, a cloud: see nebule.] 1. Like a nebula; cloudy.—2. Pertaining or relating to a nebula.—The nebular hypothesis, a theory of the formation of the solar system, originated by the philosopher Kant and the astronomer Sir William Herschel, and developed by Laplace and others. The solar system is supposed to be the result of the gradual condensation of a nebula under the action of the mutual gravitation of its parts.

nebule (neb'ūl), n. [< ME. nebule, < OF. nebule = It. nebula, < L. nebula, a cloud, a mist, vapor, = Gr. νεφέλη, a cloud, mass of clouds, = OS. nebhal = OFries. nevil = D. nevel = MLG. nevel, neffel, LG. nevel = OHG. nebul, nepol, MHG. nebulosity (neb-ū-los'i-ti), n.; pl. nebulosities (-tiz). [= F. nébulosité = Sp. nebulosidad = Pg. nebulosidade = It. nebulosità, < LL. nebulosita(t-)s, cloudiness, obscurity, < L. nebulosus, cloudy: see nebulous.] 1. The state of being nebulous or cloudy; cloudiness; haziness; the essential character of a nebula.

All the material ingredients of the earth existed in this diffuse nebulosity, either in the state of vapour, or in some state of still greater expansion. Whewell.

2. The faint misty appearance surrounding certain stars; an ill-defined nebula without local condensation; also, a nebula in general.

Various connected nebulosities stretching in marvellous ramifications along the heavens.
J. N. Lockyer, Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 590.

A nebulosity of the milky kind, like that wonderful, inexplicable phenomenon about θ Orionis.
A. M. Clerke, Astron. in 19th Cent., p. 29.

nebulous (neb'ū-lus), a. [= F. nébuleux = Sp. Pg. It. nebuloso, < L. nebulosus, cloudy, misty, foggy, < nebula, mist, cloud: see nebula, nebule.] 1. Cloudy; hazy: used literally or figuratively.

Epicurus is impatient of the nebulous regions which only exist, according to him, for highly sensitive and sentimental souls. W. Wallace, Epicureanism, p. 146.

2. In astron., pertaining to a nebula; having the appearance of a nebula; nebular.—Nebulous star. See nebula.

nebulousness (neb'ū-lus-nes), n. The state or quality of being nebulous; cloudiness.

nebuly (neb'ū-li), a. [< heraldic F. nebulé: see nebule.] Same as nebulé.—Nebuly molding. See molding.

nece†, n. A Middle English form of niece.

necesst, v. t. [ME. necessen, < ML. necessare, make necessary, compel, < L. necesse, necessary: see necessary.] To make necessary; compel.

Ne foreyne causes necesseden the nevere to compoune werk of floteryngе matere. Chaucer, Boëthius, iii. meter 9.

necessar†, a. [< OF. necessaire, < L. necessarius, necessary: see necessary.] Necessary. [Scotch.]

The gryt adois necessar. Aberd. Reg. MS. (Jamieson.) necessarian (nes-e-sā′ri-an), a. and n. [< L. necessarius, inevitable, necessary, + -an.] I. a. Relating to necessarianism; necessitarian.

II. n. One who accepts the doctrine of necessarianism; a necessitarian.

The only question in dispute between the advocates of philosophical liberty and the necessarians is this: "whether volition can take place independently of motive."
W. Belsham, Philos. of the Mind, ix. § 1.

Necessarians will say that even this [voluntary effort for a good end] is ultimately the effect of causes extraneous to the man's self. H. Sidgwick, Methods of Ethics, p. 258.

necessarianism (nes-e-sā′ri-an-izm), n. [< necessarian + -ism.] The doctrine that the action of the will is a necessary effect of antecedent causes; the theory that the will is subject to the general mechanical law of cause and effect. Also necessitarianism, and rarely necessism.

Let us suppose, further, that we do not know more of cause and effect than a certain definite order of succession among facts, and that we have a knowledge of the necessity of that succession — and hence of necessary laws — and I, for my part, do not see what escape there is from utter materialism and necessarianism. Huxley.

necessarily (nes′e-sā-ri-li), adv. In a necessary manner; by necessity; so that it cannot be otherwise; inevitably.

The Author has shown us that design in all the Works of Nature which necessarily leads us to the Knowledge of its First Cause. Addison, Spectator, No. 339.

Powerful temperaments are necessarily intense.
Froude, Sketches, p. 183.

necessariness (nes′e-sā-ri-nes), n. The state of being necessary. Johnson.

necessary (nes′e-sā-ri), a. and n. [Formerly also necessar; < ME. necessarye, necessarie, < OF. necessaire, F. nécessaire = Pr. necessari = Sp. necesario = Pg. It. necessario, < L. necessarius, unavoidable, inevitable, indispensable, requisite (as a noun, necessarius, m., necessaria, f., a relative, kinsman, friend, client; necessaria, neut. pl., necessaries of life; ML. necessarium, neut., necessaria, f., a privy), < necesse, adj., unavoidable, inevitable, indispensable, neut. adj. with esse and habere, prop. adv., also in OL. necessum, prob. orig. ne cessum or non cessum, < ne, non, not, + cessus, pp. of cedere, yield: see cede.] I. a. 1. Such as must be; that cannot be otherwise. (a) As an inference, evidently of such a form that every like inference from true premises will always yield a true conclusion, in every state of facts. In philosophy it is requisite to distinguish an irresistible inference, the force of which may be blindly felt, from a necessary one, which is seen to belong to a possible class of inferences, all true. (b) As a proposition or fact, true or taking place not merely in the actual state of things, but in every possible state of things (within some meaning of the word possible). A necessary proposition should not be confounded with an absolutely certain one, far less with one we are irresistibly compelled to believe. (c) As a thing or being, existing in every possible state of things; having existence involved in its essence. Thus, God is said by Anselm, Descartes, and others to be a necessary being.

Death, a necessary end,
Will come when it will come.
Shak., J. C., ii. 2. 36.

In asserting that the human mind possesses in its own ideas an element of necessary and universal truth, not derived from experience, Kant had been anticipated by Price, by Cudworth, and even by Plato.
Whewell, Philos. of Discovery.

Given such a cause — that is, accept the idea of God — and worship follows as a rational, nay, a necessary consequence. Mivart, Nature and Thought, p. 230.

The only way that any thing that is to come to pass hereafter is or can be necessary is by a connection with something that is necessary in its own nature, or something that already is or has been: so that, the one being supposed, the other certainly follows. Edwards, On the Will, i. 3.

2. Such that it cannot be disregarded or omitted; indispensable; requisite; essential; needful; required: as, air is necessary to support animal life; food is necessary to nourish the body.

Aduertisementes and counsailles verie necessarye for all noble men and counsaillors.
Booke of Precedence (E. E. T. S., extra ser.), i. 74.

A nimble hand is necessary for a cut-purse.
Shak., W. T., iv. 3. 686.

A country replenished with all manner of commodities necessary for mans life. Coryat, Crudities, I. 108.

Neither dares any man complain of injustice, . . . tho his cause be never so just: and therefore patience is in this Country as necessary for poor people as in any part of the World. Dampier, Voyages, II. i. 78.

The enemies of the court might think it fair, or even absolutely necessary, to encounter bribery with bribery.
Macaulay, Hallam's Const. Hist.

3. In law: (a) Requisite for reasonable convenience and facility or completeness in accomplishing the purpose intended: as, the land necessary for building a railroad. (b) Naturally and inseparably connected in the ordinary course: as, necessary consequences. Thus, the necessary consequences of a trespass, such as depreciation in value of a thing injured, or the suffering of a person injured, are general damages, and need not be pleaded; but loss of profits or medical expenses are not necessary consequences in the legal sense, and must be specially alleged.

4. Acting from compulsion or the absolute determination of causes: opposed to free. See free.

Agents that have no thought, no volition at all, are in every thing necessary agents.
Locke, Human Understanding, II. xxi. 13.

Necessary being, one whose non-existence is impossible; God. — Necessary cause. See cause, 1. — Necessary condition, ens, inference, mark, etc. See the nouns. — Necessary proposition, a proposition which asserts a fact to be necessary; also, one which we cannot help believing. — Necessary rules of thought, those without which no use of the understanding would be possible. — Necessary sign, one which affords a certain indication of the thing represented. — Necessary to an end, preceding or accompanying the end in every possible state of things; requisite as a means to the end. = Syn. 2. Necessary, Essential, Requisite, Needful. The following remarks refer to the application of the words to ordinary practical affairs, not to philosophy. Necessary is so general a word that it covers all the others, and has the additional sense, which they do not have, of inevitable. Essential is an absolute word, noting that which is a part of the chief end of the action, or of every mode of bringing that end about. Requisite is less strong than essential, and needful is less strong still; yet each is strong and emphatic, applying to that which is imperatively needed. Needful generally applies to concrete, and often to temporary, things: as, knowledge of the countries visited is requisite, and even essential, to enjoyment of travel, but money is needful in order to be able to travel at all. Needful is often applied to that which must be supplied to produce or effect a perfect state or action.

II. n.; pl. necessaries (-riz). 1. Anything that is necessary or indispensable; that which cannot be disregarded or omitted: as, the necessaries of life.

And thei alle han alle necessaries, and alle that hem nedethe, of the Emperoures Court.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 239.

Fear of poverty makes Irus allow himself only plain necessaries. Steele, Spectator, No. 114.

2. A privy; a water-closet. — Necessaries of a ship, articles which should form part of the ordinary and reasonable outfit for the business in which the vessel is engaged; whatever a prudent owner would order if present.

necessism (nē-ses′izm), n. [< L. necesse, necessary, + -ism.] Same as necessarianism. Contemporary Rev. [Rare.]

necessitarian (nē-ses-i-tā′ri-an), a. and n. [< necessity + -arian.] I. a. Of or pertaining to necessity or to necessitarianism: opposed to libertarian.

II. n. One who maintains the doctrine of philosophical necessity, in opposition to that of the freedom of the will: opposed to libertarian.

The Arminian has entangled the Calvinist, the Calvinist has entangled the Arminian, in a labyrinth of contradictions. The advocate of free-will appeals to conscience and instinct — to an a priori sense of what ought in equity to be. The necessitarian falls back upon the experienced reality of facts. Froude, Calvinism.

necessitarianism (nē-ses-i-tā′ri-an-izm), n. [< necessitarian + -ism.] Same as necessarianism.

necessitate (nē-ses′i-tāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. necessitated, ppr. necessitating. [< ML. necessitatus, pp. of necessitare (> It. necessitare = Sp. necesitar = Pg. necessitar = F. nécessiter), make necessary, < L. necessita(t-)s, necessity: see necessity, and cf. necessite and necess, v. For the form, cf. felicitate.] 1. To make necessary or indispensable; render unavoidable; cause to be a necessary consequence.

The politician never thought that he might fall dangerously sick, and that sickness necessitate his removal from the court. South.

Right, as we can think it, necessitates the thought of not right, or wrong, for its correlative.
H. Spencer, Data of Ethics, § 99.

2. To force irresistibly; compel; oblige; impel by necessity.

No man is necessitated to more ill, yet no mans ill is lesse excus'd. Ep. Earle, Micro-cosmographie, A Poore Man.

3†. To reduce to a state of need, threaten or oppress by necessity or need, or the prospect of need.

It was a position of the Stoics that he was not poor who wanted, but he who was necessitated.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 379.

We were now greatly necessitated for food, and wanted some fresh orders from the King's mouth for our future subsistence. R. Knox (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 380).

= Syn. 2. To constrain, drive.

necessitation (nē-ses-i-tā′shon), n. [< necessitate + -ion.] The act of necessitating or making necessary; the state of being made necessary; compulsion. Hobbes, Liberty and Necessity.

necessitet (nē-ses′it), v. t. [< OF. necessiter, necessitate: see necessitate.] To necessitate; compel.

Who, were he now necessited to beg,
Would ask an alms like Conde Olivares.
B. Jonson, New Inn, iv. 3.

necessitied (nē-ses′i-tid), a. [< necessity + *-ed*2.] In a state of want; necessitous; controlled by necessity.

I bade her, if her fortunes ever stood Necessitied to help, that by this token
I would relieve her. Shak., All's Well, v. 3. 85.

necessitous (nē-ses′i-tus), a. [< F. nécessiteux = Pg. It. necessitoso; as necessity + -ous.] Pressed by poverty; unable to procure what is necessary for one's station; needy. Applied — (a) To persons.

That we may suffer together with our calamitous and necessitous brethren. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 199.

They who were envied found no satisfaction in what they were envied for, being poor and necessitous.
Clarendon, Great Rebellion.

We gentlemen of small fortunes are extremely necessitous in this particular. Steele, Tatler, No. 208.

(b) To circumstances.

He was not in necessitous circumstances, his salary being a liberal one. F. B. Winslow, Obscure Mental Diseases.

= Syn. Needy, Necessitous (see needy); penniless, destitute, pinched, poor.

necessitously (nē-ses′i-tus-li), adv. In a necessitous manner: as, to be necessitously circumstanced.

necessitousness (nē-ses′i-tus-nes), n. The state of being necessitous; the want of what is necessary for one's station; need.

Where there is want and necessitousness, there will be quarrelling. T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

necessitudet (nē-ses′i-tūd), n. [< L. necessitudo, inevitableness, need, distress, also intimate relationship or friendship, < necesse, inevitable, necessary: see necessary, necessity.] A sacred obligation of family or friendship; a tie or bond of relationship or intimacy.

Between kings and their people, parents and their children, there is so great a necessitude, propriety, and intercourse of nature. Jer. Taylor.

The mutual necessitudes of human nature necessarily maintain mutual offices, and correspondence between them. Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

necessity (nē-ses′i-ti), n.; pl. necessities (-tiz). [Early mod. E. also necessitie, necessitee; < ME. necessite, necessitee, nessesite, < OF. necessite, F. nécessité = Sp. necesidad = Pg. necessidade = It. necessità, < L. necessita(t-)s, unavoidableness, compulsion, exigency, necessity, < necesse, unavoidable, inevitable: see necessary.] 1. The condition or quality of being necessary or needful; the mode of being or of truth of that which is necessary; the impossibility of the contrary; the absolute character of a determination or limitation which is not merely without exception, but which would be so in any possible state of things; absolute constraint.

But who can turne the stream of destinee,
Or breake the chayne of strong necessitee,
Which fast is tyde to Joves eternall seat?
Spenser, F. Q., I. v. 25.

He must die, as others;
And I must lose him; 'tis necessity.
Fletcher, Valentinian, iii. 3.

That strength joyn'd with religion, abus'd and pretended to ambitious ends, must of necessity breed the heaviest and most quelling tyranny. Milton, Church-Government, ii. 3.

2. As applied to the human will, the opposite of liberty. (a) Compulsion, physical or, more generally, moral; a stress upon the mind causing a person to do something unwillingly or with extreme reluctance: as, to make a virtue of necessity.

Thenne of necessite
They them withdrewe, and towarde the Citee
They toke the way. Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 2552.

Then take his Head; Yet never say that I Issu'd this Warrant, but Necessity.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, iii. 194.

Necessity . . . was the argument of tyrants, it was the creed of slaves. Pitt, On the India Bill, Nov. 18, 1783.

And the great powers we serve themselves may be Slaves of a tyrannous Necessity. M. Arnold, Mycerinus.

(b) In philos., the inevitable determination of the human will by a motive or other cause. This is only a special use of the word in the free-will dispute. In philosophy generally, by the necessity of a cognition is properly meant a cognized necessity, or universality in reference to possible states of things: although some writers use the word to denote a constraint upon the power of thought.

Will and reason (reason also is choice),
Useless and vain, of freedom both despoil'd,
Made passive both, had served necessity,
Not me. Milton, P. L., iii. 110.

Wherever thought is wholly wanting, or the power to act or forbear according to the direction of thought, there necessity takes place.
Locke, Human Understanding, II. xxi. 13.

3. A condition requisite for the attainment of any purpose; also, a necessary of life, without which life, or at least the life appropriate to one's station, would be impossible.

These should be hours for necessities,
Not for delights. Shak., Hen. VIII., v. 1. 2.

When war is called a necessity, it is meant, of course, that its object cannot be attained in any other way.
Sumner, Orations, I. 48.

4. Want of the means of living; lack of the means to live as becomes one's station or is one's habit.

Off me shall ye have both ayde and comfort
In all your nedes of necessite.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 3818.

I abjure all roofs, and choose
To wage against the enmity o' the air;
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl—
Necessity's sharp pinch! Shak., Lear, iii. 4. 214.

5. Extreme need, in general.

See what strange arts necessitie findes out.
Marlowe and Nashe, Dido, l. 142.

Signior Necessity, that hath no law,
Scarce ever read his Litleton.
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 46.

Necessity is the mother of invention.
R. Franck, Northern Memoirs (written in 1658, [printed in 1694). (Bartlett.)

6†. Business; something needful to be done.

They that to you haue nessesite
Be gracious euer through your gentilnes.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 41.

Whan he hadde hym a while conveied, he toke leve, and yede thourgh the courte in his othir necessitees.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), l. 64.

7. Bad illicit spirit. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.] —Doctrine of necessity, the doctrine that all human actions are absolutely determined by motives, so that the will is not free.—Internal necessity. See internal.—Legal necessity, constraint by the law; also, that which one is constrained by the law to do, irrespective of consent. The word necessity is also used in the law to denote that degree of moral necessity which is recognized as justifying or excusing an act otherwise unlawful, such as the killing of an assailant in self-defense; also, particularly in the phrase public necessity, to designate the requirement of what is needed for reasonable convenience or facility and completeness in accomplishing a public purpose.—Logical necessity, truth, not merely in the existing state of things, but in every state of things in which the proposition to which the necessity belongs should preserve its signification; the truth of that to know which it is sufficient to know the meanings of the words in which it is expressed.—Money of necessity, coins (generally of unusual shape, and rudely fabricated) issued during a siege (see siege-piece), or in times of necessity, when there is an insufficient supply of gold and silver and the operations of the ordinary mints are suspended.—Moral necessity. See def. 2, above.—Natural necessity. See natural.—Physical necessity, the necessity which arises from the laws of the material universe. This necessity is conditional, not absolute.—Works of necessity, in the Sunday laws, any labors which are necessary to be done on Sunday for life, health, comfort, general welfare, and reasonable convenience for enjoying the leisure and the privileges of the day, such as the running of horse-cars, ferries, and, within reasonable limits, railroad-trains, and such labors as are requisite for maintaining in their necessary continuity processes of manufacture incidental to civilization, such as keeping up the fires of a blast-furnace.=Syn. Necessity, Need. Necessity is more urgent than need: a merchant may have need of more money in order to the most successful managing of his business; he may have a necessity for more cash in hand to avoid going into bankruptcy.

neck (nek), n. [< ME. necke, nekke, nicke, nakke, < AS. hnecca, the neck, the back of the neck, nape of the neck, = OFries. hnekka, nekke = MD. neck, nick, nack, D. nek = MLG. nacke, LG. nakke = OHG. hnac (hnacch-), hnach-, nac, MHG. nacke-knac, G. nacken = Icel. hnakki = Sw. nacke = Dan. nakke, nape of the neck, back of the head. Cf. nuke, nape of the neck.] 1. That part of an animal's body which is between the head and the trunk and connects these parts. In every vertebrate the neck corresponds in extent to the cervical vertebræ, when such are distinguishable. It is usually narrower or more slender than the parts between which it extends. See cuts under muscle.

He hathe abouten his Nekke 300 Perles oryent, gode and grete, and knotted, as Pater Nostres here of Amber.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 197.

Or necklace for a neck to which the swan's
Is tawnier than her cygnet's.
Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

2. Figuratively, life, from the breaking or severing of the neck in legal executions: as, to risk one's neck; to save one's neck.—3. In entom.: (a) The membrane connecting the hard parts of an insect's head with those of the thorax, and visible only when the head is forcibly drawn out. (b) The posterior part of the head when this is suddenly narrowed behind the eyes. (c) A slender anterior prolongation of the prothorax found in certain Diptera and Hymenoptera.—4. In anat., a constricted part, or constriction of a part, like or likened to a neck: as, the neck of the thigh-bone; the neck of the bladder; the neck of the uterus. See cut under femur.—5. The flesh of the neck and adjoining parts: as, a neck of mutton.—6. That part of a thing which corresponds to or resembles the neck of an animal.

Some of them upon the necke of their launce haue an hooke, wherewithall they attempt to pull men out of their saddles. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 62.

(a) That part of a garment which covers the neck: as, the high neck of a gown. (b) A long narrow strip of land connecting two larger tracts; an isthmus.

They followed vs to the necke of Land, which we thought had beene severed from the mayne.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 107.

(c) The slender upper part of any vessel which has a larger rounded body: as, the neck of a bottle, retort, etc.

Take the noblest and the strengest brennynge watir that ge may haue distillid out of pure myȝty wiyn, and putte it into a glas clepid amphora, with a long necke.
Book of Quinte Essence (ed. Furnivall), p. 5.

(d) In stringed musical instruments of the viol and lute families, the long slender part extending upward from the body, culminating in the head where the tension is regulated, and bearing in front the finger-board over which the strings (or such of them as are to be stopped) are stretched. (e) The part of an axle that passes through the hub of the wheel; also, a diminished part of any shaft resting in a bearing. (f) The round shank connecting the blade and the socket of a bayonet. (g) The constricted part joining the knob to the breech of a gun. (h) The contracted part of a furnace over the bridge, between the stack and the heating- or melting-chamber. (i) In printing, the slope between the face and the shoulder of a type. Sometimes called beard. (j) In bot.: (1) In mosses, the collum or tapering base of the capsule. (2) In histology, the rim or wall of the archegonium which projects above the prothallium. It rests upon the venter, and is ordinarily composed of four longitudinal rows of cells. (k) The filled-up pipe or channel through which volcanic material has found its way upward. In modern volcanic areas the vent through which the lava, cinders, or ashes are ejected and reach the surface is generally concealed from view by the accumulated material which has been thrown out. In eruptive regions belonging to the older geological systems denudation has occasionally removed the overlying debris, so that the connection of the volcanic orifice with the more deep-seated regions can be seen and examined. This is particularly the case in the Carboniferous and Permian volcanic areas of Scotland. When the neck is harder than the country rocks, it stands up in relief, forming a butte, as often happens in Arizona. (l) The crook of the head of a golf-club where it joins the shaft.

7. In the clamp process of brickmaking, one of a series of walls of unburned bricks which together constitute a clamp. The walls are built three bricks thick, about sixty long, and from twenty-four to thirty high, and incline inward against a central upright wall. The sides and top are cased with burned bricks.

8. A small bundle of the best ears of a wheat-harvest, used in the ceremony of "crying the neck." [Prov. Eng.]—9. As a geographical designation, a corner or triangular district: as, Penn's Neck. [Local, U. S. (New York, New Jersey), and South African.]—A stiff neck, in Scrip., persistence in disobedience; obduracy. Jer. xvii. 23.—Derbyshire neck, bronchocele or goiter: frequent in the hilly parts of Derbyshire, England.—Nape of the neck. See *nape*1.—Neck and crop. See crop.—Neck and heels. Same as neck and crop.

The liberty of the subject is brought in neck and heels, as they say, that the Earl might be popular.
Roger North, Examen, p. 72.

Neck and neck, at an equal pace; stride for stride; exactly even, or side by side: used in racing, and hence applied to competition of any kind.—Neck canal-cell, in bot., the same, or nearly the same, as neck-cell.—Neck of a column or of a capital, in arch., the space between the top of the shaft proper and the projecting part of the capital, if any separation is indicated. Thus, in the Doric column, the continuation, whether plain, ornamented, or recessed, of the shaft above the incision or hypotrachelium as far as the annulets of the echinus, is the neck. Sometimes called trachelium. See necking, and cut under column.—Neck of a gun, the part between the muzzle moldings and the cornice-ring.—Neck of an embrasure, in fort., the narrowest part of the embrasure, within the wider outer part, called the mouth.—Neck of a rib, the part between the head (or capitulum) and the shoulder (or tuberculum).—Neck of the bladder, the part of the bladder adjoining the urethral outlet.—Neck of the calcaneum, the slightly constricted part in front of the tuberosity.—Neck of the femur, the constricted part of the femur between the head and the top of the shaft.—Neck of the foot, the instep. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—Neck of the humerus. (a) In anat., the slight constriction separating the head from the shaft of the bone; the circumference of the articular surface, affording attachment to the capsular ligament. (b) In surg., a weak point in the shaft of the bone, a little below the tuberosities: so called from the frequency of fracture at this point.—Neck of the uterus, the lower, narrower part of the uterus, projecting into the vagina; the cervix uteri.—Neck or nothing, at every risk; desperately: as, I'll take the chances, neck or nothing.—On, or in the neck of, immediately after; closely following; on the heels of.

He deposed the king;
Soon after that, deprived him of his life;
And, in the neck of that, task'd the whole state.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iv. 3. 92.

Upon the Neck of this began the Quarrel in Holburn between the Gentlemen of the Inns of Chancery and some Citizens. Baker, Chronicles, p. 193.

The devil on his neck. See devil.—To break the neck, to put one of the bones of the neck out of joint; dislocate a cervical vertebra. In legal execution by hanging the aim is to cause speedy or instantaneous death by dislocating the atlas or first bone from the axis or second bone, and at the same time injuring the spinal cord. See check-ligaments, under ligament.—To break the neck of. See break.—To give the neck†, to give the finishing stroke.

Whom when his foe presumes to checke,
His seruants stand to give the necke.
Breton, Daffodils and Primroses, p. 5. (Davies.)

To harden the neck, to grow obstinate or obdurate; be more and more perverse and rebellious.

Our fathers dealt proudly, and hardened their necks, and hearkened not to thy commandments. Neh. ix. 16.

To tie neck and heels, to confine by forcibly bringing the chin and knees of a person close together.—To tread on the neck of, figuratively, to subdue utterly; oppress.—To win by a neck, in racing, to be first by the length of a head and a neck; make a close finish.

neck (nek), v. t. [= MD. necken, D. nekken, kill; from the noun: see neck, n.] 1. To strangle or behead.

If he should neglect
One hour, the next shall see him in my grasp,
And the next after that shall see him neck'd.
Keats, Cap and Bells, st. 22.

Necrophorus (nek-rof'ō-rus), n. [NL.: see necrophorous.] The typical genus of Necrophoridæ, having ten-jointed antennæ. They are mostly large dark-colored beetles, sometimes ornamented with reddish or yellowish bands; they usually exhale a musky odor. They have long been noted for burying the bodies of small dead animals, in which they lay their eggs. The larvæ resemble those of Silpha, but are longer and attenuate at both ends, with a short labrum. The genus is widespread, with numerous species. See cut under burying-beetle.

necropolis (nek-rop'ō-lis), n. [NL., < Gr. νεκρόπολις, a cemetery, < νεκρός, a dead body, + πόλις, a city.] A cemetery; specifically, one of the cemeteries of ancient peoples. Such burying-grounds, in the neighborhood of some sites of ancient cities, are very extensive and abound in valuable remains. From the ancient cemeteries a large part of modern archæological knowledge has been derived, owing to the practice among the peoples of antiquity of depositing in their tombs objects of art and of daily use, and very generally of ornamenting them with characteristic monuments of architecture, sculpture, painting, or epigraphy. The name is sometimes given to modern cemeteries in or near towns.

necropsy (nek'rop-si), n. [< Gr. νεκρός, a dead body, + ὄψις, sight: see optic.] Same as necroscopy.

necrotypic (nek-rō-tip'ik), a. [< necrotype + -ic.] Having the character of a necrotype.

Nectandra (nek-tan'drä), n. [NL. (Rolander, 1776), irreg. < Gr. νέκταρ, nectar, + ἀνήρ (ἀνδρ-), male (mod. bot. stamen).] A genus of dicotyledonous trees of the family Lauraceæ and the tribe Cinnamomeæ, known by the anthers with four cells in a curving line. There are about 90 species, found from Brazil to Mexico and the West Indies. They bear alternate rigid feather-veined leaves, loosely panicled flowers, and globose or oblong berries. The genus furnishes important timber-trees and some oils and aromatic products.

nectar (nek'tär), n. [= F. nectar = Sp. néctar = Pg. nectar = It. nettare, < L. nectar = Gr. νέκταρ, the drink of the gods (see def. 1); usually explained, without probability, as < νε- for νη-, not (see ne), + √ κτα in κτείνειν, kill (cf. ἀμβροσία, ambrosia, the food of the gods, ult. < ἀ- priv. + √ μορ, die).] 1. In classical myth., the drink or wine of the Olympian gods, poured out for them by Hebe and Ganymede, the cupbearers of Zeus. It was reputed to possess wondrous life-giving properties, to impart a divine bloom, beauty, and vigor to him so fortunate as to obtain it, and to preserve all that it touched from decay and corruption. See ambrosia.

He esteems the nectar of the goddes,
Homers Nepenthe, to come short by oddes
Of this delicious iuice.
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 62.

The sweet peace-making draught went round, and lame Ephaistus fild Nectar to all the other gods. Chapman, Iliad, i. 578.

2. Hence, any delicious and salubrious drink. Specifically—(a) A drink compounded of wine, honey, and spices. Also called piment. (b) A sweet wine produced in the Greek islands: a name given indeterminately to wines of similar quality.

3. In bot., the saccharine excretion of floral and of certain extra-floral glands; the honey of a flower. It serves to attract the insects or birds which pollinate the flower.

nectar-bird (nek'tär-bėrd), n. A honey-sucker or sunbird of the family Nectariniidæ.

nectareal (nek-tā'rē-al), a. [< nectare-ous + -al.] 1. Pertaining to nectar; nectarean.—2. Same as nectarial.

nectarean (nek-tā'rē-an), a. [< L. nectareus, of nectar (see nectareous), + -an.] Pertaining to nectar; resembling nectar; very sweet and pleasant.

Choicest nectarean juice crown'd largest bowls
And overlook'd the brim, alluring sight,
Of fragrant scent, attractive, taste divine.
Gay, Wine.

nectared (nek'tärd), a. [< nectar + *-ed*2.] Imbued with nectar; mingled with nectar; abounding in nectar.

And a perpetual feast of nectar'd sweets,
Where no crude surfeit reigns.
Milton, Comus, l. 479.

nectarell†, a. [In the quoted passage for nectarall*, < nectar + -al.] Like nectar; nectareous.

For your breaths too, let them smell
Ambrosia-like, or nectarell.
Herrick, To his Mistresses.

nectareous (nek-tā'rē-us), a. [= Sp. nectáreo = Pg. nectareo = It. nettareo, < L. nectareus, < Gr. νεκτάρεος, nectareous, < νέκταρ, nectar: see nectar.] Same as nectarean.

Annual for me the grape, the rose, renew
The juice nectareous and the balmy dew.
Pope, Essay on Man, i. 136.

nectareously (nek-tā'rē-us-li), adv. In a nectareous manner.

nectareousness (nek-tā'rē-us-nes), n. The quality of being nectareous.

nectar-gland (nek'tär-gland), n. A gland secreting nectar or honey.

nectarial (nek-tā'ri-al), a. [< nectary + -al.] Of or pertaining to the nectary of a plant.

nectaried (nek'ta-rid), a. [< nectary + *-ed*2.] Provided with nectaries or honey-producing organs: said of flowers or plants.

nectarilyma (nek'ta-ri-lī'mä), n. [NL., < nectarium, nectary, + Gr. λῦμα, what is washed or wiped off, < λούειν, L. luere, wash: see *lute*2, *lave*2.] In bot., a collection of long hairs found on the inner surface of some flowers, as Menyanthes.

★nectarine (nek'ta-rin), a. and n. [< OF. nectarin = Sp. nectarino, < NL. nectarinus*, < L. nectar, nectar: see nectar.] I. a. Sweet or delicious as nectar.

To their supper fruits they fell—Nectarine fruits, which the compliant boughs Yielded them. Milton, P. L., iv. 332.

II. n. A variety of the common peach, from which its fruit differs only in having a rind devoid of down and a firmer pulp. Both fruits are sometimes found growing on the same tree. See peach.

Nectarinia (nek-ta-rin'i-ä), n. [NL., < nectarinus*, of nectar: see nectarine.] The representative genus of the family Nectariniidæ, in which the middle tail-feathers of the male are long-exserted. The species are African. N. famosa is an example. Cinnyris is a synonym.

Nectariniidæ (nek-ta-ri-ni'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Nectarinia + -idæ.] A family of oscine passerine birds, represented by the genus Nectarinia; the nectar-birds, honey-suckers, or sunbirds. They have an acute, often very long and arcuate bill, no vibrissæ, and a naked nasal scale. The tongue is long, protrusile, and at the end bifid in such a way as to form a kind of tube or haustellum for sucking the juices of flowers. There are 10 primaries, 12 rectrices, and the tarsi are scutellate. The plumage as a rule is gorgeous or exquisite in its iridescence or sheen, greens and yellows being the principal colors. These beautiful birds are confined to the Ethiopian, Indian, and Australian regions. They are non-migratory, and generally lay two white eggs in a woven pensile nest. The nectar-birds represent or replace humming-birds in the Old World, though the two families belong to different orders. Nearer New World relatives are the Cœrebidæ or guitguits. The Nectariniidæ are sometimes divided into Nectariniinæ, Promeropinæ, and Arachnotherinæ. Also Cinnyridæ, Nectariniadæ, Nectarinidæ.

nectarize (nek'tär-īz), v. t.; pret. and pp. nectarized, ppr. nectarizing. [< nectar + -ize.] To mingle with nectar; sweeten. Cockeram.

nectarotheca (nek″ta-rō-thē′kä), n.; pl. nectarothecæ (-sē). [NL., ⟨ Gr. νέκταρ, nectar, + θήκη, a receptacle: see theca.] In bot., a honey- or nectar-case; a nectary; specifically, the spur of certain flowers.

nectarous (nek′ta-rus), a. [⟨ nectar + -ous.] Resembling nectar; nectarean.

> From the gash
> A stream of nectarous humour issuing flow'd > Sanguine. Milton, P. L., vi. 332.

nectary (nek′ta-ri), n.; pl. nectaries (-riz). [= F. nectaire = Sp. Pg. nectario = It. nettario, ⟨ NL. nectarium (Linnæus), a nectary (cf. Gr. νεκτάριον, a certain plant, otherwise ἐλένιον: see Helenium), ⟨ Gr. νέκταρ, nectar: see nectar.] 1. In bot., a structure, usually a flower part, that excretes a saccharine fluid. Sometimes it is a prolongation of the calyx, as in Tropæolum, or of the corolla, as in Viola, Aquilegia, and Aconitum; or it may belong to some other organ. The curious fringed scales of Parnassia, those on the claws of the petals of Ranunculus, and the pits on those of the lilies and fritillaries are also nectaries, as are the crown of the narcissus, the processes of the passion-flower, and the inner minute scales of grasses. The name nectary should be restricted to those parts which actually secrete honey, care being taken not to confound these parts with the different kinds of disk.

Nectary of (a) Fritillaria Meleagris (foveolate), (b) Linaria Linaria (calcariform), (c) Campe Barbarea (glandular), (d) Parnassia palustris, (e) Staphylea trifolia (disk-shaped), (f) Aquilegia Canadensis (calcariform), (g) Lilium superbum (furrow-like).

2. In entom., one of two little tubular organs on the abdomen of an aphis or plant-louse, from which a sweet fluid like honey is exuded. Also called honey-tube, siphuncle, or cornicle.

nectocalycine (nek-tō-kal′i-sin), a. [⟨ nectocalyx (-calyc-) + -ine[1].] Having the character of a nectocalyx; of or pertaining to a swimming-bell.

nectocalyx (nek′tō-kā-liks), n.; pl. nectocalyxes, nectocalices (-kā′lik-sez, -kal′i-sēz). [NL., ⟨ Gr. νηκτός, swimming (⟨ νήχειν, swim: see natant), + κάλυξ, a cup, the envelop of a flower, etc: see calyx.] A swimming-bell; the bell-shaped or discoidal natatory organ with which many hydrozoans are provided, and by means of which the hydrosome is propelled through the water. The nectocalyx alternately contracts and relaxes, giving rise to a gently undulatory movement. It consists of a cup or bell attached to the hydrosome by its base, and furnished with appropriate muscles for the execution of its movements. A nectocalyx is morphologically an undeveloped asexual medusiform person, without a manubrium, tentacles, or sense-organs. See cuts under Diphyidæ, medusiform, Hydrozoa, and Willsia.

nectocyst (nek′tō-sist), n. [⟨ Gr. νηκτός, swimming, + κύστις, a bag.] Same as nectosac.

Nectopoda (nek-top′ō-dä), n. pl. [NL., ⟨ Gr. νηκτός, swimming, + πούς (ποδ-) = E. foot.] In conch., in De Blainville's classification (1825), one of two families (the other being Heteropoda) into which his order Nucleobranchiata was divided. It was composed of the genera Pterotrachea (or Firola) and Carinaria, corresponding to the family Firolidæ in a broad sense, or to the modern families Pterotracheidæ and Carinariidæ, now referred to an order Heteropoda. See Heteropoda.

nectosac (nek′tō-sak), n. [⟨ Gr. νηκτός, swimming, + σάκκος, a bag or sack: see sac.] The interior or cavity of a swimming-bell or nectocalyx. Also nectocyst.

nectosome (nek′tō-sōm), n. [⟨ Gr. νηκτός, swimming, + σῶμα, body.] The upper or proximal portion of a siphonophorous stock modified for swimming: contradistinguished from the siphosome, which is the nutrient portion.

nectostem (nek′tō-stem), n. [⟨ Gr. νηκτός, swimming, + E. stem.] In Hydrozoa, the axis of a series of nectocalyxes.

> Just below the float on the nectostem there is a small cluster of minute buds in which can be found nectocalices of all sizes [in Agalma]. Stand. Nat. Hist., I. 99.

nectozoöid (nek-tō-zō′oid), n. [⟨ Gr. νηκτός, swimming, + E. zoöid.] A nectocalyx considered as a zoöid.

Necturus (nek-tū′rus), n. [NL., ⟨ Gr. νηκτός, swimming, + οὐρά, tail.] A genus of amphibians: same as Menobranchus.

neddet. A Middle English form of nadde for ne hadde, had not.

nedder[1]†, n. A form of nadder, usually adder. See nadder, adder[1].

nedder[2], a. A dialectal form of nether[1].

neddy (ned′i), n.; pl. neddies (-iz). [A particular use of Neddy, dim. of Ned, a familiar form of Ed, a common dim. abbreviation of Edward. Cf. equiv. cuddy[1].] An ass; a donkey.

nedet, n., v., and adv. A Middle English form of need.

nedest, adv. A Middle English form of needs.

nedlet, n. A Middle English form of needle.

nee, v. i. An obsolete or dialectal form of neigh[1].

née (nā), a. [F. (⟨ L. nata), fem. of né (⟨ L. natus), pp. of naître, ⟨ L. nasci, be born: see nascent, natal.] Born: sometimes placed before a married woman's maiden name to indicate the family to which she belongs: as, Madame de Staël, née Necker (that is, Madame de Staël, born Necker, or whose family name was Necker).

need (nēd), n. [⟨ ME. need, nede, sometimes neethe, ⟨ AS. nȳd, nīd, nēd, nīéd, by umlaut from neád, neód, necessity, need, compulsion, force, urgent requirement, want, etc., = OS. nōd = OFries. nāth, nēd = D. nood = MLG. nōt = OHG. > Need and oppression starveth in thine eyes, > Contempt and beggary hangs upon thy back.
> Shak., R. and J., v. 1. 70.

3. Time of want; exigency; emergency: as, "a friend in need is a friend indeed."

> Thow shalt finde Fortune the faille at thi moste nede.
> Piers Plowman (B), xi. 28.
>
> For in many a nede he hadde hym socoured and holpen.
> Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 678.
>
> Deserted at his utmost need
> By those his former bounty fed.
> Dryden, Alexander's Feast, l. 80.

4†. That which is needful; something necessary to be done.

> Hoom to Surrye ben they went ful fayn,
> And doon her nedes as they han doon yore.
> Chaucer, Man of Law's Tale, l. 76.

5†. A perilous extremity. Chaucer.—At need, at one's need, at a time of greatest requirement; in a great exigency; in a strait or emergency.

> Three fair queens,
> Who stood in silence near his throne, the friends
> Of Arthur, gazing on him, tall, with bright
> Sweet faces, who will help him at his need.
> Tennyson, Coming of Arthur.

=Syn. 1. Necessity, Need (see necessity and exigency), emergency, strait, extremity, distress.—2. Want, Indigence, etc. See poverty.

need (nēd), v. [⟨ ME. neden, ⟨ AS. nȳdan, nīdan, nēden, also neádian, compel, force, ⟨ nȳd, nīd, nēd, neád, need, compulsion: see need, n.] I. trans. To have necessity or need for; want; lack; require.

> They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick. Mat. ix. 12.
> An hundred and fiftie other Tenements for the poore of the Citie, which haue there an asper a day, and as much bread as they need. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 299.

[Need, especially in negative and interrogative sentences implying obligation or necessity, is often used, in the present, before an infinitive, usually without to, need being then invariable (without the personal terminations of the second and third persons singular): as, he or they need not go; need he do it?]=Syn. Want, etc. See lack[1].

II. intrans. To be wanted; be necessary: used impersonally.

> It nedethe not to telle zou the names of the Cytees, ne of the Townes that ben in that Weye.

A form of annunciator in which several messages, numbers of rooms, office-departments, etc., are inscribed on a board, and a needle or pointer is caused to point to any one of these indications, at the option of the person sending the message. E. H. Knight.

needle-bar (nē′dl-bär), n. The bar that supports the needles in a knitting-machine, or the reciprocating bar that carries the needle of a sewing-machine.

needle-beam (nē′dl-bēm), n. 1. A transverse floor-beam of a bridge, resting, according to the construction of the bridge, on the chord or the girders; also, a crosspiece in a queen-post truss, serving to support a floor.—2. In car-building, a transverse timber placed between the bolsters, beneath the longitudinal sills and floor-timbers, to which it is bolted.

needle-board (nē′dl-bōrd), n. In the Jacquard loom, a perforated board or plate through which the points of the needles presented to the cards pass, and the perforations of which act as guides for the needles when the latter are actuated by the cards. The needle-board holds all the needles in proper relation with the prism or cylinder to which the cards are attached, and with the perforations in the cards.

needle-book (nē′dl-bůk), n. Pieces of cloth, kid, chamois, or other material, cut and sewed together in the form of the leaves of a book, and protected by book-like covers, used to contain needles, which are stuck into the leaves.

needle-bug (nē′dl-bug), n. Any bug of the genus Ranatra, as R. fusca or R. quadridentata, of very long, slender form, with long, slender legs.

needle-case (nē′dl-kās), n. [< ME. nedyl-case; < needle + case[2].] A small case or box for holding needles.

needle-clerk (nē′dl-klėrk), n. A telegraph-clerk who receives telegrams by means of a needle-instrument.

The Needle-clerk has to glance alternately from his needle to his paper.
Preece and Sivewright, Telegraphy, p. 93.

needle-fish (nē′dl-fish), n. 1. One of several different garfishes or bill-fishes; any belonid: so called from the sharp, slender snout. See Belonidæ and gar[1].—2. A pipe-fish, Syngnathus acus, or other species of the genus or family Syngnathidæ. See Syngnathus.—3. The agonoid fish Aspidophoroides monopterygius.—4. Same as needle-shell.

needle-forceps (nē′dl-fôr″seps), n. A forceps for holding needles in suturing.

Needle-forceps.

needleful (nē′dl-fůl), n. [< needle + -ful.] As much thread as is put at once into a needle.

She took a new needleful of thread, waxed it carefully, threaded her needle with a steady hand.
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xvi.

Prussian Needle-gun.

a, cartridge; b, bullet; c, paper wad carrying detonating compound in recess; d, charge of powder; n, needle passing through and sliding in the breech-piece, and striking on the detonating compound; f, breech-piece; g, sliding spring-bolt which carries and operates the needle; h, a collar on the bolt, g, which engages the sear when g is drawn back; i, the sear; k, spring on which the sear, i, is formed, and which is pressed downward by the trigger to release the bolt, g, when the gun is fired; l, the trigger, which engages the spring, k, by a forwardly projecting lip; m, thumb-piece of spring-catch, which latter holds the breech-piece in place during the firing, and which, pressed downward, releases the breech-piece; o, thumb-piece of lock-tube; r, handle of the breech-piece. When m is depressed, r may be turned to the left and the breech-piece drawn backward for inserting the cartridge. After the cartridge is put in and the breech-piece is pushed forward, the drawing back of the lock-tube engages k with the sear, i, and the gun is then ready to be fired.

needle-gun (nē′dl-gun), n. A form of breech-loading rifle in which the cartridge is exploded by the rapid impact at its base of a needle or small spike. This firearm attained celebrity in 1866 as one of the chief causes of the swift Prussian victories over the Austrians. It has been superseded by other rifles of superior efficiency. See needle, 3 (h), and cut in preceding column.

needle-holder (nē′dl-hōl″dėr), n. In surg., an instrument for holding a needle in suturing. Also called porteaiguille. See cut under acutenaculum.

needle-tailed (nē'dl-tāld), a. Spine-tailed; having mucronate tail-feathers, as a swift.

needle-telegraph (nē'dl-tel″e-grȧf), n. A telegraph in which the indications are given by the deflections of a magnetic needle whose normal position is parallel to a wire through which a current of electricity is passed at will by the operator. E. H. Knight.

needle-test (nē'dl-test), n. In the testing of underground telegraph-lines, a method of discovering a particular wire in a cable by sending a current through it from the telegraph-station, and at the distant point making contact to the different wires by means of a needle passed through the covering, the needle forming the terminal of a circuit containing a galvanoscope or detector. The test is also sometimes used to find between what points (joint- or test-boxes) an "earth" fault lies, by finding the last of these points which the current passes in the wire.

needle-threader (nē'dl-thred″ėr), n. A device for passing a thread through the eye of a needle. One such device is a hollow cone with a perforated apex which is adjusted to the eye of the needle, the thread being pushed through the cone.

a, needle-threader, in which the thread is caught by barbs and drawn through the eye of the needle, b.

needlewoman (nē'dl-wụm″-ȧn), n.; pl. needlewomen (-wim″-ėn). A woman who is an expert in sewing or embroidery, or one whose business is sewing or embroidery; specifically, a woman who earns a living by sewing; a seamstress.

needlework (nē'dl-wėrk), n. [< ME. nedlworke; < needle + work.] 1. The work or occupation of one who uses the needle, especially in sewing.—2. Work produced by means of the needle, especially embroidery in all its forms, which is in this way discriminated from decoration produced by weaving, knitting, netting, etc.

Fine linen, Turkey cushions boss'd with pearl, Valance of Venice gold in needlework.
Shak., T. of the S., ii. 1. 356.

3. In arch., a form of construction combining a framework of timber and a plaster or masonry filling, employed very commonly in medieval houses, and for some partitions, etc.

needleworker (nē'dl-wėr″kėr), n. One who works with a needle; a needlewoman.

needle-woven (nē'dl-wō″vn), a. Made by the needle, so as to resemble that which is actually woven.—Needle-woven tapestry, decorative needlework made by running with a needle colored silks and the like in and out of the threads of canvas, coarse linen, and similar materials, so as to produce decorative designs.

needle-zeolite (nē'dl-zē″ọ-līt), n. Same as natrolite.

needling1† (nēd'ling), n. [< need + *-ling*1.] A needy person; a person who is in want.

negart, n. An obsolete spelling of nigger[2]. Minsheu.

negate (nē′gāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. negated, ppr. negating. [< L. negatus, pp. of negare (> It. negare = Pg. Sp. negar = F. nier), deny, refuse, decline, reduced from nec-aiare* (or a similar form), < nec, not, nor (contr. of neque, nor, < ne, not, + -que, a generalizing suffix) (a negative also used as a prefix in negligere, neglect, and negotium, business: see neglect and negotiate), + aiere, say, a defective verb, used chiefly in pres. aio, etc., I say, impf. aiebam, etc., I said (= Gr. ἠμί, I say, a defective verb, used only in pres. ἠμί, I say, impf. ἦν, I said, ἠ, he said), perhaps = Skt. √ ah, speak. Hence, in comp., denegare, > ult. E. deny: see deny and denay.] To deny; negative; make negative or null. [Rare or technical.]

At the cost of negating . . . his past opinions.
Proc. Soc. Psych. Research, Dec. 14, 1885, p. 274.

But desire for negation is still not aversion, until painfulness is added. The object to be negated must be felt to be painful, and may also be so thought of.
F. H. Bradley, Mind, XIII. 22.

negatedness (nē′gā-ted-nes), n. The state of being negated or denied.

Real pain is the feeling of the negatedness of the self, and therefore, as such, it is bad.
F. H. Bradley, Ethical Studies, p. 118.

negation (nē-gā′shon), n. [= F. négation = Sp. negación = Pg. negação = It. negazione, < L. negatio(n-), denial, < negare, pp. negatus, deny: see negate.] 1. The act of denying or of negativing; the opposite of the act of affirming.

Descartes was naturally led to regard error as more or less a negation, or rather privation.
Veitch, Introd. to Descartes's Method, p. lix.

By his principle, that "determination is negation," Spinoza is driven, in spite of himself, to dissolve everything in the dead abstraction of substance, in a pure identity that has no difference in itself, and from which no difference can by any possibility be evolved.
E. Caird, Philos. of Kant, p. 48.

The affirmation of universal evolution is in itself the negation of an "absolute commencement" of anything.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., App., p. 482.

Japanese art is not merely the incomparable achievement of certain harmonies in colour; it is the negation, the immolation, the annihilation of everything else.
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 746.

2. A denial; a declaration that something is not, or has not been, or will not be.

Our assertions and negations should be yea and nay; whatsoever is more than these is sin. D. Rogers.

It is mere cowardice to seek safety in negations.
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, v. 3.

3. The absence of that which is positive or affirmative; blankness; emptiness.

I hate the black negation of the bier.
Tennyson, Ancient Sage.

Conversion by negation, in logic. See contraposition.

negationist (nē-gā′shon-ist), n. [< negation + -ist.] One who denies or expresses negation; especially, one who simply denies beliefs commonly held without asserting an opposite view.

We thus perceive that the Skeptic is not the denier or dogmatic Negationist he is commonly held to be.
J. Owen, Evenings with Skeptics, Pref., p. vii.

★ negative (neg′a-tiv), a. and n. [= F. négatif = Pr. negatiu = Sp. Pg. It. negativo, < L. negativus, that denies, negative, < negare, pp. negatus, deny: see negate.] I. a. 1. Expressing or containing denial or negation: opposed to affirmative: as, a negative proposition.

I saie againe that I weigh not two chips which way the wind bloweth, bicause I see no inconuenience that may insue either of the affirmatiue or negatiue opinion.
Stanihurst, Descrip. of Ireland.

We have negative names, which stand not directly for positive ideas, but for their absence, such as insipid, silence, nihil, &c., which words denote positive ideas, e. g. taste, sound, being, with a signification of their absence.
Locke, Human Understanding, II. viii. § 5.

2. Expressing or containing refusal; containing or implying the answer "No" to a request: as, a negative answer.—3. Characterized by the omission or absence of that which is affirmative or positive: as, a negative attitude; negative goodness.

There is another way . . . of denying Christ, which is negative, when we do not acknowledge and confess him.
South, Sermons.

The negative standard of goodness, which results at best in abstaining from evil rather than in doing good, and is only too apt to degenerate into something very like hypocrisy. H. N. Oxenham, Short Studies, p. 34.

Christ would never hear of negative morality: "thou shalt" was ever his word, with which he superseded "thou shalt not." R. L. Stevenson, Scribner's Mag., IV. 765.

4. Having the power of stopping or restraining by refusing assent or concurrence; imposing a veto.

Denying me any power of a negative voice as king, they are not ashamed to seek to deprive me of the liberty of using my reason with a good conscience. Eikon Basilike.

5. In photog., showing the lights and shades in nature exactly reversed: as, a negative picture; a negative plate. See II., 5.—6. Measured or reckoned in the opposite direction to that which is considered as positive; neutralizing the positive: as, a debt is negative property.—Negative abstraction, argument, conception, condition, etc. See the nouns.—Negative crystal. See crystal and refraction.—Negative electricity. (a) According to Franklin's theory, that state of bodies in which they are deprived of some part of the electricity which they naturally contain. (b) Electricity developed by friction on resinous substances, as by rubbing sealing-wax with silk or flannel; resinous electricity.—Negative evidence, eyepiece, image. See the nouns.—Negative exponent. See power.—Negative index of a logarithm. See logarithm.—Negative plate, the metal or equivalent placed in opposition to the positive in the voltaic battery. The negative may be coke, carbon, silver, platinum, or copper; the positive is usually zinc.—Negative pole of a magnet, the south-seeking pole. See magnet.—Negative pole of a voltaic battery, the extremity of the wire connected with the positive plate.—Negative power. See power.—Negative prescription, in Scots law. See prescription.—Negative proposition, in logic, a proposition which denies agreement between the subject and its predicate.—Negative quantities. See quantity.—Negative radical, in chem., a radical which is acid or electronegative in relation to the element or radical with which it is compared.—Negative result of an experimental inquiry, the conclusion that nothing remarkable happens under the circumstances inquired into.—Negative servitude, sign, etc. See the nouns.—Negative well. Same as absorbing-well (which see, under absorb).

II. n. 1. A proposition expressing a negation; a negative proposition.

Of negatives we have the least certainty; they are usually hardest, and many times impossible to be proved.
Tillotson.

The positive and the negative are set before the mind for its choice, and it chooses the negative.
Edwards, Freedom of the Will, i. 1.

Of a life of completed development, of activity with the end attained, we can only speak or think in negatives, and thus only can we speak or think of that state of being in which, according to our theory, the ultimate moral good must consist. T. H. Green, Prolegomena to Ethics, § 172.

2. A term or word which expresses negation or denial.

If your four negatives make your two affirmatives, why then, the worse for my friends and the better for my foes.
Shak., T. N., v. 1. 24.

3. The right or power of refusing assent; a veto; also, the power of preventing.

Their Gouerment is an Anarchie; euery one obeying and commanding, the meanest person amongst them hauing a Negative in all their consultations.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 528.

This man sits calculating varietie of excuses how he may grant least; as if his whole strength and royaltie were plac'd in a meer negative. Milton, Eikonoklastes, xi.

It was not stipulated that the King should give up his negative on acts of Parliament.
Macaulay, Hallam's Const. Hist.

4. That side of a question which denies what the opposite side affirms; also, a decision or an answer expressive of negation: as, the question was determined in the negative.—5. In photog., a photographic image on glass or other suitable medium, in which the lights and shades are the opposite of those in nature. The negative is used chiefly as a plate from which to print positive impressions on paper or other material. Its image presents natural high lights as more or less opaque, and diminishes in opacity by delicate gradations to the deepest shadows, which should be represented by unstained or transparent film.

6. Electricity like that developed by friction on resinous substances. See electricity.—7. In elect., the negative plate of a voltaic element; the metal or equivalent placed in opposition to the positive in the voltaic battery.—Double negative, a sign of negation repeated. In English and Latin, and in Sanskrit, such a double negative is equivalent to an affirmative, destroying the negation, but in most languages and in vulgar speech it is not.—Negative nothing. See nothing.—Negative pregnant, in law, a negation implying an affirmation favorable to the adversary, or admitting of such an implication: as, in pleading, if one alleged to have done a thing denies that he did it in manner and form as alleged, which is taken as admitting that he did it in some other manner.

negative (neg′a-tiv), v. t.; pret. and pp. negatived, ppr. negativing. [< negative, a.] 1. To deny, as a statement or proposition; affirm the contradictory of; contradict; negate.

Although well armed, she is not, I think, a ship of war. Her rigging, build, and general equipment all negative a supposition of this kind. Poe, MS. Found in a Bottle.

2. To disprove; prove the contrary of.

The omission or infrequency of such recitals does not negative the existence of miracles. Paley.

3. To refuse assent to; refuse to enact or sanction; veto.

The proposal was negatived by a small majority.
Andrews, Anecdotes, p. 169.

negativism (neg′a-tiv-izm), n. [< negative + -ism.] The stand-point assumed, or the views held, by a negationist.

A philosophy of most radical free thought "is presented," that is no negativism, no agnosticism, and no metaphysical mysticism. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXXV. 787.

negativity (neg-a-tiv′i-ti), n. [= F. négativité; as negative + -ity.] Same as negativeness. Imp. Dict.

negator (nē-gā'tor), n. [= Sp. Pg. negador = It. negatore, < LL. negator, a denier, < L. negare, deny: see negate.] One who negates or denies.

Sects [in Russia] with less horrible practices are numerous. One such calls itself the Negators, and its members keep themselves aloof from all men. Science, XI. 178.

negatory (neg'a-tō-ri), a. [= F. négatoire = Sp. Pg. It. negatorio, < LL. negatorius, negatory, < negator, a denier, < L. negare, deny: see negate.] Expressing denial or negation; negative. [Rare.]

On Friday, the 15th of July, 1791, the National Assembly decides; in what negatory manner we know. Carlyle, French Rev., I. xi. 9.

negert, n. An obsolete form of nigger[2].

neght, neghet, adv. and v. Middle English forms of nigh.

neghent, a. and n. A Middle English form of nine.

neghstt, a. A Middle English form of next. Hampole.

neglect (neg-lekt'), v. t. [< L. neglectus, pp. of neglegere, negligere, neclegere (> It. negligere = F. négliger), not heed, not attend to, be regardless of, < nec, not, nor (see negate), + legere, gather: see legend. Cf. collect, etc.; also negligent, etc.] 1. To treat carelessly or heedlessly; forbear to attend to or treat with respect; be remiss in attention or duty toward; pay little or no attention to; slight: as, to neglect one's best interests; to neglect one's friends.

I neglect phrases, and labour wholly to inform my reader's understanding. Burton, Anat. of Mel., To the Reader, p. 24.

In the Netherlands the English Garrison at Alost in Flanders being neglected, the Governor Pigot, and the other Captains, for want of Pay, upon Composition yielded up the Town to the Spaniard. Baker, Chronicles, p. 361.

When men do not only neglect Religion, but reproach and contemn it. Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. iv.

The garden has been suffered to run to waste, and is only the more beautiful for having been neglected. Macaulay, in Trevelyan, I. 324.

2. To overlook or omit; disregard: as, the difference is so small that it may be neglected.—3. To omit to do or perform; let slip; leave undone; fail through heedlessness to do or in doing (something): often with an infinitive as object.

If thou neglect'st or dost unwillingly
What I command, I'll rack thee with old cramps. Shak., Tempest, i. 2. 368.

In heaven,
Where honour due and reverence none neglects. Milton, P. L., iii. 738.

4†. To cause to be neglected or deferred.

I have been long a sleeper; but I hope
My absence doth neglect no great designs,
Which by my presence might have been concluded. Shak., Rich. III., iii. 4. 25.

=Syn. Neglect, Disregard, Slight. Slight always expresses intention; it applies to persons or things. Neglect and disregard apply more often to things, and may or may not express intention; disregard is more often intentional than neglect. Only neglect may be followed by an infinitive: as, to neglect to write a letter; among things it generally applies to action that is needed, while disregard commonly applies to failure to heed or notice: as, to disregard counsel, a hint, a request, the lessons of experience, the signs of coming rain; to neglect a duty. See negligent and negligence.

neglect (neg-lekt'), n. [< L. neglectus, a neglecting, < neglegere, pp. neglectus, neglect: see neglect, v.] 1. The act of neglecting; the act of treating with slight attention, heedlessness, or disrespect some person or thing that requires attention, care, or respect.—2. Omission; oversight; the not doing a thing that should or might be done.

Without blame,
Or our neglect, we lost her as we came. Milton, Comus, l. 510.

3. Disregard; slight; omission of due attention or civilities.

I have perceived a most faint neglect of late: which I have rather blamed as my own jealous curiosity than as a very pretence and purpose of unkindness. Shak., Lear, i. 4. 73.

There are several little neglects, that one might have told him of, which I noted in reading it hastily. Gray, Letters, I. 174.

4. Negligence; habitual want of regard.—5. The state of being disregarded.

Rescue my poor Remains from vile Neglect,
With Virgin Honours let my Herse be deckt,
And decent Emblem. Prior, Henry and Emma, l. 616.

Gross, ordinary, and slight neglect. See negligence, 2. =Syn. 1. Failure, default, heedlessness.—1, 3, and 4. Remissness, etc. See negligence.

neglect (neg-lekt'), a. [= OF. neglect, < L. neglectus, pp.: see the verb.] Neglected.

It should not be neglect or left undone. Tyndale, Ans. to Sir T. More, etc. (Parker Soc., 1850), p. 71.

neglectable (neg-lek'ta-bl), a. [< neglect + -able. Cf. neglectible.] That can be neglected or passed by; that may be omitted or not taken into account, as a force or a consideration, in an estimate, calculation, problem, etc., without vitiating the conclusions reached; of little or no moment or importance; negligible.

And subsequent experiments proved that all of these [causes of the loss of energy] are practically neglectable. Proc. Roy. Soc., XXXVIII. 42.

neglectedness (neg-lek'ted-nes), n. [< neglected, pp. of neglect, v., + -ness.] The state of being neglected; a neglected condition.

neglecter (neg-lek'tėr), n. [< neglect + -er[1].] One who neglects.

The chase, or any other pastime which occurred, made Halbert a frequent neglecter of hours. Scott, Monastery, xiii.

neglectful (neg-lekt'fûl), a. [< neglect + -ful.] 1. Characterized by neglect, inattention, or indifference to something which ought to be or is worthy of being done, attended to, or regarded; heedless; inattentive; careless: used either absolutely, or with of before the object of neglect: as, he is very neglectful; neglectful of one's duties.

His lovely daughter, lovelier in her tears, . . .
Silent went next, neglectful of her charms. Goldsmith, Des. Vil., l. 377.

The wearers of the crown have not been neglectful of their duty to visit Norway and to reside in Christiania. Nineteenth Century, XXIII. 63.

2. Indicating neglect, slight, or indifference.

A cold and neglectful countenance. Locke, Thoughts on Education, § 57.

=Syn. 1. Remiss, etc. See negligent.

neglectfully (neg-lekt'fûl-i), adv. In a neglectful manner; with neglect; with inattention; with carelessness or negligence.

neglectfulness (neg-lekt'fûl-nes), n. The state or quality of being neglectful.

neglectible (neg-lek'ti-bl), a. [< neglect + -ible.] Neglectable.

neglectingly (neg-lek'ting-li), adv. [< neglecting, ppr. of neglect, v., + -ly[2].] With neglect; carelessly; heedlessly; discourteously.

Answer'd neglectingly, I know not what. Shak., 1 Hen. IV., i. 3. 52.

See how neglectingly he passes by me! Beau. and Fl., Scornful Lady, iv. 1.

neglection (neg-lek'shon), n. [= It. neglezione, < L. neglectio(n-), a neglecting, < neglegere, pp. neglectus, neglect: see neglect, v.] Neglect; negligence.

And this neglection of degree it is That by a pace goes backward, with a purpose
It hath to climb. Shak., T. and C., i. 3. 127.

neglectivet (neg-lek'tiv), a. [< neglect + -ive.] Inattentive; regardless; neglectful.

It is not for us to affect too much cheapness and neglective homeliness in our evangelical devotions. Bp. Hall, Holy Decency in the Worship of God.

It is a wonder they should be so neglective of their own children. Fuller, Holy War, p. 102.

negligée (neg-lē-zhā'), n. and a. [F. négligée, fem. of négligé, pp. of négliger, neglect: commonly used without reference to gender: see neglect, v.] I. n. 1. Easy and unceremonious dress in general: as, she appeared in negligée.—2. A form of loose gown worn by women in the eighteenth century; also, in recent use, a loose house gown.

He fancied twenty Cupids prepared for execution in every folding of her white negligee. Goldsmith.

3. See negligée necklace, below.

II. a. Carelessly arranged or attired; unceremoniously dressed; careless.

I was up early, and going out to walk in my night-cloak and night-gown, I met Mr. Fish going a hunting. I should not have been rid of him quickly if he had not thought himself a little too négligé; his hair was not powdered. Dorothy Osborne, Letters (ed. Parry), p. 246.

Negligée beads, beads (for a necklace or a similar ornament) of irregular form not shaped by art, especially of coral.—Negligée necklace, a coral necklace of which the beads are irregular fragments, pierced for stringing without other preparation.

negligence (neg'li-jens), n. [< ME. negligence, necligence, neclygens, < OF. negligence, F. négligence = Sp. Pg. negligencia = It. negligenzia, negligenza, < L. neglegentia, neclegentia, carelessness, heedlessness, < neglegen(t-)s, careless, negligent: see negligent.] 1. The fact or the character of being negligent or neglectful; deficiency in or lack of care, exactness, or application; the omitting to do, or a habit of omitting to do, things which ought to be done, or the doing of such things without sufficient attention and care; carelessness; heedless disregard of some duty.

I trow men wolde deme it necligence
If I foryete to telle the dispence
Of Theseus. Chaucer, Knight's Tale (ed. Morris), l. 1023.

Traitor, thy lif lost and goo!
By thy neclygens my moder haue loste! Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 4899.

She let it drop by negligence,
And, to the advantage, I, being here, took 't up. Shak., Othello, iii. 3. 311.

2. Specifically, in law, the failure to exercise that degree of care which the law requires for the protection of those interests of other persons which may be injuriously affected by the want of such care. If such failure directly results in injury to the interests of another person, who did not by his own negligence contribute to the result, the negligence is actionable negligence. If the failure to exercise due care is wilful, liability is incurred irrespective of contributory negligence, but the failure may still be treated at the option of the person injured as mere negligence, so far at least as concerns the liability of the person actually guilty of it, and in some cases also for the purpose of holding his employer liable. By a rule of law which obtains in some of the United States, the person injured may recover notwithstanding his own negligence if it was slight as compared with that of the defendant (comparative negligence). Contributive or contributory negligence is negligence, on the part of the person injured, which contributed to produce the injury. Gross negligence is the failure to exercise even slight care, and is usually measured by reference to that degree of care which every person of ordinary sense, however inattentive, takes of his own interests. Ordinary negligence is the failure to exercise ordinary care, usually measured by reference to that degree of care which a man of common prudence and capable of governing a family takes of his own interests. Slight negligence is the failure to exercise a high degree of care, usually measured by reference to that diligence with which a circumspect and thoughtful person would attend to his own interests. Whether these three degrees are proper distinctions to be observed as a test of liability for damages is much disputed, but there is no question that the law fully recognizes in a general way the corresponding degrees of care as required of persons in various different relations, nor that degrees of neglect must be noticed by the law in determining other questions than that of liability for damages, as good faith, fidelity, etc.

3. Lack of attention to niceties or conventionalities, especially of dress, manner, or style; disregard of appearances; easy indifference of manner.

Many there are who seem to slight all Care,
And with a pleasing Negligence ensnare. Congreve, tr. of Ovid's Art of Love.

Horace still charms with graceful negligence,
And without method talks us into sense. Pope, Essay on Criticism, l. 653.

4. An act of neglectfulness; an instance of negligence or carelessness.

Remarking his beauties, . . . I must also point out his negligences and defects. Blair.

5. Contempt; disregard; slight; neglect.

To this point I stand,
That both the worlds I give to negligence,
Let come what comes. Shak., Hamlet, iv. 5. 134.

6. A kind of wig in fashion for morning dress about the middle of the eighteenth century.

=Syn. 1. Heedlessness, inconsiderateness, thoughtlessness.—1 and 2. Negligence, Neglect. Remissness, Inattention, Inadvertence, Oversight, Indifference. As contrasted with neglect, negligence generally expresses the habit or trait, and neglect the act. Inadvertence and oversight expressly mean that there was no intention of neglect; indifference lies back of action in the failure to care, such failure being generally blameworthy. Remissness is careless neglect of duty. Inattention is a failure, generally culpable, to bring the mind to the subject. See neglect, v. t., and negligent.

negligent (neg'li-jent), a. [< ME. negligent, < OF. negligent, F. négligent = Sp. Pg. negligente = It. negligente, nigligente, < L. neglegen(t-)s, negligen(t-)s, ppr. of neglegere, negligere, neglect: see neglect.] 1. Characterized by negligence or by neglectful habits; neglectful; careless; heedless; apt or accustomed to omit what ought to be done, or to do it in a careless or heedless manner: followed by of when the object of the negligence is specified: as, a negligent man; a man negligent of his duties.

Thou must be counted
A servant grafted in my serious trust
And therein negligent. Shak., W. T., i. 2. 247.

He was very negligent himself, and rather so of his person, and of a philosophic temper. Evelyn, Diary, March 22, 1675.

2. Indicative of easy indifference or of disregard of conventionalities.

All loose her negligent attire,
All loose her golden hair. Scott, L. of L. M., i. 10.

Negligent escape, the escape of a prisoner without the knowledge or consent of the sheriff, as distinguished from escape by permission, called a voluntary escape. The importance of the distinction is in the right of the sheriff to retake the prisoner, and in the fact that in case of mesne process retaking before suit brought by the creditor against the sheriff is a defense; whereas for a voluntary escape the sheriff is liable absolutely. =Syn. Negligent, Neglectful, Remiss, Heedless, Thoughtless, inattentive, regardless, indifferent, slack. Of the first five words, remiss is the weakest; it especially applies to failure to attend to what is considered duty. Negligent is generally applied to inattention to things, neglectful to inattention to persons. Neglectful, by derivation, is stronger than negligent, but the difference is really small. Heedless, thoughtless, etc., indicate lack of heed, care, attention, thought, etc., where they are needed or due. All these words may apply to a particular occasion of failure, or indicate a habit or a trait of character: as, he is very heedless. See neglect, v., and negligence.

negligently (neg'li-jent-li), adv. 1. In a negligent manner; with negligence; carelessly; heedlessly; with disregard of niceties of appearance, manner, or style, or of conventionalities.

That care was ever had of me, with my earliest capacity, not to be negligently train'd in the precepts of Christian Religion. Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus.

Britain! whose genius is in verse express'd,
Bold and sublime, but negligently dress'd.
Waller, On the Earl of Roscommon.

2†. So as to slight or show disrespect.

negligible (neg'li-ji-bl), a. [= F. négligeable, < négliger, < L. neglegere, negligere, neglect: see neglect.] Capable or admitting of being neglected or disregarded; neglectable.

negligibly (neg'li-ji-bli), adv. In a quantity or to a degree which may be disregarded.

The work wasted . . . is negligibly small compared with the work done in driving the generator part.
Philosophical Mag., XXVI. 160.

negoce† (nē-gōs'), n. [< OF. negoce, F. négoce = Sp. Pg. negocio = It. negozio, < L. negotium, ML. also negocium, employment, occupation, < nec, not, + otium, leisure, ease, inactivity: see otiose. Hence negotiate, etc.] Business; occupation; intercourse.

negociate, negociation, etc. Variants of negotiate, etc.

negotiability (nē-gō-shia-bil'i-ti), n. [< F. négociabilité; as negotiable + -ity (see -bility).] The quality of being negotiable, or transferable by assignment.

negotiable (nē-gō'shia-bl), a. [< F. négociable = Sp. negociable = Pg. negociavel = It. negoziabile, < ML. negotiabilis, < L. negotiari, negotiate: see negotiate.] Capable of being negotiated.—Negotiable paper, negotiable instrument, etc., an evidence of debt which may be transferred by indorsement or delivery, so that the transferee or holder may sue on it in his own name with like effect as if it had been made to him originally: such are bills of exchange, promissory notes, drafts, or checks payable to the order of a payee or to bearer. (Parsons.) The peculiar effects of negotiability are, in the rule of law, that a transferee in good faith and for value, in the ordinary course of business and before maturity, can usually recover of the maker, drawer, or acceptor, irrespective of defenses the latter might have against the transferrer; and that a transferee by indorsement can recover of the indorser in case of default of the maker, acceptor, or drawer, if due notice thereof was given. A sealed instrument, unless issued by a corporation or state, is not usually deemed negotiable.

negotiant (nē-gō'shi-ant), n. [< F. négociant, < L. negotian(t-)s, ppr. of negotiari, carry on business: see negotiate.] One who negotiates; a negotiator.

Ambassadors, negotiants, and generally all other ministers of mean fortune in conversation with princes and superiours must use great respect.
Raleigh, Arts of Empire, xxv.

negotiate (nē-gō'shi-āt), v.; pret. and pp. negotiated, ppr. negotiating. [Formerly also negociate; < L. negotiatus, pp. of negotiari (> It. negoziare = Sp. Pg. negociar = F. négocier), carry on business, < negotium, business: see negoce.]
I. intrans. 1†. To carry on business or trade.

They that received the talents to negotiate with did all of them, except one, make profit of them. Hammond.

2. To treat with another or others, as in the arrangement of a treaty, or in preliminaries to the transaction of any business; carry on negotiations.

He that negotiates between God and man.
Cowper, Task, ii. 463.

II. trans. 1. To arrange for or procure by negotiation; bring about by mutual arrangement, discussion, or bargaining: as, to negotiate a loan or a treaty.

Lady ——— is gone into the country with her lord, to negotiate, at leisure, their intended separation.
Chesterfield.

The German chancellor, Bishop Conrad of Hildesheim, who had crowned the King of Cyprus, negotiated the marriage and succession.
Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 171.

2. To direct; manage; transact.

I sent her to negotiate an Affair in which if I'm detected I'm undone. Congreve, Way of the World, iii. 4.

3. To handle; manage. [Colloq.]

The rider's body must be kept close to the saddle in leaping, for if he were jerked up, the weight of say only a 10-stone man coming down on the horse a couple of seconds after he has negotiated a large fence is sufficient to throw him down. Encyc. Brit., XII. 197.

The fallen timber on the slopes presents continual obstacles, which have to be negotiated with some care to avoid being spiked by the sharp dead branches.
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 90.

4. To put into circulation by transference and assignment of claim by indorsement: as, to negotiate a bill of exchange.

The notes were not negotiated to them in the usual course of business or trade. Kent.

5. To dispose of by sale or transfer: as, to negotiate securities.

negotiation (nē-gō-shi-ā'shon), n. [Formerly also negociation; < F. négociation = Sp. negociación = Pg. negociação = It. negoziazione, < L. negotiatio(n-), the carrying on of business, a wholesale business, < negotiari, carry on business: see negotiate.] 1†. Trading; mercantile business; trafficking.

I exceedingly pitied this brave unhappy person, who had lost with these prizes £40,000 after 20 yeares' negociation in ye East Indies. Evelyn, Diary, Sept. 29, 1665.

2. Mutual discussion and arrangement of the terms of a transaction or agreement, whether directly or by agents or intermediaries; the act or process of treating with another or others in regard to the settlement of some matter, or for the purchase or sale of a commodity, etc.: as, the negotiation of a treaty or a loan.

Any treaties of confederacy, of peace, of truce, of intercourse, of other forrein negotiations (that is specially noted for one of my inkhorn words).
Harvey, Pierce's Supererogation.

In negotiation with others, men are wrought by cunning, by importunity, and by vehemency.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 294.

Languid war can do nothing which negotiation or submission will not do better.
Macaulay, Hallam's Const. Hist.

3. In com., the act or procedure by which a bill of exchange, etc., is made negotiable—that is, made capable, by acceptance and indorsement, of being passed from hand to hand in payment of indebtedness, or of being transferred to another for a consideration. See negotiable.

negotiator (nē-gō'shi-ā-tor), n. [< F. négociateur = Sp. Pg. negociador = It. negoziatore, < L. negotiator, one who does business by wholesale, a banker or factor, a tradesman, an agent, < negotiari, carry on business: see negotiate.] One who negotiates; one who treats with others as either principal or agent in commercial transactions, or in the making of national treaties or compacts.

negotiatory (nē-gō'shi-ā-tō-ri), a. [< LL. negotiatorius, of or belonging to trade or tradespeople, < L. negotiator, a trader, negotiator: see negotiator.] Relating to negotiation.

negotiatrix (nē-gō'shi-ā-triks), n. [= F. négociatrice = It. negoziatrice, < LL. negotiatrix, fem. of L. negotiator, negotiator: see negotiator.] A female negotiator.

Our fair negotiatrix prepared to show the usual degree of gratitude. Miss Edgeworth, Manœuvring, xv.

negotiosity† (nē-gō-shi-os'i-ti), n. [< L. negotiosita(t-)s, an abundance of business or occupation, < negotiosus, busy: see negotious.] The state of being negotious, or engaged in business; continued and absorbing occupation.

negotious† (nē-gō'shus), a. [= Sp. Pg. negocioso = It. negozioso, < L. negotiosus, full of business, busy, < negotium, business, occupation: see negoce. Cf. otiose.] Engrossed in business; fully employed; busy; active.

Some servants, if they be set about what they like, are very nimble and negotious. J. Rogers.

negotiousness† (nē-gō'shus-nes), n. The state of being actively employed; activity.

God needs not our negotiousness, or double diligence, to bring his matters to pass.
D. Rogers, Naaman the Syrian, p. 606.

negress (nē'gres), n. [= F. négresse; as negro + -ess. The Sp. Pg. It. term is negra.] A female negro; a female of one of the black races of Africa.

Negritian (nē-grish'an), a. and n. See Nigritian.

Negrito (ne-grē'tō), n. [< Sp. negrito, dim. of negro, black: see negro.] One of a diminutive dark-skinned negro-like race found in the Philippine Islands (of which they seem to have been the original inhabitants), and in New Caledonia, Borneo, and elsewhere in Indonesia. The average height of the Negritos of the Philippine Islands is about 4 feet 8 inches.

negro (nē'grō), n. and a. [= F. nègre (> E. neger, now nigger = D. G. Dan. Sw. neger = Russ. negrŭ: see nigger[2]), < Sp. Pg. It. negro, black, as a noun, negro, m., negra, f., a black person, a negro; It. also nero = Pr. negre, nier = OF. negre, nigre, necre, ner, neir, F. noir, black, < L. niger (nigr-), black, dark, dusk, applied to the night, the sky, a storm, etc., to pitch, etc., to ivy, etc., to the complexion ('dark'), etc., and also to the black people of Africa, etc. (but the ordinary terms for 'African negro' or 'African' were Æthiops and Afer); also, fig., sad, mournful, gloomy, ill-omened, fatal, etc. Cf. Skt. niç, night; but whether Skt. niç, night, is related to nahta, night, or either to L. niger, black, is not clear. From L. niger are also ult. E. nigrescent, nigritude, Nigella, niello, anneal[1] (in part), etc. The words Moor[4], blackamoor, in the same sense, are much older in E.] I. n.; pl. negroes (-grōz). A black man; specifically, one of a race of men characterized by a black skin and hair of a woolly or crisp nature. Negroes are distinguished from the other races by various other peculiarities—such as the projection of the jaws forward, combined with a forward inclination of the teeth; the short, broad, and flat nose; the thick projecting lips; and considerable length of limbs. The negro race is generally regarded as comprehending the native inhabitants of Sudan, Senegambia, and the region southward to the vicinity of the equator and the great lakes, and their descendants in America and elsewhere; in a wider sense it is used to comprise also many other tribes farther south, as the Zulus and Kafirs. The word negro is often loosely applied to other dark or black-skinned races, and to mixed breeds. As designating a "race," it is sometimes written with a capital.

Toward the south of this region is the kyngedome of Guinea, with Senega, Iaiofo, Gambra, and manye other regions of the blacke Moores cauled Ethiopians or Negros, all whiche are watered with the ryuer Negro, cauled in owlde tyme Niger.
R. Eden, First Three English Books on America [(ed. Arber), p. 374.

II. a. Of, pertaining to, or characteristic of black men or negroes: as, negro blood; negro dances.

It is often asked what Races are Negro, as the meaning of the term is not well defined. . . . The word is not a National appellation, but denotes a physical type, of which the tribes in North Guinea are the representatives. When these characteristics are not all present, the Race is not Negro, though black and woolly-haired.
R. N. Cust, Mod. Langs. of Africa, p. 53.

Negro bat, Vesperugo maurus, a bat of a dark or black color, widely distributed in Europe and Asia.—Negro cachexy, case. See the nouns.—Negro coffee. See Cassia and coffee.—Negro corn, or negro guinea-corn, a name given in the West Indies to Indian millet or durra.—Negro fly, the Psila rosæ, a dipterous insect, so named from its shining-black color. Baltimore Sun, June 27, 1857. (Bartlett.)

=Syn. 1 and 4. Neighborhood, Vicinity, Proximity. The first two differ from proximity in being used concretely: as, the explosion was heard throughout the neighborhood or vicinity (but not proximity). Neighborhood is closer and livelier than vicinity; proximity is the closest nearness. Neighborhood regards not only place, but persons; vicinity only the place; hence we say he lived in the vicinity of New York or the Hudson, but he lived in the neighborhood of Irving; his house was in close proximity to the one that ★was on fire. See adjacent.

neighboring, neighbouring (nā′bor-ing), a. [< neighbor + -ing[2].] Living or situated near; adjoining: as, neighboring races; neighboring countries.

Whether the neighbouring water stands or runs,
Lay twigs across and bridge it o'er with stones.
Addison, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, iv.

Around from all the neighbouring streets
The wondering neighbours ran.
Goldsmith, Elegy on the Death of a Mad Dog.

neighborliness, neighbourliness (nā′bor-li-nes), n. [< neighborly + -ness.] The state or quality of being neighborly in feelings or acts.

neighborly, neighbourly (nā′bor-li), a. [< neighbor + -ly[1].] 1. Becoming a neighbor; kind; considerate: as, a neighborly attention.

Judge if this be neighbourly dealing. Arbuthnot.

2. Cultivating familiar intercourse; interchanging visits; social: as, the people of the place are very neighborly.

It was a neighborly town, with gossip enough to stir the social atmosphere. L. M. Alcott, Hospital Sketches, p. 100.

=Syn. Obliging, attentive, friendly.

neighborly, neighbourly (nā′bor-li), adv. [< neighborly, a.] In the manner of a neighbor; with social attention and kindliness.

Some tolerable sentence neighborly borrowed, or featly picked out of some fresh pamflet.
Harvey, Pierce's Supererogation.

Being neighbourly admitted, . . . by the courtesy of England, to hold possessions in our province, a country better than their own.
Milton, Articles of Peace with the Irish.

neighborred†, n. [ME. negeburredde, neheboreden; < neighbor + -red. Cf. neighborhood.] Neighborhood. Old. Eng. Hom., i. 137.

neighborship† (nā′bor-ship), n. [= D. nabuurschap = MLG. nabūrschop, LG. naberschaft, neberschaft, neberschap = G. nachburschaft, nochperschaft, nachbarschaft = Sw. naboskap = Dan. naboskab; as neighbor + -ship.] The state of being neighbors.

neighbor-stained† (nā′bor-stānd), a. Stained with the blood of neighbors.

Rebellious subjects, enemies to peace,
Profaners of this neighbour-stained steel.
Shak., R. and J., i. 1. 89.

neighing (nā′ing), n. [Verbal n. of neigh[1], v.] The cry of a horse; a whinnying.

When the strong neighings of the wild white Horse
Set every gilded parapet shuddering.
Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

neil†, adv. [ME., < (?) OF. nil, < L. nil, nothing: see nil[2].] Never.

Whos kyngdome ever schalle laste and neil fyne.
Lydgate, MS. Soc. Antiq. 134, f. 2. (Halliwell.)

Neillia (nē-il′i-ä), n. [NL. (D. Don, 1825), named after Patrick Neill, secretary of the Caledonian Horticultural Society.] A genus of branching shrubs, of the family Rosaceæ and the tribe Spiræeæ, characterized by the single carpel, or rarely 2, the fruits not inflated.

Fruiting Branch of Ninebark (Icotorus opulifolius).
a, a flower; b, fruit; c, a leaf, showing the nervation.

There are 3 species, of the Himalayas and southern China. They bear alternate lobed leaves and clustered white flowers. Icotorus opulifolius (referred to this genus by some), called ninebark from the numerous layers of its loose bark, is common in the interior of the United States.

ne injuste vexes (nē in-jus′tē vek′sēz). [L., vex not unjustly: ne, not; injuste, unjustly, < injustus, unjust (see injust); vexes, 2d pers. sing. pres. subj. of vexare, vex: see vex.] In old Eng. law, a writ issued in pursuance of the provisions of Magna Charta, forbidding a lord to vex unjustly a tenant by distraining for a greater rent or more services than the latter was legally bound for.

neir, n. See neer[2].

neirhand, adv. An obsolete or dialectal form of near-hand.

neist (nēst), adv., prep., and a. A dialectal form of next.

neither (nē′ᵺėr or nī′ᵺėr), a. and pron. [< ME. neither, neyther, nethir, also nather, nawther, nowther, nouther, nother, < AS. nāther, nāthor, nōther, nāuther, nāuthær, nāwther, contr. of nāhwæther (= OFries. nahweder, nauder, nouder, ner), adj., pron., and conj., neither, < ne, not, + āhwæther, āwther, etc., either: see either. The form neither conforms in spelling and pron. to either; it would reg. be only nother (nō′ᵺėr), there being no AS. form of ēgther (whence E. either) with the negative. The variation in the pronunciation of neither depends on that of either. See either.] I. a. Not either. See either.

Love made them not: with acture they may be,
Where neither party is nor true nor kind.
Shak., Lover's Complaint, l. 186.

II. pron. Not one or the other. See either, pron.

Ac hor nother, as me may ise in pur righte nas.
Rob. of Gloucester, l. 174.

Which of them shall I take?
Both? one? or neither? Neither can be enjoyed
If both remain alive. Shak., Lear, v. 1. 58.

In this Division of Advices, when they could not do both, they did neither. Baker, Chronicles, p. 159.

Both thy brethren are in Arthur's hall,
Albeit neither loved with that full love
I feel for thee. Tennyson, Gareth and Lynette.

Neither nother†, neither the one nor the other.

For as for me is lever non ne lother,
I am withholden yet with neyther nother.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 192.

neither (nē′ᵺėr or nī′ᵺėr), conj. [< ME. neither, neyther, etc., nawther, nowther, nouther, nother, etc., contr. also nor, which now prevails as the second form in the correlation neither . . . nor; < neither, a. and pron., being the same as either with the negative prefixed: see neither, a. and pron.] 1. Not either; not in either case: a disjunctive conjunction (the negative of either), preceding one of a series of two or more alternative clauses, and correlative with nor (or, formerly, neither or ne) before the following clause or clauses.

Neyther with engyne ne with lore.
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 565.

Whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come. Mat. xii. 32.

And feast your eyes and ears
Neither with dogs nor bears.
B. Jonson, Masque of Owls.

Abul Hassan spared neither age, nor rank, nor sex.
Irving, Granada, p. 61.

2. Not in any case; in no case; not at all: used adverbially for emphasis at the end of the last clause, when this already contains a negative. This usage is no longer sanctioned by good authorities, either being now employed. See either, conj., 2.

If the men be both nought, then prayers be both like. For neither hath the one lyst to pray, nor thother neither.
Sir T. More, Cumfort against Tribulation (1573), fol. 44.

I saw Mark Antony offer him a crown; yet 'twas not a crown neither, 'twas one of these coronets.
Shak., J. C., i. 2. 238.

I never was thought to want manners, nor modesty neither. Fielding.

3. And not; nor yet.

The judgments of God are for ever unchangeable; neither is he wearied by the long process of time.
Raleigh, Hist. World, Pref., p. vii.

Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it.
Gen. iii. 3.

Neither here nor there. See here[1].—Neither off nor on. See on.

neive[1] (nēv), n. A variant of neaf.

neive[2]†, n. See neife.

neivie-nick-nack (nē′vi-nik′nak), n. [A loose alliterative formula; < neive, neaf, fist, + nick-nack.] A game played by or with children in Scotland and the north of Ireland. A coin, button, nut, or other small object is concealed in the fist. Both fists tightly closed are whirled round each other, while the rime given below is repeated. The object is forfeited to the child who guesses in which fist it is held. [Scotch.]

Neivie, neivie, nick-nack,
Which hand will you tak'?
Tak' the right, tak' the wrang,
I'll beguile you if I can. Scotch rime.

nekket, n. A Middle English form of neck.

Nélaton's line, probe. See line[2], probe.

nelavan, n. Same as negro lethargy (which see, under lethargy[1]).

nellen†, v. See nill[1].

Nelumbium (nē-lum′bi-um), n. [NL. (A. L. de Jussieu, 1789), < Nelumbo.] 1. Same as Nelumbo.—2. [l. c.] In decorative art, the lotus-flower represented conventionally, especially when supporting the figure of a divine personage. See lotus.

Nelumbo (nē-lum′bō), n. [NL. (Hermann, 1689), < nelumbo, its name in Ceylon.] 1. A genus of water-lilies, forming the tribe Nelumboneæ in the family Nymphæaceæ, known by the broadly obconical receptacle. There are two species, plants with creeping rootstocks in shallow water, the large bluish-green centrally peltate leaves on thick stalks, commonly projecting from the water, the solitary flower Water-chinkapin (Nelumbo lutea).

a, the fruiting receptacle; b, a stamen; c, a fruit.

very large. N. Nelumbo, the nelumbo of tropical and subtropical Asia and Australia, the Pythagorean or sacred bean of the ancients, has the flowers deep rose-colored with white and blue cultivated varieties. (See lotus, 1, and arrowroot.) N. lutea, the American nelumbo, water-chinkapin, or wankapin, with leaves of circular outline sometimes 2 feet in diameter, the flowers 5 to 10 inches broad with papery yellowish petals, abounds in the waters of the interior and southern United States. See water-chinkapin. 2. [l. c.] A plant of this genus.

Nemachilus (nem-a-kī′lus), n. [NL., < Gr. νῆμα, a thread (< νεῖν, spin: see needle), + χεῖλος, a lip.] A genus of cobitid fishes or loaches having barbels on the lips and no suborbital spine, as the common European N. barbatulus. See cut under loach.

Nemæan, a. See Nemean.

Nemalieæ (nem-ā-li-ē′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Nemalion + -eæ.] A subfamily of florideous algæ, typified by the genus Nemalion.

Nemalion (nē-mā′li-on), n. [NL. (Duby, 1830), so called from the cylindrical solid fronds; irreg. < Gr. νῆμα, a thread.] A small genus of marine algæ, typical of the subfamily Nemalieæ, with repeatedly dichotomous gelatinous fronds. N. multifidum is the most common and widely diffused species; it has brownish-purple lubricous fronds, from 2 to 8 inches long.

nemalite (nem′a-līt), n. [< Gr. νῆμα, a thread, + λίθος, a stone.] The fibrous variety of brucite, or native hydrate of magnesium. It occurs in slender fibers, which are elastic, sometimes curved, and easily separated; the color is white with a shade of yellow, the luster highly silky.

nemathece (nem′a-thēs), n. [< nemathecium.] Same as nemathecium.

nemathecial (nem-a-thē′sial), a. [< nemathecium + -al.] Of or pertaining to the nemathecium: as, the nemathecial filaments.

nemathecium (nem-a-thē′si-um), n.; pl. nemathecia (-ä). [< Gr. νῆμα, a thread, + θήκιον, dim. of θήκη, a case or receptacle: see theca.] A wart-like elevation developed on the surface of the thallus of some of the higher algæ (Florideæ), and ordinarily containing clusters of tetraspores mixed with barren hyphæ or paraphyses: but in some forms the antheridia and cystocarps are also produced in similar protuberances.

nemathelminth (nem-a-thel'minth), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Nemathelminthes. Also nemathelminthic.

II. n. A member of the Nemathelminthes.

Nemathelmintha (nem″a-thel-min'thä), n. pl. [NL.] Same as Nemathelminthes.

Nemathelminthes (nem″a-thel-min'thēz), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. νῆμα (νηματ-), thread, + ἕλμινς (ἑλμινθ-), worm.] A class of Vermes, including nematoid worms and certain related forms; the roundworms or threadworms. They are round or cylindric worms, sometimes extremely slender and filiform or thread-like, from less than an inch to several feet in length, found everywhere, and mostly parasitic (endoparasitic). Those that are never parasitic are generally of very minute size. Some are parasitic in the larval state, and free when adult; in others this is reversed. The body is not truly segmental, though the cuticle may be ringed. The class is chiefly made up of the Nematoidea: it includes, however, the Acanthocephala (Echinorhynchidæ), and formerly the Chætognatha (Sagitta) were added. The term is sometimes used synonymously with Nematoidea. See cuts under Nematoidea, Acanthocephala, and Sagitta.

nemathelminthic (nem-a-thel-min'thik), a. [< nemathelminth + -ic.] Same as nemathelminth.

Nematistiidæ (nem″a-tis-tī'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Nematistius + -idæ.] A family of acanthopterygian fishes, represented by the genus Nematistius. The body is oblong, covered with scales, and having a continuous lateral line; the head is compressed, and the mouth obliquely cleft; the eyes are lateral and the opercular bones unarmed; there are 2 dorsal fins, the first with 8 spines, most of which are elongate and filamentous; the anal is moderately long, with 3 spines; the ventrals have a spine with 5 rays, the innermost of which is composed of many parallel branches; and the caudal is furcate.

Nematistius (nem-a-tis'ti-us), n. [NL., prop. Nemathistius*, < Gr. νῆμα (νηματ-), thread, + ἱστός, web: see histoid.] The typical genus of Nematistiidæ, so called from the thready extension of the spines of the first dorsal fin. There is only one species, N. pectoralis.

nematoblast (nem'a-tō-blast), n. [< Gr. νῆμα (νηματ-), a thread, + βλαστός, a germ.] Same as spermatoblast. Sertoli.

nematocalycine (nem″a-tō-kal'i-sin), a. [< nematocalyx (-calyc-) + -ine[1].] Pertaining to or having the character of a nematocalyx.

nematocalyx (nem a-tō-kā'liks), n.; pl. nematocalyxes, nematocalyces (-kā'lik-sez, -kal'i-sēz). [NL., < Gr. νῆμα (νηματ-), thread, + κάλυξ, calyx: see calyx.] A calyx of some hydrozoans, as Plumularidæ, containing nematocysts.

Nematocera (nem-a-tos'e-rä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of nematocerus: see nematocerous.] A suborder or section of Diptera, containing the numerous insects known as gnats, midges, mosquitos, crane-flies, gall-flies, etc.: so called from the long thready antennæ. These organs are usually many-jointed, with from 6 to 16 joints, most of which are alike and often plumose or setose; and the maxillary palpi are often long, 4- or 5-jointed. See Nemoce a.

nematocerous (nem-a-tos'e-rus), a. [< NL. nematocerus, < Gr. νῆμα (νηματ-), thread, + κέρας, horn: see ceras.] Having long or thready antennæ, as a dipterous insect; of or pertaining to the Nematocera; nemocerous.

nematocyst (nem'a-tō-sist), n. [< Gr. νῆμα (νηματ-), a thread, + κύστις, bladder, bag: see cyst.] A thread-cell or lasso-cell; a cnidocell or cnida; one of the organs of offense and defense

Tentacle and Nematocysts of Athorybia.

1, tentacle, with A, peduncle; B, involucrum of C, the sacculus, with D, its filaments; d, ectoderm; e, endoderm; f, f, f, nematocysts; 2, two separate nematocysts, enlarged, the lower one a, with its filament c, projected from the sheath b.

peculiar to cœlenterates, as jellyfishes, by means of which they sting. See cuts under cnida, Actinozoa, and Willsia.

nematocystic (nem″a-tō-sis'tik), a. [< nematocyst + -ic.] Pertaining to or having the character of a nematocyst; cnidarian.

Nematoda (nem-a-tō'dä), n. pl. [NL., irreg. for Nematodea, Nematoidea: see nematoid.] Same as Nematoidea.

nematode (nem'a-tōd), a. and n. [< Gr. νηματώδης, thread-like: see nematoid.] Same as nematoid.

Nematodea (nem-a-tō'dē-ä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. νηματώδης, thread-like: see nematoid.] Same as Nematoidea.

Nematodonteæ (nem″a-tō-don'tē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. νῆμα (νηματ-), a thread, + ὀδούς (ὀδοντ-), = E. tooth, + -eæ.] A division of mosses in which the teeth of the peristome are not provided with transverse septa: opposed to the Arthrodonteæ, in which the teeth are transversely septate.

nematogen, nematogene (nem'a-tō-jen, -jēn), n. [< NL. nematogenus: see nematogenous.] An adult form of Dicyema which gives rise to vermiform embryos: contradistinguished from rhombogen. See cut under Dicyema.

Nematogena (nem-a-toj'e-nä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of nematogenus: see nematogenous.] Those nematogenous Dicyemida which give rise to vermiform embryos, as distinguished from Rhombigena, which produce infusoriform embryos. See cut under Dicyema.

nematogenic (nem″a-tō-jen'ik), a. Same as nematogenous. Encyc. Brit., XVIII. 259.

nematogenous (nem-a-toj'e-nus), a. [< NL. nematogenus, < Gr. νῆμα (νηματ-), thread, + -γενής, producing: see -gen.] Producing vermiform embryos, as a nematoid worm; having the characters of a nematogen.

Thus the nematogenous Dicyema gives rise by a gamogenetic process to new Dicyemas.

Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 560.

Nematoglossata (nem″a-tō-glo-sā'tä), n. pl. [NL.] Same as Nemoglossata.

nematognath (nem'a-tog-nath), a. and n. [< NL. nematognathus*, < Gr. νῆμα (νηματ-), thread, + γνάθος, jaw.] I. a. Having barbels on the jaws, as a catfish; specifically, of or pertaining to the Nematognathi.

II. n. A member of the Nematognathi; any catfish.

Nematognathi (nem-a-tog'nā-thī), n. pl. [NL., pl. of nematognathus*: see nematognath.] An order of teleost fishes in which the supramaxillary bones are lateral and short or rudimentary, and covered with skin which forms barbels at each corner of the mouth, whence the name; the nematognaths or catfishes. The intermaxillaries are closely apposed to the ethmoid and immovably fixed; there is no subopercular; the four anterior vertebræ are coalesced into a single piece; and elements are detached to form bones which connect the air-bladder with the organ of hearing. Nematognaths have no true scales; they are either naked or have appendages developed as plates on all or a part of the body. About 800 species are known; they are specially numerous in tropical waters, both fresh and salt. By some authors all have been referred to one family, Siluridæ; by others from 8 to 12 families are admitted. They are most closely related to plectognathous fishes, as the characinids and cyprinoids. The two most prominent families are Siluridæ proper and Loricariidæ. See cuts under Siluridæ and Loricaria.

nematognathous (nem-a-tog'nā-thus), a. [< NL. nematognathus*.] Same as nematognath.

nematoid (nem'a-toid), a. and n. [< Gr. νηματοειδής*, contr. νηματώδης, thread-like, thready, fibrous, filamentous, < νῆμα (νηματ-), thread, + εἶδος, form.] I. a. Thread-like, as a worm. (a) In zoöl., nemathelminth; of or pertaining to the Nematoidea. (b) In algol., thread-like or filamentous: applied to certain filamentous algæ.

II. n. A threadworm, hairworm, roundworm, or pinworm.

Also nematode, nematoidean.

Nematoidea (nem-a-toi'dē-ä), n. pl. [NL.: see Nematoda.] An order of Nemathelminthes, or class of Vermes, having a mouth and an alimentary canal and separate sexes, and being usually parasitic; the nematoid worms; the roundworms and threadworms. The name was introduced by Rudolphi for worms previously known under the name of Ascarides, a term afterward used in a much restricted sense. Most of these worms are endoparasitic at one or another stage of their life or during the whole of it; those which are not are mostly of minute size. There are several distinct families, and most of them have popular names. Thus, the Ascaridæ contain the roundworms and pinworms of the human rectum. The Strongylidæ or strongles are parasites of various parts of the body, like the Trichinidæ or measles of pork. The Filariidæ are the guinea-worms. The Gordiidæ are the horsehair-worms, found in ponds and brooks and in the bodies of insects. Anguillulidæ are the little creatures known as vinegar-eels. Some nematoids are marine. In Cuvier's system, in which the Nematoidea are the first order of Entozoa, they included the lernæan crustaceans. In a late arrangement they are made the fourth phylum or main division of cœlomatous animals, and divided into three classes, called Eunematoidea, Chætosomaria (with genera Chætosoma and Rhabdogaster), and Chætognatha (Sagitta and Spadella). Also Nematoda, Nematodea, Nematodes, Nematoida. See cut in next column, and cuts under Oxyuris, Filaria, and Gordius.

A Threadworm (Anguillula brevispinus).

I, male; II, female; III, female genital organs; IV, seminal corpuscles. A, anus; D, unicellular cutaneous glands at anal end; F, fatty-looking gland; G, sexual aperture; S, seminal corpuscles; T, testis; a, esophagus; a′, chitinized oral capsule; c, gastric, and d, rectal parts of alimentary canal; g, g′, anterior and posterior thickenings with their commissures; Ov, ovarium; r, dilatation of uterus, serving as a receptaculum seminis.

nematoidean (nem-a-toi'dē-an), a. and n. [< Nematoidea + -an.] Same as nematoid.

Nematoneura† (nem″a-tō-nū'rä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. νῆμα (νηματ-), a thread, + νεῦρον, a sinew, nerve: see nerve.] A division of animals proposed by Owen for the higher Radiata of Cuvier, in which a nervous system is apparent. The group included the echinoderms, rotifers, polyzoans, and cœlelminths.

nematoneurous (nem″a-tō-nū'rus), a. Of or pertaining to the Nematoneura.

Nematophora (nem-a-tof'ō-rä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. νῆμα (νηματ-), thread, + -φόρος, < φέρειν = E. bear[1].] A prime division of Cœlentera, containing all those which have thread-cells or stinging-hairs; the nematophorans, nematophorous cœlenterates, or Cnidariæ: distinguished from Porifera or sponges. The name is a synonym of Cœlentera in the usual and current sense of that term, as covering the Anthozoa, Hydrozoa, and Ctenophora. In some arrangements, as that of F. R. Lankester, Nematophora are a prime division or phylum of animals, with four classes: (1) Hydromedusæ, (2) Scaphomedusæ, (3) Actinozoa, and (4) Ctenophora. Also called Cnidaria, Epithelaria.

nematophoran (nem-a-tof'ō-ran), a. and n. I. a. Same as nematophorous, 2.

II. n. A member of the Nematophora; a cnidarian or cœlenterate having thread-cells or stinging-organs.

nematophore (nem'a-tō-fōr), n. [< Gr. νῆμα (νηματ-), a thread, + -φόρος, < φέρειν = E. bear[1].] A tentacle-like appendage of the cœnosarc of the polypary of plumularians, sertularians, and other hydromedusans, containing numerous thread-cells or nematocysts at its extremity.

nematophorous (nem-a-tof'ō-rus), a. [As nematophore + -ous.] 1. Of or pertaining to a nematophore.—2. Pertaining to the Nematophora, or having their characters; cnidarian. Also nematophoran.

Nematophyceæ (nem″a-tō-fī'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. νῆμα (νηματ-), a thread, + φῦκος, a seaweed, + -eæ.] A former order of multicellular chlorophyllaceous algæ, consisting of single branched or unbranched filament of cells, propagating by oöspores or zoögonidia. It contained, according to Rabenhorst, the families Ulvaceæ, Sphæropleeæ, Confervaceæ, Œdogoniaceæ, Ulothricheæ, Croölepidieæ, and Chætophoreæ. Later algologists have made different disposition of several of these families, and the name is no longer used.

Nematophycus (nem″a-tō-fī'kus), n. [NL., < Gr. νῆμα (νηματ-), thread, + φῦκος, a seaweed.] The name given by Carruthers to a plant first found in the Devonian of Gaspé in Canada, by Dawson, and named by him Prototaxites and considered to belong to the Coniferæ, although differing in certain important respects. The same plant, to which Dawson later gave the name of Nematophyton, was examined by Carruthers and placed among the Algæ, he considering it an anomalous alga and one which it was not possible to correlate with certainty with any known alga. Later (in 1875) the same plant was discovered by Hicks much lower in the geological series, namely, in the Denbighshire grits (rocks belonging to the Upper Llandovery group, not far above the limit between Upper and Lower Silurian). The specimens from this position have been identified with the Nematophycus of Carruthers (the Prototaxites of Dawson) by Etheridge, who considers it as unquestionably forming a portion of a colossal seaweed, whose habits resemble those of the North Pacific species of the genus Nereocystis and the arborescent Lessoniæ.

Nematophyton (nem-a-tof'i-ton), n. See Nematophycus.

Nematopoda (nem-a-top'ō-dä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. νῆμα (νηματ-), thread, + ποῦς (ποδ-) = E. foot.] De Blainville's name (1825) of the cirripeds, as the first class of his Malentozoaria, contrasted with a second class Polyplaxiphora, containing the chitons: so called from the thready legs of barnacles or acorn-shells. The Nematopoda were divided into two families, Lepadicea and Balanidea. See cuts under Lepadidæ and Balanus.

Nematoscolices (nem″a-tō-skol′i-sēz), n. pl. [NL., prop. Nematoscoleces*, < Gr. νῆμα (νηματ-), thread, + σκώληξ, a worm: see scolex.] A superordinal division, proposed by Huxley for the Nematoidea and their allies, which are as remarkable for the general absence of cilia as are the Trichoscolices for their presence, and which are further distinguished by the nature of their ecdysis and by the disposition of their nervous, muscular, and water-vascular systems.

nematoscolicine (nem″a-tō-skol′i-sin), a. Pertaining to the Nematoscolices, or having their characters.

nematozoöid (nem″a-tō-zō′oid), n. [< Gr. νῆμα (νηματ-), thread, + E. zoöid.] A stinging-tentacle or -filament of a siphonophore regarded as a zoöid.

Nematura (nem-a-tū′rä), n. [NL., < Gr. νῆμα (νηματ-), thread, + οὐρά, tail.] In zoöl., a name of various genera. (a) In ornith.: (1) A genus of sand-grouse: a synonym of Syrrhaptes. Fischer, 1812. (2) A genus of Asiatic warblers, containing such as N. cyanura, N. rufilata, etc. In this sense originally Nemura. Hodgson, 1844. (b) In conch., a genus of rissoid gastropods, subsequently named Stenothyra. Benson, 1836. (c) In entom., a genus of insects of the family Perlidæ (order Plecoptera). The body is depressed, and the abdomen ends in two long filaments; the labial palpi are short and approximate; and the second tarsal joint is very short. The larvæ are aquatic. The genus is a large one, and the species are wide-spread. They are known as willow-flies. Originally written Nemoura. Latreille, 1796. See cut under Perla.

nem. con. An abbreviation of nemine contradicente.

Nemeæ (nē′mē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Fries), < Gr. νῆμα, a thread, + -eæ.] Cryptogams: so called by Fries in allusion to the supposed fact that they germinate by means of a protruded thread, without indications of cotyledons, a character which does not hold good in all. See Cryptogamia.

Nemean (nē′mē-an or nē-mē′an), a. [< L. Nemēus or Nemēus, also Nemæus, incorrectly Nemæus, < Gr. Νέμεος, Νέμειος (neut. pl. Νέμεια, the Nemean games), also Νεμεαῖος, Νεμειαῖος, pertaining to Nemea, < Νεμέα (> L. Neméa), a valley in Argolis in Greece, appar. 'pasture-land,' < νέμος, a wooded pasture, < νέμειν, pasture.] Of or pertaining to Nemea, a valley and city situated in the northern part of Argolis, Greece, held by Argos during almost the whole of the historical age of ancient Greece. In the valley was the wood in which, according to tradition, Hercules slew the Nemean lion, which feat is counted one of his twelve labors.

> My fate cries out,
> And makes each petty artery in this body
> As hardy as the Nemean lion's nerve.
> Shak., Hamlet, i. 4. 83.

Nemean games, one of the four great national festivals of the ancient Greeks (the others being the Olympian, Pythian, and Isthmian games). These games were celebrated at Nemea in the second and fourth years of each Olympiad, near the temple of the Nemean Zeus, some (Doric) columns of which are still standing. According to the mythological story, the games were instituted in memory of the death of the young hero Archemoros or Opheltes by the bite of a serpent as the expedition of "the Seven against Thebes" was passing through the place. The victor's garland at the Nemean games was made of parsley.

nemelt, a. An obsolete form of nimble.

Nemertea (nē-mėr′tē-ä), n. pl. [NL., < Nemertes, q. v.] A class of Vermes having a long straight alimentary canal, an anus, a protrusile proboscis, and usually distinct sexes; the nemertean or nemertine worms. They were formerly classed with the platyhelminths, and known as the rhynchocœlous turbellarians; but they are more nearly related to annelids. They have well-developed muscular, blood-vascular, and nervous systems. Most of the species are dicœcious, and some are viviparous. There are commonly ciliated pits on the head. The object known as a pilidium is the free-swimming larva of a nemertean. These worms vary greatly in general outward aspect, in size, and in habits. Some are minute, others very long. (See Lineidæ.) They live for the most part in the sea, but some live in the mud or on land, and some are parasitic. The Nemertea are often divided into two orders, called Anopla and Enopla according as the proboscis is armed with stylets or unarmed. Of the latter order is the family Nemertidæ (or Amphiporidæ); the Lineidæ and Cephalothricidæ are anoplean. Another division is into Hoplonemertea, Schizonemertea, and Palæonemertea. See Rhynchocœla, and cuts under pilidium and proctucha. Also written Nemertoidea.

nemertean (nē-mėr′tē-an), a. and n. [< Nemertea + -an.] I. a. Pertaining to the Nemertea, or having their characters.

II. n. A worm of the class Nemertea.

Nemertes (nē-mėr′tēz), n. [NL., < Gr. Νημέρτης, the name of a Nereid, < νημερτής, unerring, infallible, < νη- priv. (see ne) + ἁμαρτάνειν, miss, err.] A genus of nemertean worms, to which different limits have been given. (a) The genus also called Borlasia. (b) The genus also called Lineus.

nemertian (nē-mėr′ti-an), a. and n. [< Nemertea + -ian.] Same as nemertean.

nemertidan (nē-mėr′ti-dan), a. and n. [< Nemertea + -id[2] + -an.] Same as nemertean.

nemertine (nē-mėr′tin), a. and n. [< Nemertes + -ine[1].] Same as nemertean.

nemertoid (nē-mėr′toid), a. and n. [< Nemertes + -oid.] I. a. Resembling a nemertean; pertaining to the Nemertea, or having their characters; nemertean; nemertine.

II. n. A nemertean.

Nemesic (nē-mes′ik), a. [< Nemesis + -ic.] Having or exhibiting the character of Nemesis; fatal, in the sense of necessary; retributive; avenging.

Nemesis (nem′e-sis), n. [< L. Nemesis, < Gr. Νέμεσις, a goddess of justice and divine retribution, < νέμειν, deal out, distribute, dispense: see nome[4], nome[5], etc.] 1. In Gr. myth., a goddess personifying allotment, or the divine distribution to every man of his precise share of fortune, good and bad. It was her especial function to see that the proper proportion of individual prosperity was preserved, and that any one who became too prosperous or was too much uplifted by his prosperity should be reduced or punished; she thus came to be regarded as the goddess of divine retribution. Sometimes Nemesis was represented as winged and with the wheel of fortune, or borne in a chariot drawn by griffins, and confounded with Adrasteia, the goddess of the inevitable.

Hence — 2. Retributive justice.

> Is Talbot slain, the Frenchmen's only scourge,
> Your kingdom's terror and black Nemesis?
> Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iv. 7. 78.

Against him invokes the terrible Nemesis of wit and satire. Bushnell, Nature and the Supernat., v.

3. [NL.] In zoöl., a genus of crustaceans. Roux, 1827. — 4. The 128th planetoid, discovered by Watson in 1872.

Nemestrinidæ (nem-es-trin′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Nemestrinus + -idæ.] A family of dipterous insects founded by Macquart in 1834 upon the genus Nemestrinus. They are distinguished by the very numerous cross-veins of the wings, which thus appear almost reticulate. They are medium-sized flies, slightly hairy, of dark-brown or black color with lighter bands or spots, and most of them have a very long proboscis. It is a small family of about 100 known species, of which scarcely a dozen inhabit Europe and North America.

Nemestrinus (nem-es-trī′nus), n. [NL.] A genus of dipterous insects founded by Latreille in 1802, formerly placed in Tabanidæ, now made typical of Nemestrinidæ.

Nemichthyidæ (nem-ik-thī′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Nemichthys + -idæ.] A family of deep-sea apodal or murænoid fishes, typified by the genus Nemichthys. The body is much elongated, and scaleless; the head is long with greatly prolonged jaws, like beaks, armed with teeth of various kinds; the branchial apertures are lateral; the anus is near the breast; and the tail is thread-like. The family is composed of 8 or 9 species, represented by 4 genera. All inhabit the deep sea, and with one exception are extremely rare. Some are known as snipe-fishes.

nemichthyoid (nē-mik′thi-oid), a. and n. [< Nemichthys + -oid.] I. a. Of or having the characteristics of the Nemichthyidæ.

II. n. A fish of the family Nemichthyidæ.

Nemichthys (nē-mik′this), n. [NL., < Gr. νῆμα, thread, + ἰχθύς, fish.] A genus of apodal fishes having a thread-like tail, typical of the family Nemichthyidæ. N. scolopaceus is a deep-sea form known as snipe-fish. Richardson, 1848.

nemine contradicente (nem′i-nē kon″tra-di-sen′tē). [L.: nemine, abl. of nemo, nobody; contradicente, ppr. abl. of contradicere, contradict.] No one contradicting or dissenting; unanimously. Abbreviated nem. con.

nemlyt, adv. An obsolete variant of nimbly.

nemnet, v. t. See neven.

Nemocera (nē-mos′e-rä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. νῆμα, a thread, + κέρας, horn.] In Latreille's system, the first family of dipterous insects, represented by the genera Tipula and Culex of Linnæus, or the crane-flies, midges, gnats, etc. It is equivalent to the modern suborder Nematocera.

nemoceran (nē-mos′e-ran), a. and n. I. a. Same as nemocerous.

II. n. A dipterous insect of the suborder Nemocera.

nemocerous (nē-mos′e-rus), a. [< NL. nemocerus*, < Gr. νῆμα, a thread, + κέρας, a horn.] Pertaining to the Nemocera, or having their characters; having filamentous antennæ; nematocerous.

nemocyst (nem′ō-sist), n. Same as nematocyst. Gegenbaur.

Nemoglossata (nem″ō-glo-sā′tä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. νῆμα, a thread, + γλῶσσα, Attic γλῶττα, the tongue.] A tribe of hymenopterous insects, including those bees which have a long filiform tongue. Also Nematoglossata.

nemoglossate (nem-ō-glos′āt), a. [< Gr. νῆμα, a thread, + γλῶσσα, tongue.] Having a thready or filamentous tongue, as a bee.

Nemopanthes (nem-ō-pan′thēz), n. [NL. (Rafinesque, 1819), so called in allusion to the thread-like flower-stalk or "foot-stalk"; irreg. < Gr. νῆμα, a thread, + πους, = E. foot, + ἄνθος, flower.] A genus of dicotyledonous shrubs, family Aquifoliaceæ, with one-flowered pedicels; the mountain holly. The single species is common in damp shade in the northern United States and Canada. It bears small greenish flowers with distinct linear petals, and red berry-like drupes.

Nemophila (nē-mof′i-lä), n. [NL. (Nuttall), fem. of nemophilus*: see nemophilous.] A genus of ornamental plants of the gamopetalous family Hydrophyllaceæ and the tribe Hydrophylleæ, known by the included stamens and the calyx with appendages; the grove-love. There are about 10 species, natives of North America, chiefly of California; they are tender hairy annuals with dissected leaves and blue, white, or spotted bell-shaped flowers. They form beautiful garden-plants, sometimes called Californian bluebell. Among the species is N. insignis, with a pure-blue corolla an inch broad.

nemophilous (nē-mof′i-lus), a. [NL. nemophilus*, < Gr. νέμος, a wooded pasture, + φίλος, loving.] Fond of woods and groves; inhabiting woodland, as a bird or an insect.

Nemoræa (nem-ō-rē′ä), n. [NL. (R. Desvoidy, 1830), prob. < L. nemus (nemor-), a grove.] A genus of parasitic tachina-flies of medium or large size, quite bristly and blackish or gray, sometimes with the tip of the abdomen reddish-yellow. Their flight is remarkably swift. N. leucaniæ (Winthemia 4-pustulata) is the commonest parasite of the destructive army-worm, Leucania unipuncta, and often so abundant that scarcely one of these worms can be found unparasitized.

nemoral (nem′ō-ral), a. [= OF. nemoral, F. némoral = Sp. nemoral, < L. nemoralis, woody, sylvan, < nemus (nemor-), a wood, grove, prop. a wooded pasture, < Gr. νέμος, a pasture, a wooded pasture, < νέμειν, pasture: see nome[4], nome[5].] Of or pertaining to a wood or grove.

Nemorhædinæ (nem″ō-rē-dī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Nemorhædus + -inæ.] A group, conventionally regarded as a subfamily, of antelopes, composed of the genera Nemorhædus and Haplocerus or Oreamnos; the goat-antelopes. The former is Asiatic. The common Indian goral, N. goral, and the cambing-utan of Sumatra, N. sumatrensis, are representative species. The Rocky Mountain goat, Haplocerus montanus, is the corresponding American animal. Also Nemorhedinæ. See cuts under goral and Haplocerus.

nemorhædine (nem-ō-rē′din), a. Of or pertaining to the Nemorhædinæ.

Nemorhædus (nem-ō-rē′dus), n. [NL., < L. nemus (nemor-), a grove, + hædus, a kid.] A genus of Asiatic goat-antelopes, typical of the subfamily Nemorhædinæ; the gorals. The common species is N. goral of the Himalayas. The cambing-utan of Sumatra, N. sumatrensis, is placed in this genus or separated under Capricornis. Also Nemorhedus. See cut under goral.

nemoricole (nē-mor′i-kōl), a. [< L. nemus, a grove, + colere, inhabit.] Inhabiting groves.

nemoricoline (nem-ō-rik′ō-lin), a. [As nemoricole + -ine[1].] Same as nemoricole.

nemorose (nem′ō-rōs), a. [< L. nemorosus, woody, abounding in woods, also bushy, < nemus, a grove: see nemoral.] Full of woods or groves. Bailey.

nemorous (nem′ō-rus), a. [= OF. nemoreux = Pg. nemoroso, < L. nemorosus: see nemorose.] Woody; pertaining to a wood.

> Paradise itself was but a kind of nemorous temple, or sacred grove. Evelyn, Sylva, iv.

Nemours blue. See blue.

nempnet (nemp′ne), v. t. See neven.

nengeta, n. [S. Amer.] A South American tæniopterine flycatcher, Tæniоptera nengeta. It is of an ashy or cinereous black and white color, about 9 inches long, and inhabits the pampas. See Tæniоptera. Also called pepoaza.

nenia, nænia (nē′ni-ä), n.; pl. neniæ, næniæ (-ē). [< L. nenia, nænia, a dirge, a song of lamentation; according to Cicero (Leg. 2, 24), a Gr. word; but it is found only in LGr. νηνία, which is appar. < L.] A funeral song; an elegy.

nente†, a. An obsolete form of ninth.

nenteyn†, a. and n. An obsolete form of nineteen.

nenty†, a. and n. An obsolete form of ninety.

nenuphar (nen'ū-fär), n. [< F. nénuphar, nénufar = Sp. nenúfar, < Ar. nīnūfar, nīlūfar = Turk. nīlufer, < Pers. nīlufar, nīlupar, the water-lily. Cf. Nuphar.] The great white water-lily of Europe, Castalia alba. The name nenuphar has also been given to the yellow water-lily, Nymphæa lutea.

neo-. [L. neo-, etc., < Gr. νέος, new, young, recent, etc., = E. new: see new.] An element meaning 'new,' 'young,' 'recent,' used in many words of Greek origin or formation to denote that which is new, modern, recent, or innovating in character.

In the physical sciences cæno-, ceno- is used in a somewhat similar sense, and paleo-, palæo- is opposed to both neo- and ceno-.

Neoarctic (nē-ō-ärk'tik), a. Same as Nearctic.

neobiologist (nē″ō-bī-ol'ō-jist), n. [< Gr. νέος, new, + E. biologist.] A biologist of a new or a future school. Beall, Protoplasm, p. 24.

neoblastic (nē-ō-blas'tik), a. [< Gr. νέος, new, + βλαστός, a germ.] Having the character of a new growth, as any tissue appearing in parts where it did not before exist.

neo-Catholic (nē'ō-kath'ō-lik), a. New Catholic: applied (a) to a party in the Anglican Church which openly sympathizes with the Roman communion; (b) to the party of liberals in the French Church represented by Lamennais.

Neocene (nē'ō-sēn), a. and n. In geol., the later Tertiary, including the Miocene and Pliocene.

Neoceratodus (nē″ō-se-rat'ō-dus), n. [NL., < Gr. νέος, new, + NL. Ceratodus, q. v.] A genus of ceratodont fishes, established for the living representative of the family, the barramunda, N. forsteri or Ceratodus forsteri.

neo-Christian (nē-ō-kris'tyan), a. and n. [= F. néochrétien = Sp. neocristiano, < Gr. νέος, new, + Χριστιανός, LL. Christianus, Christian: see Christian.] I. a. Of, pertaining to, or professing neo-Christianity.

II. n. A professor of neo-Christianity; a rationalist.

neo-Christianity (nē″ō-kris-ti-an'i-ti), n. [< Gr. νέος, new, + LL. Christianita(t-)s, Christianity.] Rationalistic views in Christian theology; rationalism.

Neocomian (nē-ō-kō'mi-an), a. and n. [So called with ref. to Neuchâtel, in Switzerland (F., < L. novus, neut. novum, new, + castellum, a castle, ML. also a village); < Gr. νέος, new, + κώμη, a village.] In geol., a series of strata of Cretaceous age lying between the top of the Jurassic system and the Gault and taking its name from its great development in the neighborhood of Neuchâtel, Switzerland. In England this series is represented by two distinct types of strata. "In the southern counties from the Isle of Purbeck to the coast of Kent there occurs a thick series of fresh-water sands and clays termed the Wealden series. These strata pass up into a minor marine group known as the Lower Greensand. The Wealden beds form a fluviatile equivalent of the continental Neocomian formations, while the Lower Greensand represents the later marginal deposits of the Neocomian sea, which gradually usurped the place of the Wealden estuary. The second type, seen in the tract of country extending from Lincolnshire into Yorkshire, contains the deposits of deeper water forming the westward extension of an important series of marine formations which stretch for a long way into Central Europe." (Geikie, Text-book Geol., p. 1183.)

neocosmic (nē-ō-koz'mik), a. [< Gr. νέος, new, + κόσμος, the universe: see cosmos[1], cosmic.] Pertaining to the present condition and laws of the universe: specifically applied to the races of historic man.

Antediluvian men may, . . . in geology, be Pleistocene as distinguished from modern, or Palæocosmic as distinguished from Neocosmic.

Dawson, Origin of World, xiii.

neocracy (nē-ok'ra-si), n.; pl. neocracies (-siz). [< Gr. νέος, new, + -κρατία, < κρατεῖν, rule.] Government by new or inexperienced officials; the rule or supremacy of upstarts. Imp. Dict.

neodamode (nē-od'a-mōd), n. [< Gr. νεοδαμώδης, lately made a citizen, or one of the δῆμος (at Sparta), < νέος, new, + δᾶμος, Doric form of δῆμος, the people, the body of citizens, + εἶδος, form (cf. δημώδης, popular).] In ancient Sparta, a person newly admitted to citizenship; a newly enfranchised helot.

neoëmbryo (nē-ō-em'bri-ō), n. [NL., < Gr. νέος, new, + ἔμβρυον, embryo.] The earliest of the ciliated stages of a metazoan embryo, in which it is similar to a planula, a trochosphere, a pilidium, etc.

neoëmbryonic (nē-ō-em-bri-on'ik), a. [< neoembryo(n-) + -ic.] Pertaining to a neoëmbryo.

Neofiber (nē-of'i-bėr), n. [NL., < Gr. νέος, new, + NL. Fiber: see Fiber[2].] A subgenus of American meadow-mice, of the subfamily Microtinæ, containing a single species, Microtus (Neofiber) alleni, which resembles a diminutive muskrat with a round tail.

Neogæa (nē-ō-jē'ą), n. [NL., < Gr. νέος, new, + γαῖα, the earth.] In zoögeog., the New World or western hemisphere, considered with reference to the geographical distribution of plants and animals: opposed to Palæogæa.

Neogæan (nē-ō-jē'an), a. [< Neogæa + -an.] Of or pertaining to Neogæa; indigenous to or autochthonous in the New World; American.

neogamist (nē-og'a-mist), n. [< Gr. νεόγαμος, one lately married (< νέος, new, + γαμεῖν, marry), + -ist.] A person recently married. Bailey, 1727.

Neogene (nē'ō-jēn), a. [< Gr. νεογενής, new-born, < νέος, new, + -γενης, -born: see -gen.] Newborn; later developed: an epithet sometimes applied to the later Tertiary as distinguishing it from the older Tertiary, which latter would embrace the divisions now denominated Eocene and Oligocene. This change has been advocated for the alleged reason that such a classification of the Tertiary would be more in accordance with the results of paleontological investigations than that at present generally adopted. Also Neogenic.

neogrammarian (nē″ō-gra-mā'ri-an), n. [< Gr. νέος, new, + E. grammarian; tr. G. jung-grammatiker.] An adherent of a school of students of comparative Indo-European grammar (since about 1875), who insist especially upon the importance and strictness of the laws of phonetic change.

neogrammatical (nē″ō-gra-mat'i-kal), a. [< Gr. νέος, new, + E. grammatical.] Relating to the neogrammarians, or to their tenets.

neography (nē-og'ra-fi), n. [= F. néographie = Sp. neografía, < Gr. νεόγραφος, newly written, < νέος, new, + γράφειν, write.] A new system of writing or spelling.

neohellenism (nē-ō-hel'en-izm), n. [< Gr. νέος, new, + E. Hellenism.] A new or revived Hellenism; the body of Hellenic ideals as existing in more or less modified form in modern times; the cult of Hellenic letters and the pursuit of Hellenic ideals characterizing the Renaissance, especially in Italy.

A genuine instance of what we may call the neohellenism of the Renaissance. J. A. Symonds, Italy and Greece, p. 87.

neoid (nē'oid), n. [Irreg. < Gr. νέειν, swim, + εἶδος, form.] A name given by Rankine to a family of mathematical curves for water-lines of vessels, which he deduced as being those of least resistance to propulsion.

neo-Kantian (nē-ō-kan'ti-an), a. [< Gr. νέος, new, + E. Kantian.] Pertaining to the doctrines of the followers and successors of Kant.

neokoros (nē-ok'ō-ros), n. [< Gr. νεωκόρος, < νεώς, ναός, a temple, + κορεῖν, sweep.] In Gr. antiq., the guardian of a temple: in some cases merely a janitor or temple-sweeper, in others a priestly officer of much dignity, having charge of the treasures dedicated in the temple. Under the Roman imperial dominion the title was accorded by the senate to certain cities regarded as custodians of the ceremonial worship of Rome and of the emperor.

neo-Latin (nē-ō-lat'in), a. [= F. néo-Latin = Sp. Pg. It. neolatino, < Gr. νέος, new, + L. Latinus, Latin: see Latin.] 1. New Latin: an epithet applied to the Romance languages, as having grown immediately out of the Latin.

M. Raynouard declares that he expounds the numerous affinities between the six neo-Latin languages: namely, 1, the language of the Troubadours; 2, the Catalonian; 3, Spanish; 4, Portuguese; 5, Italian; 6, French.

Edinburgh Rev.

2. Latin as written by authors of modern times.

neolite (nē'ō-līt), n. [< Gr. νέος, new, + λίθος, a stone.] A silicate of aluminium and magnesium, dark-green in color, owing to the presence of protoxid of iron. The mineral is massive or fibrous, the fibers being in stellate groups.

Neolithic (nē-ō-lith'ik), a. [< Gr. νέος, new, + λίθος, stone (cf. neolite), + -ic.] Belonging to the period or epoch of highly finished and polished stone implements. The period so noted is a division of the "stone age," and the term is especially applicable to northwestern Europe, where there is, on the whole, a chronological advance from a time when coarser implements were used (the Paleolithic age) to one in which a much more perfect standard of workmanship prevailed (the Neolithic). See Paleolithic.

neologian (nē-ō-lō'ji-an), a. and n. [< neolog-y + -ian.] I. a. Pertaining to neology.

II. n. One who introduces needless innovations in language or thought: specifically applied to a modern school of rationalistic interpreters of Scripture. See neology.

neologic (nē-ō-loj'ik), a. [= F. néologique = Sp. neológico = Pg. It. neologico; < neolog-y + -ic.] Same as neological.

neological (nē-ō-loj'i-kal), a. [< neologic + -al.] Of or pertaining to neology; having the character of neology or neologism.

I seriously advise him [Dr. Johnson] to publish . . . a genteel neological dictionary, containing those polite, though perhaps not strictly grammatical, words and phrases commonly used, and sometimes understood, by the beau monde. Chesterfield, The World, No. 32.

neologically (nē-ō-loj'i-kal-i), adv. In a neological manner.

neologise, v. i. See neologize.

neologism (nē-ol'ō-jizm), n. [= F. néologisme = Sp. Pg. It. neologismo; as neolog-y + -ism.] 1. A new word or phrase, or a new use of a word.

Philologists have marked out . . . how ancient words were changed, and Norman neologisms introduced.

I. D'Israeli, Amen. of Lit., I. 133.

2. The use of new words, or of old words in new senses.

I learnt my complement of classic French (Kept pure of Balzac and neologism).

Mrs. Browning, Aurora Leigh, i.

3. A new doctrine.

neologist (nē-ol'ō-jist), n. [= F. néologiste = Sp. Pg. neologista; as neolog-y + -ist.] 1. One who introduces new words or phrases into a language.

A dictionary of barbarisms too might be collected from some wretched neologists, whose pens are now at work!

I. D'Israeli, Curios. of Lit., III. 347.

2. Same as neologian.

There sprung up among the Greeks a class of speculative neologists and rationalizing critics, called Sophists.

Bushnell, Nature and the Supernat., i.

neologistic (nē-ol-ō-jis'tik), a. [< neologist + -ic.] Relating to neology or neologists; neological.

neologistical (nē-ol-ō-jis'ti-kal), a. [< neologistic + -al.] Same as neologistic.

neologize (nē-ol'ō-jīz), v. i.; pret. and pp. neologized, ppr. neologizing. [< neolog-y + -ize.] 1. To introduce or use new terms, or new senses of old words.—2. To introduce or adopt rationalistic views in theology; introduce or adopt new theological doctrines.

Dr. Candlish lived to neologize on his own account.

Tulloch.

Also spelled neologise.

neology (nē-ol'ō-ji), n. [= F. néologie = Sp. neología = Pg. It. neologia, < Gr. νέος, new, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] 1. Innovation in language; the introduction of new words or new senses of old words.

Neology, or the novelty of words and phrases, is an innovation which, with the opulence of our present language, the English philologer is most jealous to allow.

I. D'Israeli, Curios. of Lit., III. 343.

2. The invention or introduction of new ideas or views.

They endeavour, by a sort of neology of their own, to confound all ideas of right and wrong.

Boothby, On Burke, p. 266.

3. Specifically, rationalistic views in theology.

neomembrane (nē-ō-mem'brān), n. [< Gr. νέος, new, + E. membrane.] A false membrane.

neomenia (nē-ō-mē'ni-ą), n. [= F. néoménie = Sp. neomenia = Pg. It. neomenia, < LL. neomenia, < Gr. νεομηνία, Attic νουμηνία, the time of new moon, the beginning of the month, < νέος, new, + μήνη, the moon, μήν, a month: see moon[1], month.] 1. The time of new moon; the beginning of the month.—2. In antiquity, a festival held at the time of the new moon.—3. [cap.] [NL.] A genus of animals of disputed characters and affinities, type of a family Neomeniidæ.

Neomenia carinata, natural size.

It has been made by Sars a group (Teleobranchiata) of opisthobranchiate mollusks; by Lankester a class (Scolecomorpha) and a superclass (Lipoglossa) of mollusks; by Von Jhering a class or phylum (Amphineura) of worms; and by some writers an order (Neomenioidea) of isopleurous gastropods. N. carinata is a worm-like organism found on the European coast of the North Atlantic, about an inch long, shaped like a pea-pod, of a grayish color with a rosy tint at one end, covered with small spines which give it a velvety appearance, with a retractile pharynx, a many-toothed lingual ribbon, the mouth reduced to a small slit, and the gills in tufts on each side of the anus. Also called Solenopus.

neomenian (nē-ō-mē′ni-an), a. and n. [< Neomenia + -an.] I. a. Pertaining to the Neomenia, or having their characters; neomenioid.

II. n. An animal of the genus Neomenia.

Neomeniidæ (nē″ō-mē-nī′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Neomenia + -idæ.] A family of mollusks, typified by the genus Neomenia. There is a second genus, Proneomenia, more elongate and vermiform. The family is also raised to ordinal rank, under the names Neomeniæ, Neomeniaria, and Neomenioidea.

neomenioid (nē-ō-mē′ni-oid), a. [< Neomenia + -oid.] Resembling the animals of the genus Neomenia; neomenian.

neomorphism (nē-ō-môr′fizm), n. [< Gr. νέος, new, + NL. morphia + -ism.] A new formation; development of a new or different form. Nature, XXXIX. 151.

Neomorphus (nē-ō-môr′fus), n. [NL., < Gr. νέος, new, + μορφή, form.] A notable genus of terrestrial cuckoos peculiar to South America, founded by Gloger in 1827. They have the bill and feet stout, the head crested, the tail long and graduated, the wings short and rounded, and the plumage of brilliant metallic hues. There are several species, about 18 inches long, as N. geoffroyi, N. salvini, and N. rufipennis. Also called Cultrides. Pucheran, 1851.

★neon (nē′on), n. [< Gr. νέον, new.] See the supplement.

neonism (nē′ō-nizm), n. [Irreg. < Gr. νέος (neuter νέον), new, + -ism.] A new word, phrase, or idiom. Worcester. [Rare.]

Neonomian† (nē-ō-nō′mi-an), n. and a. [< Gr. νέος, new, + νόμος, law: see *nome*4.] I. n. One who holds that the old or Mosaic law is abolished and that the gospel is a new law. See Neonomianism.

One that asserts the Old Law is abolished, and therein is a superlative Antinomian, but pleads for a New Law, and justification by the works of it, and therefore is a Neonomian. Neonomianism Unmasked (1692), quoted in [Blunt's Dict. of Sects, p. 365.

II. a. Relating to the Neonomians.

Neonomianism† (nē-ō-nō′mi-an-izm), n. [< Neonomian + -ism.] The doctrine that the gospel is a new law, and that faith and a partial obedience are accepted in place of the perfect obedience of the old moral law. These views were held by certain British dissenters about the end of the seventeenth century, and are said to have been held also by the Hopkinsians, etc.

neonomous (nē-on′ō-mus), a. [< Gr. νέος, new, + νόμος, law.] In biol., having a greatly and lately modified form or structure; new-fashioned, or specialized according to recent conditions of environment: specifically applied by S. Lovén to echinoids of the spatangoid group.

neontologist (nē-on-tol′ō-jist), n. [< neontology + -ist.] One who is versed in neontology.

neontology (nē-on-tol′ō-ji), n. [< Gr. νέος, new, + ὤν (ὀντ-), being, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The zoölogy of extant as distinguished from extinct animals; the science of living animals: opposed to paleontology.

The division of zoölogy into palæontology and neontology is one which is, no doubt, logically defensible. Nature, XXXIX. 364.

neonym (nē′ō-nim), n. [< Gr. νέος, new, + ὄνυμα, ὄνομα, name.] A new name. B. G. Wilder.

neonymy (nē-on′i-mi), n. [As neonym + -y (cf. synonymy).] The coining of names. B. G. Wilder, Jour. Nervous Diseases, xii. (1885).

neopaganism (nē-ō-pā′gan-izm), n. [< Gr. νέος, new, + E. paganism.] A revival or reproduction of paganism.

It [pre-Raphaelitism] has got mixed up with æstheticism, neo-paganism, and other such fantasies. J. M'Carthy, Hist. Own Times, V. 248.

neopaganize (nē-ō-pā′gan-īz), v. t.; pret. and pp. neopaganized, ppr. neopaganizing. [< Gr. νέος, new, + E. paganize.] To imbue with a new or revived paganism. Also neopaganise.

neophobia (nē-ō-fō′bi-ạ), n. [= Sp. neofobia = Pg. neophobia, < Gr. νέος, new, + -φοβία, < φέβεσθαι, fear.] Fear of novelty; abhorrence of what is new or unaccustomed; dislike of innovation.

In the student, curiosity takes the place of neophobia. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXIX. 782.

Neophron (nē′ō-fron), n. [NL., < Gr. νεόφρων, of childish mind or intelligence, < νέος, new, young, + φρήν, mind.] A genus of Old World vultures, technically characterized by the horizontal nostrils, and typified by the Egyptian vulture, Neophron percnopterus. This celebrated bird is about 2 feet long, and when adult is white, with black primaries, and rusty-yellowish neck-hackles extending up the occiput; the head is bare, with scanty down on the throat and a few loral feathers; the bill is horn-brown; the feet are whitish, and the irides reddish. The young are blackish-brown varied with fulvous. The bird is widely distributed in countries bordering the Mediterranean, and thence to Persia, India, and South Africa. One of its many names is rachamah, used by Bruce in 1790, but subsequently applied (in the New Latin form Racama, to the Angola vulture, Gypohierax angolensis, which is a very different bird. N. ginginianus is a second species of the genus, closely resembling the foregoing, found in India; N. monachus and N. pileatus are both African and much alike, but quite different from the others.

neophyte (nē′ō-fīt), a. and n. [= F. néophyte = Sp. neófito = Pg. neophyto = It. neofito, < eccles. L. neophytus (in inscrip. also neofitus), < Gr. νεόφυτος, newly planted, a convert, < νέος, new, + φυτός, verbal adj. of φύειν, produce, bring forth, φύεσθαι, grow, come into being.] I. a. Newly entered on some state; having the character of a novice.

It is with your young grammatical courtier, as with your neophyte player, a thing usual to be daunted at the first presence or interview. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iii. 4.

II. n. 1. A new convert; one newly initiated. Specifically—(a) In the primitive church, one newly baptized. These formed a distinct class in the church; at first, because of the reference in 1 Tim. iii. 6 to a novice, they were regarded as unfit for ecclesiastical office.

After immersion [in baptism in the ancient church] the neophyte partook of milk and honey, to show that he was now the recipient of the gifts of God's grace. Encyc. Brit., III. 351.

(b) In the Rom. Cath. Ch., a converted heathen, heretic, etc. (c) Occasionally in the Rom. Cath. Ch., a novice.

2. A tiro; a beginner in learning.

Jorevin reports that in Charles the Second's time, in Worcestershire, . . . the children were sent to school with pipes in their satchels, and the schoolmaster called a halt in their studies whilst they all smoked — he teaching the neophytes. J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 207.

=Syn. 1. Proselyte, Apostate, etc. See convert.

neophytism (nē′ō-fī-tizm), n. [< neophyte + -ism.] The condition of a neophyte or novice.

neoplasm (nē′ō-plazm), n. [NL., < Gr. νέος, new, + πλάσμα, anything formed.] A new growth or true tumor; a morbid growth more or less distinct histologically from the tissue in which it occurs.

★neoplastic (nē-ō-plas′tik), a. [< Gr. νεόπλαστος, newly formed, < νέος, new, + πλαστός, verbal adj. of πλάσσειν, form, mold: see plastic.] Pertaining to or of the nature of a neoplasm; newly formed.

Neoplatonic (nē″ō-plā-ton′ik), a. [< Gr. νέος, new, + E. Platonic.] Relating to the Neoplatonists or their doctrines.

Neoplatonically (nē″ō-plā-ton′i-kal-i), adv. In accordance with Neoplatonism; in the manner of the Neoplatonists.

The Neoplatonically conceived Fons Vitæ of the Jew Gebirol. Encyc. Brit., XXI. 429.

Neoplatonician (nē-ō-plā-tō-nish′an), n. [< Gr. νέος, new, + E. Platonician.] Same as Neoplatonist. [Rare.]

Neoplatonism (nē-ō-plā′tō-nizm), n. [< Gr. νέος, new, + E. Platonism.] A system of philosophical and religious doctrines and principles which originated in Alexandria with Ammonius Saccas in the third century, and was developed by Plotinus, Porphyry, Iamblichus, Hypatia, Proclus, and others in the third, fourth, and fifth centuries. The system was composed of elements of Platonism and Oriental beliefs, and in its later development was influenced by the philosophy of Philo, by Gnosticism, and by Christianity. Its leading representative was Plotinus. His views were popularized by Porphyry and modified in the direction of mysticism by Iamblichus. Considerable sympathy with Neoplatonism in its earlier stages was shown by several eminent Christian writers, especially in Alexandria, such as St. Clement, Origen, etc. The last Neoplatonic schools were suppressed in the sixth century.

Neoplatonist (nē-ō-plā′tō-nist), n. [< Gr. νέος, new, + E. Platonist.] A believer in the doctrines or principles of Neoplatonism.

Neopus (nē-ō′pus), n. [NL., < Gr. νεωπός, young-looking, < νέος, new, + ὤψ (ὠπ-), face.] An East Indian genus of hawks having the tarsi feathered to the toes, the outer toe reduced, the claw of the inner enormous, and all the claws little curved; the kite-eagles. N. malayensis is the only species.

Neopythagorean (nē″ō-pi-thag-ō-rē′an), a. [< Gr. νέος, new, + E. Pythagorean.] Belonging to the doctrines of the later philosophers calling themselves Pythagoreans, after that school had ceased to exist. The Neopythagoreans flourished chiefly in the first century B. C. and the first and second centuries of the Christian era.

neorama (nē-ō-rä′mạ), n. [< Gr. ναός, Attic νεώς, a temple, + ὅραμα, that which is seen, a view, < ὁρᾶν, see.] A panorama representing the interior of a large building, in which the spectator appears to be placed. Imp. Dict.

Neosorex (nē-ō-sō′reks), n. [NL. (Baird, 1857), < Gr. νέος, new, + L. sorex, a shrew-mouse.] A genus of aquatic fringe-footed American shrews, with 32 teeth, long close-haired tail, and the feet not webbed. The type is N. navigator, from the Pacific United States; the best-known species is N. palustris. It is generally considered as merely a subgenus.

neossine (nē-os′in), n. [< Gr. νεοσσιά, a nest, < νεοσσός, a young bird, a nestling, < νέος, young: see new.] The substance of which edible bird's-nests are partly composed; the inspissated saliva of certain swifts of the genus Collocalia.

neossology (nē-o-sol′ō-ji), n. [< Gr. νεοσσός, a young bird (see neossine), + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The study of young birds; that part of ornithology which relates to incubation, rearing of the young, etc. Compare caliology.

neoteric (nē-ō-ter′ik), a. and n. [= F. néoterique = Sp. neotérico = Pg. It. neoterico, < LL. neotericus, < Gr. νεωτερικός, youthful, natural to a youth, < νεώτερος, younger, newer, compar. of νέος, young, new: see new.] I. a. New; recent in origin; modern.

The neoterick astronomy hath found spots in the sun. Glanville, Vanity of Dogmatizing, xviii.

Among the educated, and, in especial, among the most highly educated, the same sort of feeling [rather an antipathy than a reasonable dislike] with regard to neoteric expressions seems to be sedulously instilled. F. Hall, Mod. Eng., p. 99.

II. n. A modern.

How much mistaken both the philosophers of old and later neoterics have been, their own ignorance makes manifest. Ford, Honour Triumphant, i.

neoterical (nē-ō-ter′i-kạl), a. [< neoteric + -al.] Same as neoteric.

neoterism (nē-ot′ẹ-rizm), n. [< Gr. νεωτερισμός, an innovation, < νεωτερίζειν, innovate: see neoterize.] 1. Innovation; specifically, the introduction of new words or phrases into a language; neologism. —2. A word or phrase so introduced; a neologism.

neoterist (nē-ot′ẹ-rist), n. [< neoter(ize) + -ist.] One who invents new words or expressions; an innovator in language; a neologist.

neoteristic (nē-ot-ẹ-ris′tik), a. [< neoterist + -ic.] Of, pertaining to, or characteristic of neoterism or neoterists.

neoterize (nē-ot′ẹ-rīz), v. i.; pret. and pp. neoterized, ppr. neoterizing. [< Gr. νεωτερίζειν, innovate, < νεώτερος, compar. of νέος, young, new: see neoteric.] To innovate; specifically, to coin new words or phrases; neologize.

Our scientists, since they neoterize, would find their account in entertaining a few consulting philologists. F. Hall, Mod. Eng., [p. 175, note.

Neotoma (nē-ot′ō-mạ), n. [NL. (Say and Ord, 1825), < Gr. νέος, new, + τέμνειν, ταμεῖν, cut.] A genus of very large sigmodont Murinæ peculiar to North America; the wood-rats. They have thick soft fur, a long tail either scant-haired or bushy, pointed mobile snout, large full eyes, large rounded ears, the fore feet with four perfect clawed digits and rudimentary thumb, and the hind feet five-toed. N. floridana is the common wood-rat of the southern United States. It has white paws and under parts, and is nine inches in length, with a tail about six inches long. N. fuscipes is the black-footed wood-rat of California. N. ferruginea is a reddish Mexican species. N. cinerea is a very large bushy-tailed wood-rat which inhabits the Rocky Mountains and other mountains of the west.

Florida Wood-rat (Neotoma floridana).

neotome (nē'ō-tōm), n. A sigmodont rat of the genus Neotoma. S. G. Goodrich.

Neotragus (nē-ot'ra-gus), n. [NL., < Gr. νέος, new, + τράγος, a goat.] A genus of pygmy antelopes of Africa; the steinboks. It includes the smallest representatives of the group, as the common steinbok (N. tragulus), the gray steinbok (N. melanotos), and the madoqua (N. madoqua). The genus was established by Hamilton Smith. It has been used with different limits, and Nesotragus is synonymous.

Neotropical (nē-ō-trop'i-kal), a. [< Gr. νέος, new, + E. tropical.] In zoögeog., belonging to that division of the New World which is not Nearctic: specifically applied by Sclater to one of six prime divisions of the earth's surface, and including all of America which is south of the Nearctic region.

Neottia (nē-ot'i-a), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1737), so called in allusion to the interwoven fibers of the roots of the plants; < Gr. νεοσσιά, Attic νεοττιά, a nest of young birds, a nest: see neossine.] A genus of orchids, type of the tribe Neottieæ, belonging to the subtribe Spiranthea, and known by the long column and leafless habit. There are 3 species, of northern Asia and Europe, supposed parasites, bearing a raceme of short-pediceled flowers on a short stem covered with sheaths and proceeding from a dense cluster of short fleshy roots. N. Nidus-avis is the bird's-nest orchis. It has also been called goosenest. See bird's-nest, 1.

Neottieæ (nē-o-tī'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Lindley, 1826), < Neottia + -eæ.] A tribe of monocotyledonous plants of the family Orchidaceæ, known by the separate and parallel anther-cells and granular pollen. It includes 13 subtribes and 92 genera. They are generally terrestrial, with thickened rootstocks or tubers, but without bulbous stems. Of this tribe Gyrostachis, Peramium, Arethusa, Limodorum, and Pogonia are well-known orchids of the northern United States, and Vanilla an important tropical genus.

neovolcanic (nē"ō-vol-kan'ik), a. A term used by Rosenbusch to designate the modern volcanic rocks, or those more recent than the Cretaceous, while those older than this are called by him paleovolcanic. The older eruptive rocks have as a rule undergone a larger amount of alteration (see metamorphism) than the more recent, but this affords no reliable criterion for a general classification.

Neozoic (nē-ō-zō'ik), a. [< Gr. νέος, new, + ζωή, life.] A designation suggested by Edward Forbes, for that division of the geological series which includes the Mesozoic and Tertiary. The entire sequence of geological fossiliferous rocks would be divided into Paleozoic and Neozoic. With some authors equivalent to Tertiary + Quaternary.

nep[1] (nep), n. [Also dial. nip; < ME. neppe, nepte, nept, < AS. nepte, nefte = MD. nepte, neppe, nep, D. neppe = G. nept = OF. nepte = It. neputa, dim. nepitella, catnip, < L. nepeta, ML. also nepita, Italian catmint: see Nepeta. Hence, in comp., catnep*, now catnip.] The catnip, Nepeta Cataria.—Wild nep, the common bryony, Bryonia dioica.

nep[2] (nep), n. A variant of neep[2]. [Prov. Eng.]

nep[3] (nep), n. [Perhaps a var. of nap[4] for knap[2].] A knob, swelling, protuberance, or knot which exists in imperfect cotton-fibers as a result either of unsymmetrical growth or of operations (principally ginning) to which the cotton is subjected preparatory to carding or combing.

nep[3] (nep), v. t.; pret. and pp. nepped, ppr. nepping. [< nep[3], n.] To form knots, knobs, or protuberances in (cotton-fibers) during the processes of ginning, opening, etc., preparatory to carding and combing.

Nepa (nē'pä), n. [NL., < L. nepa, a scorpion (an African word).] The typical genus of bugs of the family Nepidæ, founded by Linnæus in 1748; the water-scorpions. They are related to Ranatra, but are easily distinguished by the broad flat body and less raptorial fore tarsi. The genus is wide-spread, though only one species occurs in Europe and one in the United States. All are aquatic and predaceous. The common water scorpion of Europe, N. cinerea is a large bug, an inch long, of an elliptical form; N. apiculata is a similar but smaller one found in the United States.

Nepāl aconite, laburnum, paper, etc. See aconite, etc.

Nepaulese (ne-pâ-lēs' or -lēz'), a. and n. [< Nepaul (Nepāl) + -ese.] I. a. Of or pertaining to Nepāl (Nepal, or Nepaul), an independent state in the Himalayas, north of Hindustan and south of Tibet.

II. n. An inhabitant or inhabitants of Nepāl.

nepe[1]†, a. and n. An obsolete form of neap[1].

nepe[2]†, n. An obsolete form of neep[2].

Nepenthaceæ (nē-pen-thā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Lindley, 1836), < Nepenthes + -aceæ.] A family of dicotyledonous apetalous plants, with numerous ovules in the ovary-cells, dicœcious flowers, and fleshy albumen, consisting of the single genus Nepenthes.

nepenthe (nē-pen'thē), n. [Pronounced as if L.; but the L. form is nepenthes: see nepenthes.] Same as nepenthes, 1.

> Nepenthe is a drincke of soverayne grace,
> Devized by the Gods, for to asswage
> Harts grief, and bitter gall away to chace.
> Spenser, F. Q., IV. iii. 43.

world, a few in the tropics. They are erect, spreading, or creeping herbs with toothed leaves and many-flowered whorls of bluish or white flowers. One species is very common, N. Cataria, the catmint. Glecoma hederacea, the ground-ivy, has been referred to this genus.

Nepeteæ (nē-pet'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Bentham, 1834), < Nepeta + -eæ.] A tribe of dicotyledonous plants of the family Menthaceæ, typified by the genus Nepeta. It is known by the usually fifteen-nerved calyx and the superior stamens longer than the lower pair. It contains 13 genera and about 230 species.

nephalism (nef'a-lizm), n. [< Gr. νηφαλισμός, soberness, < νηφάλιος, sober, < νήφειν, be sober.] The principles or practice of those who abstain from spirituous liquors; total abstinence; teetotalism.

> Some figures had been extracted from a report on Intemperance and Disease without the corresponding explanation, and had been misunderstood as implying that nephalism was more fatal than tippling. Lancet, No. 3423, p. 702.

nephalist (nef'a-list), n. [< nephal-ism + -ist.] One who practises or advocates nephalism, or total abstinence from intoxicating drink; a teetotaler.

nephela (nef'e-lä), n.; pl. nephelæ (-lē). [NL., < Gr. νεφέλη, a cloud, a disease of the eyes, = L. nebula, a cloud: see nebula, nebule.] A white spot on the cornea.

nephele (nef'e-lē), n. [< Gr. νεφέλη, a cloud: see nephela.] In the Gr. Ch., the outermost eucharistic veil: same as aër[1], 7.

nephelin, nepheline (nef'e-lin), n. [< Gr. νεφέλη, a cloud, + -in[2], -ine[2].] A mineral occurring in glassy white or yellowish hexagonal crystals or grains in volcanic rocks, as on Monte Somma, Vesuvius (the variety sommite), and also in masses with greasy luster and a dark greenish or reddish color (the variety elæolite). It is a silicate of aluminium, sodium, and potassium. Also nephelite.

nephelin-basalt (nef'e-lin-ba-sâlt"), n. In petrog., a basalt in which nephelin replaces plagioclase feldspar. The rock consists essentially of augite, olivin, nephelin, and magnetite or ilmenite. It is closely related to nephelinite, which contains no olivin; to nephelin-tephrite, which has plagioclase but no olivin; and to nephelin-basanite, containing both plagioclase and olivin. It frequently grades into basalts characterized by leucite, nosean, hauyne, melitite, etc. It is one of the most basic of igneous rocks and often contains but little nephelin, in such cases approaching limburgite in composition.

nephelinic (nef-e-lin'ik), a. [< nephelin + -ic.] Pertaining to or of the nature of nephelin: as, a nephelinic tephrite.

nephelinite (nef'e-lin-īt), n. [< nephelin + -ite.] In petrog., a basaltic rock consisting essentially of augite, nephelin, and magnetite or ilmenite. It differs from nephelin-basalt in the absence of olivin.

nephelinitoid (nef-e-lin'i-toid), a. In petrog., a term applied by Bořicky to nephelin-basalts of Bohemia in which the substance supposed to be nephelin was not of the usual crystal form, leaving its identity in doubt. Applied also to the questionable substance itself. Not much used in America.

nephelin-rock (nef'e-lin-rok), n. A volcanic rock closely allied to the basalts in character, but in which nephelin takes the place of feldspar either wholly or in large part. Nephelin-rocks are almost exclusively of neovolcanic age. See nephelin-basalt and nephelin-tephrite.

nephelin-tephrite (nef'e-lin-tef"rīt), n. In petrog., that variety of basaltic volcanic rock called 'tephrite' which is characterized by the presence of nephelin in the place of plagioclase feldspar. This very basic rock is closely related to nephelin-basalt. See tephrite.

nephelite (nef'e-līt), n. [< Gr. νεφέλη, a cloud, + -ite[2].] Same as nephelin.

Nephelium (nē-fē'li-um), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1767), < L. nephelion, a kind of plant, < Gr. νεφέλιον, a little cloud, < νεφέλη, a cloud: see nephela.] A genus of dicotyledonous choripetalous trees of the family Sapindaceæ, type of the tribe Nephelieæ, known by the regular cup-shaped five-toothed calyx, indehiscent warty fruit, and long projecting stamens. There are about 22 species, mostly of the East Indies, some, yielding delicious fruits, of China and the Indian archipelago. They bear axillary and terminal panicles of many small flowers, alternate evergreen abruptly pinnate leaves of a beautiful pink when young, and roundish fruit with an areolated crust partly filled within by a sweet edible pulp inclosing the bitter shining seed. See rambutan.

Nephelococcygia (nef"e-lō-kok-sij'i-ä), n. [< Gr. Νεφελοκοκκυγία, 'Cloud Cuckoo-town' (see def.), < νεφέλη, a cloud, + κόκκυξ, a cuckoo.] In Aristophanes's comedy "The Birds," an imaginary city built in the clouds by the birds at the instigation of two Athenians, and represented both as a fantastic caricature of Athens in the poet's day and as a sort of Philistine Utopia full of gross enjoyments; hence, in literary allusion, cloudland; fools' paradise.

As respects the New England settlers, however visionary some of their religious tenets may have been, their political ideas savored of the reality, and it was no Nephelococcygia of which they drew the plan, but of a commonwealth whose foundation was to rest on solid and familiar earth.
Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 238.

nepheloid (nef′e-loid), a. [< Gr. νεφελοειδής, cloud-like, cloudy, < νεφέλη, a cloud, + εἶδος, form.] In med., cloudy; turbid, as urine.

nephelometer (nef-e-lom′e-tėr), n. [< Gr. νεφέλη, a cloud, + μέτρον, measure.] A proposed instrument which will make a continuous record of the proportion of cloudiness of the sky. No such instrument has yet been constructed.

It bears about the same relations to the nephelometer which we should have that the sun-dial bears to the clock.
Amer. Meteorological Jour., I. 4.

nepheloscope (nef′e-lō-skōp), n. [< Gr. νεφέλη, a cloud, + σκοπεῖν, view.] An apparatus devised by Espy for illustrating the formation of cloud.

nephelosphere (nef′e-lō-sfēr), n. [< Gr. νεφέλη, a cloud, + σφαῖρα, sphere.] An envelop or atmosphere of cloud surrounding the earth or any heavenly body.

It [water mist] gathers into a vaporous envelope, constituting a true atmosphere or nephelosphere.
Winchell, World-Life, p. 543.

nephew (nev′ū or nef′ū), n. [Formerly also nevew, dial. nevy; < ME. nephewe, nephoy, nevew, nevow, neveu, nevw, nevo, < AF. nevu, OF. neveu, nevo, nevod, neud, F. neveu (> Sw. nevö = Dan. neveu) = Pr. nebot, neps, nebs = Sp. nieto = Pg. neto = It. nepote, nipote, < L. nepos (nepot-), m., a son's or daughter's son, a grandson (also f., a granddaughter), later also a brother's or sister's son, a nephew, in general a descendant; = Skt. napāt, a grandson, son, descendant, = Gr. νέποδες, pl., children (a rare word, applied by Homer to seals, νέποδες καλῆς Ἁλοσύνης, 'children of fair Amphitrite,' whence applied by later poets to water-animals generally), = (with loss of the final consonant of the stem) OHG. nevo, nefo, MHG. neve, G. neffe, sister's son, rarely brother's son, also uncle, and in general 'kinsman,' = MLG. neve, LG. neve = OFries. neva = D. neef, grandson, nephew, cousin, = Icel. nefi, kinsman, = AS. nefa = ME. neve, grandson, nephew. Usually explained from the L., as < ne-, not, + potis, strong; but this does not hold for the other forms. The application, as with all other terms denoting relationship beyond the first degree, formerly varied ('grandson,' 'nephew,' 'cousin,' 'kinsman,' etc.); its final exclusive use for 'nephew' instead of 'grandson' is prob. due in part to the fact that, by reason of the great difference in age, a person has comparatively little to do with his grandsons, if he has any, while nephews are proverbially present and attentive, if their uncle is of any importance. The pron. nef′ū, common in the United States, is not original, but conforms to the irreg. later spelling nephew, ph being always pronounced as f except in this word and in Stephen (Middle English Steven).]

1†. A grandson; sometimes, a more remote lineal descendant.

His [Jove's] blynde nevew Cupido.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 617.

Their eldest sonnes also, that succeeded them, were called Ioues; and their nephews or sonnes sonnes, which reigned in the third place, Hercules.
Holinshed, Descrip. of Britaine, ix.

He is by several descents the nephew of Hugo Grotius [died 1645].
Johnson, to Dr. Vyse, July 9, 1777 (in Boswell).

2†. A cousin.

Henry the Fourth, grandfather to this king,
Deposed his nephew Richard, Edward's son,
The first begotten, and the lawful heir
Of Edward king, the third of that descent.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., ii. 5. 64.

3. The son of one's brother or sister. This is now the usual meaning. Sometimes, in the interpretation of wills, the word is understood as including also 'grand-nephew.'

As thei rode in soche maner thei mette fyve childeren that be youre neuewes. . . . These . . . be youre suster sones. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 230.

The uncle is certainly nearer of kin to the common stock, by one degree, than the nephew; though the nephew, by representing his father, has in him the right of primogeniture. Blackstone, Com., II. xiv.

4. The illegitimate son of an ecclesiastic. [Euphem.]

Nephila (nef′i-lą), n. [NL. (?), irreg. < Gr. νεῖν, spin, + φίλος, loving.] A genus of spinning-spiders of the family Epeiridæ, having a long cylindrical abdomen. N. plumipes is well known and abundant in the southern United States. Leach, 1815.

nephological (nef-ō-loj′i-kąl), a. [< nephology + -ic-al.] Pertaining to nephology; relating to clouds or cloudiness.

But at no time was it observed that the nephelogical [read nephological] state of the atmosphere overhead or the prevalence of fog banks gave rise to anything like an aërial echo. Arc. Cruise of the Corwin, 1881, p. 14.

nephology (ne-fol′ō-ji), n. [< Gr. νέφος, a cloud, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] That part of meteorology which treats of clouds.

nephoscope (nef′ō-skōp), n. [< Gr. νέφος, a cloud, + σκοπεῖν, view.] An instrument used in determining the apparent velocity and the direction of motion of clouds. It usually consists of a horizontal mirror, with compass-points or degrees drawn on the mirror or on the surrounding frame, together with an adjustable sighting-piece placed at various positions above the mirror. The sighting-piece serves as a fixed point for viewing the cloud-image as it moves away from the center of the mirror, upon which point the image is initially adjusted.

nephralgia (nef-ral′ji-ą), n. [NL., < Gr. νεφρός, a kidney, + ἄλγος, pain.] In pathol., pain in the kidneys; renal neuralgia.

nephralgic (nef-ral′jik), a. [< nephralg-ia + -ic.] Pertaining to, of the nature of, or affected with nephralgia.

nephralgy (nef-ral′ji), n. [< NL. nephralgia, q. v.] Same as nephralgia.

nephrectomy (nef-rek′tō-mi), n. [< Gr. νεφρός, kidney, + ἐκτομή, excision.] In surg., excision of a kidney.

nephridial (nef-rid′i-ąl), a. [< nephridium + -al.] Of or pertaining to the nephridia: as, a nephridial organ or function.

Each of the eight setæ often appeared to have a nephridial tuft specially related to it.
Micros. Science, XXVIII. 397.

I should be glad to draw attention to the, in some ways, still more interesting features of the nephridial system in Megascolides australis. Nature, XXXVIII. 197.

nephridion (nef-rid′i-on), n.; pl. nephridia (-ą). Same as nephridium.

nephridium (nef-rid′i-um), n.; pl. nephridia (-ą). [NL., dim. of Gr. νεφρός, kidney: see neer[2].] A simple renal organ, or an element in the composition of a renal organ, consisting of a tube or channel which puts the body-cavity or cœlom into communication with the exterior, either directly or through a renal duct. Nephridia are widely distributed throughout the animal kingdom, and the renal organs of vertebrates are shown, by their development, to be aggregations of modified nephridia. Nephridia are often converted into generative ducts, as in anneli ls and vertebrates.

The renal organs, nephridia, or organs of Bojanus . . . are always present [in mollusks]. Stand. Nat. Hist., I. 251.

nephrite (nef′rīt), n. [< Gr. νεφρίτης, pertaining to the kidneys, < νεφρός, a kidney: see neer[2].] A tough compact variety of amphibole (tremolite or actinolite), of a leek-green color, often found in rolled pieces; jade. It was formerly worn as a remedy for diseases of the kidneys. See jade[2].

nephritic (nef-rit′ik), a. and n. [= F. néphrétique = Sp. nefrítico = Pg. nephritico = It. nefritico, < LL. nephriticus = Gr. νεφριτικός, affected with nephritis, < νεφρῖτις, nephritis: see nephritis.] I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to the kidneys: as, a nephritic disease.

The balsam of Peru obtained by boiling wood and scumming the decoction . . . [is] a very valuable medicine and of great account in divers cases, particularly asthmas, nephritic pains, nervous colics and obstructions.
Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 62.

2. Pertaining to or affected with nephritis: as, a nephritic patient.

The diet of nephritic . . . persons . . . ought to be . . . opposite to the alkalescent nature of the salts in their blood. Arbuthnot, Aliments, iv. 2. § 16.

3. Relieving disorders of the kidneys in general: as, a nephritic medicine.—4. Of the nature of nephrite or jade.—Nephritic colic, renal colic; pain due to the passage of a calculus from the kidney.—Nephritic retinitis, retinitis dependent on nephritis.—Nephritic stone. Same as nephrite.—Nephritic tree, a small leguminous tree of the West Indies, Pithecolobium Unguis-cati.—Nephritic wood, the lignum nephriticum of old pharmacologists—a wood, supposed to be that of the horseradish-tree, which has been used in decoction for affections of the kidneys, etc.

II. n. A medicine adapted to relieve or cure diseases of the kidneys, particularly gravel or stone in the bladder.

nephritical (nef-rit′i-kąl), a. [< nephritic + -al.] Same as nephritic.

nephritis (nef-rī′tis), n. [NL., < L. nephritis = Gr. νεφρῖτις, a disease of the kidneys, fem. of νεφρίτης, pertaining to the kidneys: see nephrite.] In pathol., inflammation of the kidneys. See Bright's disease, under disease.—Amyloid nephritis, the presence of lardacein in the renal tissues.—Desquamative nephritis. See desquamative.—Diffuse nephritis, inflammation involving both epithelial and connective-tissue elements of the kidney.—Hemorrhagic nephritis, nephritis with hemorrhages into the substance of the kidney.—Interstitial nephritis, inflammation involving primarily and principally the interstitial connective tissue of the kidney. It produces contracted kidney.—Nephritis gravidarum, nephritis developing in pregnant women without antecedent renal disease.—Parenchymatous nephritis, inflammation involving primarily and principally the epithelium of the uriniferous tubules.—Suppurative nephritis, inflammation of the kidney resulting in the formation of abscesses. It never is a part of Bright's disease, but may occur in pyemia, ulcerative endocarditis, pyclitis (see pyclonephritis), and more rarely in dysentery and actinomycosis; also, of course, from direct wounds of the kidney.

nephrocele (nef′rō-sēl), n. [< Gr. νεφρός, a kidney, + κήλη, a tumor.] In pathol., hernia of the kidney.

nephrodinic (nef-rō-din′ik), a. [< nephr(idia) + (por)odinic.] Porodinic by means of nephridia, as a mollusk; having nephrogonaducts which discharge the genital products. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 682.

Nephrodium (nef-rō′di-um), n. [NL. (Richard, 1801), < Gr. νεφρώδης, νεφροειδής, like a kidney: see nephroid.] A cosmopolitan generic aggregate of polypodiaceous dryopteroid ferns, variously delimited by pteridologists of the last century. Properly the equivalent of the genus Dryopteris (Adanson, 1763), founded upon the same generic type, viz., the historic free-veined male-fern, or Filix-mas of the old herbalists.

nephrogonaduct (nef-rō-gon′ą-dukt), n. [< Gr. νεφρός, a kidney, + E. gonaduct.] The nephridium of a mollusk when it serves as a gonaduct. See idiogonaduct.

nephrography (nef-rog′rą-fi), n. [< Gr. νεφρός, a kidney, + -γραφία, < γράφειν, write, mark, draw.] In anat., a description of the kidneys.

nephroid (nef′roid), a. and n. [< Gr. νεφροειδής, like a kidney, < νεφρός, a kidney, + εἶδος, form.] I. a. Kidney-shaped; reniform; in bot., resembling the genus Nephrodium.

Nephroid.

II. n. In math., a curve of the sixth order with one triple and one single crunode, the polar equation being

$$r = a(1 + 2\sin\tfrac{1}{2}\theta).$$

Nephrolepis (nef-rol′e-pis), n. [NL. (Schott, 1834), so called from the reniform indusia; < Gr. νεφρός, a kidney, + λεπίς, a scale.] A genus of polypodiaceous ferns of the tribe Davallieæ, having pinnate fronds with the pinnæ articulated at the base and often very deciduous in the dried plant. The veins are all free, and the sori arise from the apex of the upper branch of a vein, and are covered with a reniform or roundish indusium. The genus is tropical or subtropical, and contains about 10 species, of which 2 are found in Florida.

nephrolithiasis (nef″rō-li-thī′ą-sis), n. [NL., < Gr. νεφρός, a kidney, + λιθίασις, stone (a disease): see lithiasis.] The formation of calculi in the substance or in the pelvis of the kidney.

nephrolithic (nef-rō-lith′ik), a. [< Gr. νεφρός, a kidney, + λίθος, a stone.] In med., relating to calculus in the kidney.

nephrolithotomy (nef″rō-li-thot′ō-mi), n. [< Gr. νεφρός, a kidney, + λίθος, stone, + -τομία, < τέμνειν, ταμεῖν, cut.] In surg., the removal of a calculus from the kidney by an incision.

nephrologist (nef-rol′ō-jist), n. [< nephrolog-y + -ist.] One who is versed in nephrology.

nephrology (nef-rol′ō-ji), n. [< Gr. νεφρός, a kidney, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] Scientific knowledge or investigation of the kidney.

Nephropneusta (nef-rop-nūs′tą), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. νεφρός, a kidney, + πνευστός*, verbal adj. of πνεῖν, breathe.] A superfamily group of pulmonate gastropods, equivalent to the Geophila or Stylommatophora, containing the land-snails and -slugs, which are thus contrasted with the Branchiopneusta or Basommatophora, including the aquatic snails: so called on the ground that the respiratory sac is morphologically a kind of urinary bladder.

nephropneustan (nef-rop-nūs′tan), a. and n. I. a. Having lungs of the nature of kidneys; pertaining to the Nephropneusta, or having their characters.

II. n. A pulmonate gastropod of the superfamily Nephropneusta.

Nephrops (nef′rops), n. [< Gr. νεφρός, a kidney, + ὤψ, eye.] A genus of long-tailed ten-footed crustaceans of the family Homaridæ: so called from the nephroid eyes. N. norvegicus, known as the Norway lobster, is found on the Atlantic coasts of Europe, and has commercial value.

nephrorrhagia (nef-rō-rā′ji-ă), n. [NL., < Gr. νεφρός, a kidney, + -ραγία, < ῥηγνύναι, break.] Renal hemorrhage.

nephrorrhaphy (nef-ror′a-fi), n. [< Gr. νεφρός, a kidney, + ῥαφή, a sewing, < ῥάπτειν, sew.] The stitching of a (movable) kidney to the lumbar abdominal parietes.

nephrostoma (nef-ros′tō-mă), n.; pl. nephrostomata (nef-ros-tō′ma-tă). [NL., < Gr. νεφρός, a kidney, + στόμα, mouth.] One of the ciliated infundibular orifices of a primitive kidney. See pronephron.

nephrostome (nef′rō-stōm), n. Same as nephrostoma.

nephrostomous (nef-ros′tō-mus), a. Of or pertaining to a nephrostoma.

nephrotomy (nef-rot′ō-mi), n. [< Gr. νεφρός, a kidney, + -τομία, < τέμνειν, ταμεῖν, cut.] In surg., the operation of incising the kidney, as for the extraction of a calculus.

nephrozymose (nef-rō-zī′mōs), n. [< Gr. νεφρός, kidney, + E. zymose.] A diastatic ferment occurring in urine.

Nephthyidæ (nef-thī′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Nephthys + -idæ.] A family of annelids, typified by the genus Nephthys. They have similar rings, a very large proboscis, and the branchiæ in the form of a sickle-shaped process between the foliaceous lobes of the legs. They live chiefly in the sand of the sea-shore.

Nephthys (nef′this), n. [NL.] The typical genus of Nephthyidæ. N. cæca is a British species, the white-rag worm, also known as the lurg and the hairybait.

Nepidæ (nep′i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Leach, 1818), < Nepa + -idæ.] A family of aquatic heteropterous insects of the order Hemiptera, typified by the genus Nepa; the water-scorpions. They have a flattened elliptical or oval form, and ambulatory as well as natatory legs, with the fore femora enlarged and channeled to receive the fore tibiæ and tarsi, which fold into them. The abdomen ends in a pair of channeled stylets which unite to form a respiratory tube. The narrow head bears prominent eyes, and the membranous and corious parts of the wing-covers are well distinguished. Three genera are recognized.

ne plus ultra (nē plus ul′trä). [L., no further: ne, no, not; plus (compar. of multus), more; ultra, beyond.] Not (anything) more beyond; the extreme or utmost point; completeness; perfection.

nepos, n. See nepus.

nepotal (nep′ō-tal), a. [< L. nepos (nepot-), a grandson, a nephew: see nephew.] Of or pertaining to a nephew or nephews. Gentleman's Mag.

nepotic (nē-pot′ik), a. [< L. nepos (nepot-), a grandson, a nephew: see nephew. Cf. nepotism.] Of or belonging to nepotism; practising or displaying nepotism.

> The nepotic ambition of the ruling pontiff. Milman.

nepotious (nē-pō′shus), a. [< L. nepos (nepot-), a grandson, a nephew: see nepotal, etc.] Overfond of nephews and other relatives; nepotic.

> We may use the epithet nepotious for those who carry this fondness to the extent of doting, and, as expressing that degree of fondness, it may be applied to William Dove; he was a nepotious uncle.
> Southey, The Doctor, x. (Davies.)

nepotism (nep′ō-tizm), n. [= F. népotisme = Sp. Pg. It. nepotismo, < NL. nepotismus, < L. nepos (nepot-), a grandson, a nephew: see nephew.] Favoritism shown to nephews and other relatives; patronage bestowed in consideration of family relationship and not of merit. The word was invented to characterize a propensity of the popes and other high ecclesiastics in the Roman Catholic Church to aggrandize their family by exorbitant grants or favors to nephews or relatives.

> To this humour of Nepotism Rome owes its present splendour. Addison.

nepotist (nep′ō-tist), n. [< nepot-ism + -ist.] One who practises nepotism.

> Were they to submit . . . to be accused of Nepotism by Nepotists? . . . The real disgrace would have been to have submitted to this.
> Sydney Smith, To Archd. Singleton. (Davies.)

neppy (nep′i), a. [< nep[3] + -y[1].] Nepped, as cotton-fiber. Spons' Encyc. Manuf., I. 748.

neptet. n. A Middle English form of nep[1].

Nepticula (nep-tik′ū-lä), n. [NL. (Von Heyden, 1842), < LL. nepticula, granddaughter, dim. of neptis, a granddaughter: see niece.] A genus of microlepidopterous moths, giving name to the family Nepticulidæ. There are several species, as N. aurella, N. splendissima, and N. microtheriella, all among the smallest of the tineids. The larvæ, as far as known, are all leaf-miners.

Nepticulidæ (nep-ti-kū′li-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Nepticula + -idæ.] A family of microlepidopterous insects, typified by the genus Nepticula.

Neptune (nep′tūn), n. [= F. Neptune = Sp. Pg. Neptuno = It. Nettuno, < L. Neptunus, a sea-god: see def.] 1. In Rom. myth., the god of the sea, who came to be identified by the Romans themselves with the Greek Poseidon, whose attributes were transferred by the poets to the ancient Latin deity. In art Neptune is usually represented as a bearded man of stately presence, with the trident as his chief attribute, and the horse and the dolphin as symbols.

2. Figuratively, the ocean.

> Ye that on the sands with printless foot
> Do chase the ebbing Neptune.
> Shak., Tempest, v. 1. 35.

3. In her., same as Triton.—4. The outermost known planet of the solar system, and the third in volume and mass, though quite invisible to the naked eye. It was discovered in the autumn of 1846. Uranus, the planet next to Neptune, revolving about the sun in eighty-four years, was discovered in 1781; but observations of it as a fixed star were scattered through the eighteenth century. In 1821 Bouvard found that the observations of Uranus could not be satisfied by any theory based on the gravitation of known bodies, and hinted at an undiscovered planet. During the following twenty years further observations satisfied astronomers that such a planet must exist. To find where it could be was the problem which two mathematicians, J. C. Adams in England and U. J. J. Leverrier in France, set themselves to solve by mathematics. The calculations of Leverrier assigned the boundaries of a not very large region within which the unknown planet might be. In consequence of the indications of Adams, the astronomer Challis observed the planet Neptune August 4th and 12th, 1846, but, neglecting to work up his observations, failed to recognize it as a planet; while, in consequence of the indications of Leverrier, Galle of Berlin discovered Neptune September 23d, 1846. The orbit of the new planet, having been determined from direct observations, was found to differ excessively from the predictions in all its elements; so much so that Leverrier declared these elements "incompatible with the nature of the irregular perturbations of Uranus." The distance from the sun was 30 times instead of 36 times that of the earth, as predicted; and the orbit, instead of being more elliptical than that of any planet except Mercury, was in fact the most circular of all. When Neptune was discovered by Dr. Galle it was only 1° from the predicted place. The inaccuracy of the calculated elements led Peirce to call its discovery "hardly more than a happy accident"; but other astronomers dissent, since the methods used would give approximately the planet's direction from the earth, which alone is needed to guide the search. A satellite to Neptune was detected in October, 1846, by Lassell. Its period of revolution is 5 days, 21 hours, and 2.7 minutes, and its maximum elongation 18″. The mass of Neptune, having been calculated from these data, was found to be $\frac{1}{19^{1}\!/_{000}}$ that of the sun, against predicted values nearly twice as great. With the mass so ascertained, the perturbing action upon Uranus was calculated, and found to satisfy the observations of that planet much better than either Leverrier's or Adams's hypothesis had done. This was because the real action of Neptune upon the orbit of Uranus was of a different kind from what it had been assumed to be, those terms of the mathematical expressions which had been assumed to be the principal ones being really insignificant, and those which had been neglected as insignificant being really the controlling ones. The name Neptune was conferred by Encke, Leverrier having signified that he wished it called by his own name. The diameter of Neptune is 37,000 miles. Its distance from the sun is about 2,800,000,000 miles, and its period of revolution about 164 years.—Neptune's horse, a fish of the family Hippocampidæ; a sea-horse.—Neptune's ruffles, a retepore.—Neptune's spoonworm, a gephyrean, Thalassema neptuni.

Neptunian (nep-tū′ni-an), a. [< L. Neptunius, pertaining to Neptune, marine, < Neptunus, Neptune: see Neptune.] 1. Pertaining to Neptune, the god of the sea, or to the ocean or sea itself.—2. In geol., formed by water or in its presence. The word is used especially to designate an aqueous origin of certain formations, now generally admitted to be volcanic, but which according to the views of Werner were deposited from water. (See Huttonian and Wernerian.) A most violent discussion in regard to this subject was carried on, during the latter third of the eighteenth century, by geologists and theologians.

Neptunist (nep′tūn-ist), n. and a. [< Neptune + -ist.] I. n. 1†. A navigator; a seaman.

> Let the brave enginer, fine Daedalist, skilful Neptunist, marvelous Vulcanist, and every Mercuriall occupationer . . . be respected. Harvey, Pierce's Supererogation.

2. In geol., an advocate of or believer in the Neptunian theory; an opponent of the Vulcanists.

> Whenever a zealous Neptunist wished to draw the old man [Desmarest] into an argument, he was satisfied with replying "Go and see."
> Sir C. Lyell, Prin. of Geol. (ed. 1835), I. 87.

II. a. Of, pertaining to, or advocating the Neptunian theory.

> For the untenable Neptunist hypothesis, asserting a once-universal aqueous action unlike the present, Hutton substituted an aqueous action, marine and fluviatile, continuously operating as we now see it, antagonized by a periodic igneous action.
> H. Spencer, Study of Sociol., p. 227.

nepus (nē′pus), n. [Also nepos, nipos; perhaps < nip, or some similar form (cf. Sw. knapp, narrow, scanty; E. neap[1], in orig. sense 'scanty'), + house (ME. hus, etc.). For the second element, cf. the surnames Backus, Bellows (Bellus), reduced from bakehouse and bellhouse.] A gable (?). [Scotch.]

> In the title-deeds of an old property in St. Enoch Square, Glasgow, now occupied as an hotel called "His Lordship's Larder," reference is made to the garret room, 10 feet square, in the middle or nepos of the storey.
> N. and Q., 7th ser., IV. 65.

nepus-gable (nē′pus-gā″bl), n. A middle gable (?). [Scotch.]

> There being then no ronns to the houses, at every place, especially where the nepus-gables were towards the streets, the rain came gushing in a spout.
> Galt, The Provost, p. 201. (Jamieson.) ner†, nere[1]†, a. Nearer. Chaucer.

nere[2]†, adv., prep., and a. A Middle English form of near[1].

nere[3]†, n. A Middle English form of neer[2].

nere[4]†. A Middle English contraction of ne were, were not.

nere[5]†, adv. An obsolete contracted form of never.

Nereid (nē′rē-id), n. [< L. Nereïs (Nereïd-) = Gr. Νηρείς (Νηρειδ-), a sea-nymph, daughter of Nereus, < Νηρεύς, Nereus, a sea-god, < νηρός, wet.] 1. In Gr. myth., a sea-nymph, one of the daughters of Nereus and Doris, generally spoken of as fifty in number. The most famous among them were Amphitrite, Thetis, and Galatea. The Nereids were beautiful maidens helpful to voyagers, and constituted the main body of the female, as the Tritons did of the male, followers of Poseidon or Neptune. They were imagined as dancing, singing, playing musical instruments, wooed by the Tritons, and passing in long processions over the sea seated on hippocamps and other seamonsters. Monuments of ancient art represent them lightly draped or nude, in poses characterized by undulating lines, harmonizing with those of the ocean, and often riding on sea-monsters of fantastic forms.

> Her gentlewomen, like the Nereides,
> So many mermaids, tended her.
> Shak., A. and C., iii. 2. 211.

2. [l. c.] In zoöl., a sea-centiped; an errant marine worm of the family Nereidæ; in a wider sense, a marine annelid: applicable to nearly all of the polychætous worms.—3†. [l. c.] Some ocean organism that shines by night. See the quotation under noctilucous. Pennant.

Nereidæ (nē-rē′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Nereis + -idæ.] A family of annelids, typified by the genus Nereis. They have similar rings, a large proboscis, and the branchiæ obsolete or much reduced and combined with the lobes of the legs. The species live mostly along the sea-shore.

Nereides (nē-rē′i-dēz), n. pl. [NL., pl. of Nereis.] A family of worms, essentially the same as Nereidæ.

nereidian (nē-rē-id′i-an), a. and n. [< Nereid + -ian.] I. a. Resembling a nereid; pertaining to the Nereidæ, or having their characters; nereidous.

II. n. A nereid, or sea-worm of the family Nereidæ.

nereidous (nē′rē-id-us), a. Same as nereidian. ★Darwin, Voyage of Beagle, II. 259.

Nereis (nē′rē-is), n. [NL., < L. Nereïs, a Nereid: see Nereid.] 1. The typical genus of the family Nereidæ. It was formerly used with great latitude for nearly all of the nereids or errant marine annelids. N. pelagica is a well-known sea-worm of both coasts of the Atlantic. N. virens is a large New England species from 18 to 20 inches long, known as the chainworm.

Bait-worm (Nereis pelagica).

2. In entom., a genus of lepidopterous insects. Hübner, 1806.—3. In bot., a systematic account of the algæ or seaweeds of a locality or country: as, the Nereis Boreali-Americana, by Harvey.

nereite (nē′rē-īt), n. [< NL. Nereites, < L. Nereïs, a Nereid (see Nereid), + -ite[2].] A fossil trail supposed to have been made by a nereid or a related annelid; a member of a genus Nereites of Paleozoic age.

Nereites (nē-rē-ī′tēz), n. [NL.: see nereite.] A generic name of nereites.

> As regards the surface-tracks and trails of Errant Annelides, much difference of opinion exists, and the whole subject is shrouded in obscurity. . . . A few of these fossils may truly be of a vegetable nature, whilst as to others (such as Nereites) no certain conclusion can be arrived at.
> H. A. Nicholson, Man. of Palæontology, xiii.

Nereocystis (nē″rē-ō-sis′tis), n. [NL., < Gr. Νηρεύς, a sea-god (see Nereid), + κύστις, a bag, a bladder.] A gigantic seaweed of the family Laminariaceæ, having a simple filiform stem, sometimes several hundred feet in length, terminating in a huge club-shaped or spherical bladder, from which springs a tuft of dichotomously dividing fronds. N. priapus, the only species, is found on the northwestern coast of America and the opposite shores of Asia, where by its tangled stems it frequently forms floating islands upon which the sea-otters rest. It is there called bladder-kelp. See kelp[2].

nerft, n. A Middle English form of nerve. Chaucer.

Nerine (nē-rī′nē), n. [NL., < L. Nerine, a Nereid, < Nereus, Nereus: see Nereid.] Herbert's name (1820) for Imhofia, a genus of ornamental flowering bulbs of the family Amaryllidaceæ, known by the versatile anthers, many biseriate ovules in each cell, filaments dilated at the base, and thong-like leaves. There are about 9 species, all South African, producing a stout scape with an umbel of large scarlet, pink, or rose-colored flowers. Imhofia Sarniensis, the Guernsey lily, has been cultivated in Europe two hundred years or more, especially on the island of Guernsey, where tradition says it was introduced accidentally by shipwreck. It was mistakenly ascribed to Japan. This and the other species are now coming much into notice as autumn bloomers.

Nerita (nē-rī′tă), n. [NL., < L. nerita = Gr. νηρίτης, νηρείτης, a sea-mussel, a periwinkle, < Νηρεύς, a sea-god: see Nereid.] A genus of mollusks used with widely varying limits. (a) By Linnæus it was applied to a large and heterogeneous assemblage. (b) By later writers it has been restricted to a more or less well-defined group typical of the family Neritidæ. Also written Nerites.

Nerita ustulata.

neritacean (ner-i-tā′shē-an), a. and n. [< nerite + -acean.] I. a. Having the characters of a nerite; of or pertaining to the Neritidæ.

II. n. A member of the Neritidæ; a nerite.

nerite (nē′rīt), n. A gastropod of the genus Nerita or the family Neritidæ.

Neritidæ (nē-rit′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Nerita + -idæ.] A family of gastropods, typified by the genus Nerita. As limited by recent conchologists, it includes thysanopod rhipidoglossates, with a radula characterized by 7 median teeth (a small central, 2 wide transverse ones, and 4 small external ones), and on each side a wide lateral tooth and numerous narrow marginal ones. The shell is generally subglobular, but varies to a patelliform shape; it has a flattened or septiform columella and a semilunar aperture, while the interior is absorbed and destitute of whorl-partitions. The species are numerous and occur in all tropical seas, and a few are also residents of fresh waters. See cut under Navicella.

Nerita polita.—New Zealand.

neritite (ner′i-tīt), n. [< L. nerita, a sea-mussel (see Nerita), + -ite[2].] A fossil nerite.

Nerium (nē′ri-um), n. [NL. (Tournefort, 1700), < L. nerium, nerion, < Gr. νήριον, the oleander.] A genus of dicotyledonous sympetalous shrubs of the family Apocynaceæ and the tribe Echitideæ, and type of the subtribe Nerieæ, known by its erect follicles. There are 3 species, native from the Mediterranean to Japan. They are smooth erect shrubs, with rigid narrow whorled leaves, fragrant and showy pink, white, or yellowish flowers, and long straight pod-like fruit filled with woolly seeds. See oleander.

nero-antico (nā″rō-an-tē′kō), n. [It.: nero, black (see negro); antico, ancient (see antique).] A marble of deep and uniform black, which takes a high polish. It is found among ruins of ancient buildings of the Roman empire, and the pieces have been much used by decorators of later times.

nerret, adv. An obsolete form of near[1].

nerval (nėr′val), a. [= F. Pg. nerval = It. nervale, < LL. nervalis, < L. nervus, sinew, nerve: see nerve.] Of or pertaining to a nerve or nerves; neural.

nervation (nėr-vā′shon), n. [= F. nervation; as nerve + -ation.] The arrangement or distribution of nerves. Specifically—(a) In bot., the disposition of the fibrovascular bundles in the blades of leaves, the sepals or petals of flowers, the wing-like expansions of samaroid fruits, etc.: a character which has assumed special importance in the study of fossil plants, since it has been proved to have generic rank, while the form and outline of leaves have only specific rank. The nervation of leaves, as studied and classified by A. P. de Candolle (1827), Giuseppe Bianconi (1838), Baron von Ettingshausen (1851–61), Oswald Heer (1856), and later authors, is based primarily on the relative rank of the nerves, and secondarily on their course through the leaf. As regards the rank of the nerves, the leaves of dicotyledonous plants are usually either pinnately or palmately nerved. This refers to the primary nerves. In pinnately nerved leaves there is only one primary nerve, the midrib, which may be regarded as a continuation of the petiole, and from which there are given off secondary nerves which proceed at various angles through the blade toward or to its margin. These secondaries may or may not give off other nerves called tertiaries, and even these may produce quaternary nerves. In palmately nerved leaves there arise, usually from the summit of the petiole, two or more (sometimes numerous) more or less divergent primary nerves, which may have nearly equal strength, but more commonly the central one is thickest and may still be denominated the midrib. In the latter case the others are called lateral primaries. Any or all of the primaries of a palmately nerved leaf may give off secondaries as in pinnately nerved leaves, but these more commonly proceed from the outer pair. Leaves of only three primaries are sometimes called triplinerved; those of five, quintuplinerved. Peltate leaves usually have a peltate nervation, which may be regarded as a modification of the palmate nervation. The pedate nervation is simply a case of palmate nervation in which there are several nearly equal primaries. The terms penninerved, palminerved, peltinerved, and pedalinerved were suggested by De Candolle for these several kinds of leaves. As regards the course of the nerves through the blade and their ultimate disposition, the following classes are distinguished: (1) craspedodrome [< Gr. κράσπεδον, edge, margin, + -δρομος, < δραμεῖν, run], the nerves passing directly to the margin of the blade; (2) camptodrome [< Gr. καμπτος verbal adj. of κάμπτειν, bend, curve], the nerves curving (usually forward) near the margin, and either losing themselves in the parenchyma, or joining, arching, or otherwise anastomosing within the margin; (3) brochidodrome [< Gr. βροχίς (βροχιδ-), dim. of βρόχος, a noose, loop], the nerves forming loops within the blade of the leaf; (4) acrodrome [< Gr. ἄκρος, at the point], the nerves passing upward and forward and terminating in the apex or point of the leaf; (5) dictyodrome [< Gr. δικτυον, a net], the nerves soon dividing up and losing themselves in the general network of the leaf (see explanation of nervilles, below); (6) hyphodrome [< Gr. ὑφή, a web], the nerves, of lower rank than primaries, so lost in the thick, coriaceous tissues of the leaf as to be nearly or quite invisible at the surface; (7) paryphodrome [< Gr. παρυφή, a border woven along a robe], a strong nerve passing round the entire margin of the leaf, forming a sort of hem or border; (8) marginal, a distinct nerve passing along the margin of the leaf, parallel to it, but separated from it by a narrow interval; (9) parallelodrome [< Gr. παράλληλος, parallel], the nerves running parallel to one another, either longitudinally, as in grasses, or horizontally from the midrib to the margin, as in the banana-tree; (10) campylodrome [< Gr. καμπύλος, curved], the nerves passing in a gentle curve from base to apex of the leaf, the interval between them increasing gradually in width from either end to the middle. The last two classes are almost wholly restricted to monocotyledonous plants. Besides the above, there is the dichotomous or forking nervation of most ferns and some other plants. From the various nerves as thus described there usually proceed many much finer ones which join and anastomose in various ways, forming a network of meshes of different shapes, usually angular, and either rectangular, trapezoidal, or nearly square, the spaces inclosed by which are known as areolæ. To such nerves the term nervilles has been applied. Physiologically considered, all nerves consist of vascular bundles which pass from the branch through the petiole, if there is one, into the base of the leaf, the primary fascicle of which is subsequently divided up to furnish the various nerves of the leaf, the primary nerves further dividing to supply the secondaries, these to supply the tertiaries, etc., and no nerves or fibers originate within the leaf. (b) In zoöl., the arrangement or disposition of the nervures, nerves, or veins of an insect's wing; the set or system of nerves as thus arranged; neuration; venation. (c) In anat., the way or mode in which the nerves are disposed: as, the nervation of a vertebrate consists of a cerebrospinal and a sympathetic system.

5, palmately nerved brochidodrome paryphodrome leaf of Cocculus Haydenianus, from the Fort Union group of Montana; 6, palmately nerved leaf of Hedera Brunerí, from the Cretaceous (Laramie) of Wyoming.

7, transversely parallelodrome nervation of Macrotæniopteris magnifolia, from the Trias of Virginia.

8, longitudinally parallelodrome nervation of a fossil palm-leaf, from the Fort Union group of Montana; 9, campylodrome leaf of Oreodoxites plicatus, from the Cretaceous (Laramie) of Colorado.

nerve (nėrv), n. [< ME. nerve*, nerfe, nerf = LG. nerf, nerve = G. nerv, nerve = Sw. nerv = Dan. nerve, < OF. nerf, F. nerf = Sp. nervio, OSp. niervo = Pg. It. nervo, < L. nervus, a sinew, a tendon, a fiber, a nerve, string of a musical instrument or of a bow, etc., also vigor, force, strength, energy, = Gr. νεῦρον, a sinew, tendon, nerve, a string; perhaps ult. akin to snare.] †1. A sinew, tendon, or other hard white cord of the body: the original meaning of the word, at the time when nervous tissue was not distinguished from some forms of connective tissue. See aponeurosis.

> Men myghte many an arwe fynde
> That thyrled hadde horn and nerf and rynd.
> Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 642.
>
> Thy nerves are in their infancy again,
> And have no vigour in them.
> Shak., Tempest, ii. 1. 484.

2. In anat., a nerve-fiber, or usually a bundle of nerve-fibers, running from a central ganglionic organ to peripheral mechanisms, either active (as glands and muscles) or receptive (sense-organs). The nerve-fibers are bound together into a primitive bundle called a funiculus. The connective tissue between the fibers within the funiculus is the endoneurium, and the connective tissue sheathing the funiculus is the perineurium. In the larger nerves several funiculi may be bound together into one trunk by connective tissue which forms the epineurium. See cut under median.

> Michael from Adam's eyes the film removed,
> . . . then purged with euphrasy and rue
> The visual nerve, for he had much to see.
> Milton, P. L., xi. 415.

In its essential nature, a nerve is a definite tract of living substance through which the molecular changes which occur in any one part of the organism are conveyed to and affect some other part. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 61.

3. Something resembling a nerve (either a sinew, as in the earlier figurative uses, or a nerve in the present sense, 2) in form or function.

> We do learn
> By those that know the very nerves of state,
> His givings-out were of an infinite distance

> The Normans, so far as they became English, added nerve and force to the system with which they identified themselves. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 91.

(c) Assurance; boldness; cheek. [Slang.]

5. pl. Hysterical nervousness. See nervousness (c). [Colloq.]—6. In entom., a nervure; a vein; a costa; one of the tubular ridges or thickenings which ramify in the wings. See nervure, 3.—7. In bot., one of a system of ribs or principal veins in a leaf. See nervation.—8. In arch., same as nervure, 1.—9. A technical name applied to the non-porous quality acquired by cork when, in its preparation for use in the arts, its surface is slightly charred nervature (nėr′vā-tūr), n. [< nerve + -ature.] In bot., zoöl., and anat., same as nervation.

nervaura (nėr-vâ′rä), n. [NL., < L. nervus, a nerve, + aura, air.] A hypothetical subtle essence radiating or emanating from the nervous system, and enveloping the body in a kind of sphere: same as aura[1], 1.

nervauric (nėr-vâ′rik), a. [< nervaura + -ic.] Of or pertaining to nervaura.

Brit.*, VI. 402.—Abducent nerve. See abducent.—Accelerans nerves. Same as accelerator nerves.—Accelerator nerves, certain nervous filaments passing to the heart through the sympathetic, and causing on stimulation an increased pulse-rate. Also called augmentor nerves.—Accessory nerve of Willis, the spinal accessory nerve.—Acoustic nerve. Same as auditory nerve.—Alveolar nerves, ambulacral nerve. See the adjectives.—Anterior cutaneous nerves of the abdomen, two or three small branches of the abdominal intercostals.—Anterior cutaneous nerves of the thorax, terminal twigs of the intercostal distributed to the skin over the pectoralis major muscle.—Anterior tibial nerve. See tibial.—Arnold's nerve, the auricular branch of the vagus nerve.—Auditory nerve. See auditory.—Axillary nerve. See axillary.—Bell's nerve, the posterior thoracic nerve, a branch from the brachial plexus to the serratus magnus muscle, called by Sir C. Bell the external respiratory nerve.—Buccal, buccinator, buccolabial, carotid, cavernous nerve. See the qualifying words.—Cardiac nerve. (a) Three nerves, superior, middle, and inferior, from the cervical sympathetic to the superficial and deep cardiac plexuses. (b) Branches of the pneumogastric to the cardiac plexus, variable in number. Those arising in the neck are called cervical cardiac; in the thorax, thoracic.—Cerebrospinal nerves, nerves coming directly from the cerebrospinal axis: in contradistinction to sympathetic nerves.—Cervicardiac nerves. See cervicardiac.—Cervicofacial nerve, one of the divisions of the facial nerve, distributed to the lower face and upper neck.—Ciliary, circumesophageal, circumflex, cranial, crural, depressor nerve. See the qualifying words.—Dental nerves, branches of the fifth nerve supplying the teeth and gums. (a) Anterior dental nerve, a branch of the superior maxillary supplying the upper front teeth and contiguous part of the antrum. Also called superior anterior alveolar. (b) Inferior dental nerve, the largest branch of the inferior maxillary, running through the inferior dental canal and supplying the teeth of the lower jaw. It gives off the mylohyoid and mental branches. Also called inferior alveolar. (c) Posterior dental nerve, a branch of the superior maxillary distributed to the mucous membrane of the cheek and gum and the back teeth of the upper jaw. Also called posterior superior alveolar.—Descending cervical nerve, a branch of the hypoglossal in the neck, receiving filaments from the cervical nerves, and distributed to the omo-, sterno-, and thyro-hyoid muscles. Also called descendens noni.—Digastric nerve, dorsal nerves. See the adjectives.—Eighth nerve. (a) The glossopharyngeal. (b) The glossopharyngeal, vagus, and spinal accessory nerves.—Esophageal nerves branches of the vagus that go to form the esophageal plexus.—External cutaneous nerve of the arm. See musculocutaneous.—External cutaneous nerve of the thigh, a branch from the second and third lumbar nerves passing under Poupart's ligament to be distributed to the integument of the outer side of the hip and thigh.—External saphenous nerve. See saphenous.—Facial nerve. See facial.—Fifth nerve, the trigeminus nerve—Fourth nerve, the trochlear nerve.—Frontal, genital, glossopharyngeal, gluteal, gustatory, hypoglossal nerve. See the adjectives.—Gastric nerves, terminal branches of the vagus, mainly distributed to the stomach. Those of the left side form the anterior gastric plexus on the anterior wall, and those of the right side the posterior gastric plexus on the posterior wall of the stomach. The posterior especially assists in the formation of the sympathetic plexuses of the other abdominal viscera.—Great auricular nerves. See auricular.—Inferior cardiac nerve, a nerve on either side arising from the inferior cervical or first thoracic ganglion, and passing down to join the deep cardiac plexus. Also called nervus cardiacus minor.—Inferior hemorrhoidal nerve, a branch of the pudic distributed to the external sphincter and the skin of the anus, and in the female to the lower part of the vagina.—Inferior pudendal nerve. See pudendal.—Inframaxillary, inhibitory intercostal, intercostohumeral nerve. See the adjectives.—Internal cutaneous nerve of the arm, a branch of the inner cord of the brachial plexus, distributed to the skin of the lower inner part of the arm and of the ulnar side of the forearm.—Internal cutaneous nerve of the leg, a branch of the anterior crural distributed to the skin on the inner side of the thigh and upper part of the leg.—Internal saphenous nerve. See saphenous.—Interosseous nerve. (a) Anterior, the longest branch of the median, arising a little below the elbow, and lying upon the interosseous membrane. It supplies the flexor longus pollicis, deep digital flexor, interosseous membrane, forearm-bones, and wrist-joint. (b) Of the foot, slender branches of the anterior tibial to the metatarso-phalangeal articulations. (c) Posterior, the larger terminal division of the musculospiral. It supplies the short supinator and all the extensor muscles on the back of the arm, except the long radiocarpal.—Jacobson's nerve, the tympanic branch of the glossopharyngeal nerve.—Lacrymal nerve, a branch of the ophthalmic nerve distributed to the lacrymal gland and upper eyelid. Also called lacrymo-palpebral.—Lateral cutaneous nerves, branches of the intercostal nerves distributed chiefly to the skin of the side of the chest and abdomen and that over the scapula and latissimus dorsi muscle.—Lingual nerve, lumbar nerves, median nerve, mental nerves. See the adjectives.—Masseteric nerve, a branch from the inferior maxillary nerve to the masseter muscle.—Meningeal nerve, a small branch of the vagus distributed to the dura of the cerebellar fossa. Also called recurrent.—Middle cardiac nerve. See cardiac.—Motor oculi nerve, the third cranial nerve, supplying all the muscles of the orbit except the superior oblique and external rectus, and giving motor filaments to the iris and ciliary muscles. It arises superficially from the inner side of the crus, in front of the pons. Also called oculomotor.—Mylohyoid, nasopalatine, etc., nerve. See the adjectives.—Nasal nerve, a branch of the ophthalmic nerve distributed to the mucous membrane at the fore part of the nose, and to the skin of the tip and wing. It gives off the long ciliary nerves, the infratrochlear, and a branch to the ophthalmic ganglion. Also called oculonasal.—Nerve of Cotunnius [named after Cotugno, an Italian anatomist, 1736–1822], the nasopalatine nerve from Meckel's ganglion. See nasopalatine.—Nerve of Scarpa. Same as nasopalatine nerve.—Nerve of Wrisberg. (a) The lesser internal cutaneous nerve of the arm, a branch of the brachial plexus to the integument on the inner side of the arm. (b) The pars intermedia of the facial nerve.—Nerves of Lancisi, certain longitudinal striations on the upper surface of the corpus callosum. Also called striæ longitudinales.—Ninth nerve. (a) The glossopharyngeal nerve. (b) The hypoglossal nerve.—Obturator, ophthalmic, optic, orbital, palatine, pathetic, etc., nerve. See the qualifying words.—Palmar cutaneous nerves, branches of the median and ulnar to the integument of the palm of the hand.—Perforating cutaneous nerves, a slender branch of the fourth sacral, distributed to the skin over the inner and lower part of the gluteus maximus.—Perforating nerve of Casser, the musculocutaneous nerve from the brachial plexus, which perforates the coracobrachialis muscle.—Perineal, peroneal, petrosal, pharyngeal, phrenic, plantar, popliteal, pterygoid, pudic, pulmonary, etc., nerve. See the adjectives.—Posterior auricular nerve, a branch of the facial nerve supplying the postauricular and occipital muscles.—Posterior tibial nerve. See tibial.—Radial nerve, one of the two principal branches of the musculospiral nerve, running along the radial side of the forearm in relation with the radial artery.—Sciatic nerves, sensorimotor nerve, sensory nerve. See the adjectives.—Seventh nerve. (a) The facial nerve. (b) The facial and auditory nerves.—Sixth nerve, the abducent nerve.—Small internal cutaneous nerve, a small branch from the inner cord of the brachial plexus, distributed to the skin of the inner lower half of the upper arm. Also called nerve of Wrisberg.—Small occipital nerve. See occipital.—Sphenopalatine nerves. See sphenopalatine.—Spinal accessory nerves. See accessory.—Spinal, splanchnic, suboccipital, subscapular nerve. See the adjectives.—Superior, upper, or superficial cardiac nerve, a nerve arising from the superior cervical sympathetic ganglion, the right nerve going to the deep, and the left usually to the superficial cardiac plexus. Also called nervus superficialis cordis.—Superior maxillary nerve. See maxillary.—Supraclavicular, suprascapular, sympathetic, temporofacial, temporomalar, etc., nerve. See the adjectives.—Third nerve, the oculomotor nerve.—Thoracic, trochlear, tympanic, ulnar, etc., nerve. See the adjectives.—Vidian nerve, a nerve formed by the union of the large superficial petrosal from the facial nerve and the deep petrosal from the carotid plexus of the sympathetic, and passing through the Vidian canal to terminate in Meckel's ganglion.

nerve (nėrv), v. t.; pret. and pp. nerved, ppr. nerving. [< nerve, n.] To give nerve to; supply strength or vigor to; arm with force, physical or moral: as, rage nerved his arm.

> I thank thee, Roderick, for the word!
> It nerves my heart, it steels my sword.
> Scott, L. of the L., v. 14.

> Didst thou, when nerving thee to this attempt,
> Ne'er range thy mind's extent, as some wide hall,
> Dazzled by shapes that filled its length with light?
> Browning, Paracelsus.

> The song that nerves a nation's heart
> Is in itself a deed. Tennyson, Epilogue.

> Not fumes to slacken thought and will,
> But bracing essences that nerve
> To wait, to dare, to strive, to serve.
> Lowell, To C. F. Bradford.

nerve-aura (nėrv'â″rä), n. Same as nervaura.

nerve-broach (nėrv'brōch), n. A wire instrument, sometimes notched, for extracting the nerve of a tooth.

nerve-canal (nėrv'ka-nal″), n. A groove or tubular perforation traversed by a nerve.

nerve-capping (nėrv'kap″ing), n. A cap placed over a tooth to preserve an exposed nerve.

nerve-cell (nėrv'sel), n. 1. Any cell constituting part of the nervous system.—2. More particularly, one of the essential cells of the nervous centers, forming, in its entirety or in part, the parts along which the nervous impulses are propagated and distributed in the activity of such centers. These cells have usually finely branched processes, and from some of them proceed the fibers of peripheral nerves. Also called ganglion-cell. See cut under cell.

nerve-center (nėrv'sen″tėr), n. A group of ganglion-cells closely connected with one another and acting together in the performance of some function, as the cerebral centers, psychical centers, respiratory or vasomotor centers.

nerve-chord, n. See nerve-cord.

nerve-collar (nėrv'kol″ėr), n. The nervous ring or collar around the gullet in many invertebrates.

nerve-cord (nėrv'kôrd), n. A cord composed of nervous tissue; a nerve. Also nerve-chord.

> The tubular condition of the cerebro-spinal nerve-cord of Vertebrata. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 184.

nerve-corpuscle (nėrv'kôr″pus-l), n. A nerve-cell.

nerved (nėrvd), a. [< nerve + -ed[2].] 1. Having nerves; especially, having nerves of a specified character. Specifically—2. In bot., ribbed: applied to leaves having fibrovascular bundles ramifying through them, like veins or nerves in the animal structure. Also nervous. See nervation.—3. In entom., having nervures or veins: applied to the wings of insects.—4. In her., having nerves, as a leaf: said of a leaf when the nerves and veins are of a different tincture from the rest of the leaf.

nerve-drill (nėrv'dril), n. A dental instrument for drilling or enlarging a pulp-cavity.

nerve-ending (nėrv'en″ding), n. The structure in which a nerve terminates, as an end-plate in a muscle.

nerve-fiber (nėrv'fī″bėr), n. A minute cord conveying molecular disturbance which serves as a stimulus to some peripheral active organ or to some central nervous mechanism. The nerve-fibers may form peripheral nerves, or may constitute parts of the cerebrospinal axis, or of similar central organs in invertebrates. Two principal forms are recognized, the medullated nerve-fibers and the non-medullated nerve-fibers (or fibers of Remak).

nerve-fibril (nėrv'fī″bril), n. One of the exceedingly fine filaments of which the axis-cylinder of a nerve-fiber is composed.

nerve-fibrilla (nėrv'fī-bril″ä), n. Same as nerve-fibril.

nerve-force (nėrv'fōrs), n. The energy, actual or potential, of the nervous system; the capacity of the nervous system for work.

nerve-hill (nėrv'hil), n. A nerve-hillock or neuromast. J. A. Ryder.

nerve-hillock (nėrv'hil″ok), n. Same as neuromast.

nerveless (nėrv'les), a. [< nerve + -less.] Without nerve; destitute of strength; weak.

> There sunk Thalia, nerveless, cold, and dead.
> Pope, Dunciad, iv. 41.

> His [Peter Angelis's] pencil was easy, bright, and flowing, but his colouring too faint, and nerveless.
> Walpole, Anecdotes of Painting, IV. i.

> No doubt we have in Coleridge the most striking example in literature of a great genius given in trust to a nerveless will and a fitful purpose. Lowell, Coleridge.

nervelessness (nėrv'les-nes), n. A nerveless state; lack of vigor; weakness; imbecility.

> A pusillanimity and nervelessness utterly unparalleled.
> New York Tribune, April 21, 1862.

> The "North China Herald" says the quality of nervelessness distinguishes the Chinaman from the European.
> Sci. Amer., N. S., LIX. 198.

nerve-motion (nėrv'mō″shon), n. Molecular movement in nervous substance, constituting nervous action.

> I maintain that feeling is not a product of nerve-motion in anything like the sense that light is sometimes a product of heat, or that friction-electricity is a product of sensible motion. J. Fiske, N. A. Rev., CXXVI. 36.

nerve-needle (nėrv'nē″dl), n. In dentistry, a tool used for broaching out a pulp-cavity.

nerve-obtundent (nėrv'ob-tun″dent), n. A medicine used to deaden the nerve of a tooth: more commonly obtundent.

nerve-paste (nėrv'pāst), n. A mixture of arsenic (generally with creosote or morphine) used to kill the nerve of a tooth.

nerve-path (nėrv'päth), n. A course, especially in the central nervous organs, along which a nervous impulse can propagate itself.

nerve-pentagon (nėrv'pen ta-gon), n. In echinoderms, same as esophageal ring (which see, under esophageal).

nerve-plate (nėrv'plāt), n. A layer or lamina of nervous tissue which may develop into a nerve-tube or nerve-cord.

> Continuation of dorsal nerve-plate as a nerve-cord.
> Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 187.

★ nerve-ring (nėrv'ring), n. The nervous system of some acalephs, as the Medusæ, forming a fibrous ring round the edge of the disk, with cellular ganglionic enlargements at regular intervals; a nerve-collar.

> This nerve-ring, which is most accurately known in the Geryonidæ, is supported on the annular cartilage > Gegenbaur, Comp. Anat. (trans.), p. 109.

nerve-rudiment (nėrv'rō″di-ment), n. The rudiment of a nerve.

> The original attachment of the nerve-rudiment to the medullary wall is not permanent.
> Foster and Balfour, Embryology, p. 129.

nerve-shaken (nėrv'shā″kn), a. Having the nervous system weakened or enfeebled.

nerve-storm (nėrv'stôrm), n. A paroxysmal attack of nervous disturbance, as megrim.

nerve-stretching (nėrv'strech″ing), n. In surg., the operation of forcibly stretching a nerve, as for neuralgia.

nerve-substance (nėrv'sub″stans), n. The substance of which the essential part of a nerve- or ganglion-cell and its processes is composed.

nerve-tire (nėrv'tīr), n. Neurasthenia.

nerve-tissue (nėrv'tish″ō), n. The tissue of which the nervous system is composed, exclusive of the requisite sustentacular and vascular parts. It includes the nerve-fibers and the ganglion-cells.

nerve-track (nėrv′trak), n. Any path of nerve-fibers, but especially in the cerebrospinal axis, along which nervous impulses travel.

nerve-tube (nėrv′tūb), n. 1†. A nerve-fiber. Hoblyn.—2. A hollow cord of nervous or embryonic nervous tissue, as the spinal cord of a vertebrate embryo.

The Craniates' ancestor had a dorsal median nerve, which has increased in size and importance so as to become the nerve-tube of existing forms. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 183.

nerve-tuft (nėrv′tuft), n. A minute plexus or network of nerve-fibers. Beale, Protoplasm, p. 267.

nerve-tunic (nėrv′tū″nik), n. An investiture by nerves or nervous tissue; a plexus or ramified set of nerves inclosing the body or any part of it.

An elongate animal, with a plexiform nerve-tunic. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 184.

nerve-twig (nėrv′twig), n. One of the small or ultimate ramifications of a nerve; a little nerve given off from a larger branch.

nerve-wave (nėrv′wāv), n. Wave-motion in a nerve, transmitting nervous excitation in a manner supposedly analogous to wave-motions in purely physical media. Compare brain-wave.

Throughout the world the sum-total of motion is ever the same, but its distribution into heat-waves, light-waves, nerve-waves, etc., varies from moment to moment. J. Fiske, N. A. Rev., CXXVI. 35.

nerve-winged (nėrv′wingd), a. In entom., having the nerves or nervures of the wings conspicuous; specifically, of or pertaining to the Neuroptera, neuropterous.

nerviduct (nėr′vi-dukt), n. [< L. nervus, a nerve, + ductus, a duct.] An opening in a bone through which a nerve is conducted. Coues, 1882.

nerville (nėr′vil), n. [< NL. nervillus*, dim. of L. nervus, nerve: see nerve.] In bot., a very fine nerve or vein traversing the parenchyma of a leaf. See nervation.

nervimotor (nėr′vi-mō-tọr), a. and n. [< L. nervus, a nerve, + motor, a mover: see motor.] I. a Pertaining to or causing nervimotion.

II. n. That which causes nervimotion.

nervimuscular (nėr-vi-mus′kū-lär), a. [< L. nervus, a nerve, + musculus, a muscle: see muscular.] Of or pertaining to both nerve and ★muscle; neuromyological. Coues, 1887.

nervine (nėr′vin), a. and n. [< L. nervinus, made of sinews or fibers, < nervus, a sinew, a fiber, a nerve: see nerve and *-ine*¹.] I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to the nerves.—2. Capable of quieting nervous excitement, or otherwise acting upon the nerves.

II. n. A drug used in nervous diseases.

nervose (nėr′vōs), a. [< L. nervosus, full of sinews or fibers, nervous: see nervous.] 1. In bot., same as nerved.—2. In zoöl., nerved, as an insect's wing; having nervature.

nervosity (nėr-vos′i-ti), n. [= F. nervosité = Pr. nervositat = Sp. nervosidad = Pg. nervosidade = It. nervosità, < L. nervosita(t-)s, strength, thickness, < nervosus, full of sinews, nervous, < nervus, nerve: see nerve.] 1. The quality of being nervous; nervousness. Worcester.—2. In bot., the state of being nerved.

nervous (nėr′vus), a. [= F. nerveux = Sp. Pg. It. nervoso, < L. nervosus, full of sinews or fibers, sinewy, nervous, vigorous, < nervus, sinew, nerve: see nerve.] 1. Full of nerves.

We may easily imagine what acerbity of pain must be endured by our Lord . . . by the piercing his hands and feet, parts very nervous, and exquisitely sensible. Barrow, Sermons, I. 32. (Latham.)

2. Sinewy; strong; vigorous; well-strung.

What nervous arms he boasts! how firm his tread!
His limbs how turn'd!
Broome, in Pope's Odyssey, viii. 147.

3. Possessing or manifesting vigor of mind; characterized by force or strength in sentiment or style: as, a nervous historian.

The pleadings . . . were then short, nervous, and perspicuous. Blackstone.

Though it ["Arcadia"] contains some nervous and elegant passages, yet the plan of it is poor. Gifford, Note to B. Jonson's Every Man out of his [Humour, ii. 1.

The style is sometimes clumsy and unwieldy, but nervous, masculine, and such as became a soldier. De Quincey, Style, iii.

4. Of or pertaining to the nerves; seated in or affecting some part of the nervous system: as, a nervous disease; a nervous impulse; a nervous action.—5. Having the nerves affected; having weak or diseased nerves; easily agitated or excited; weak; timid.

Poor, weak, nervous creatures. Cheyne.

Some of Johnson's whims on literary subjects can be compared only to that strange nervous feeling which made him uneasy if he had not touched every post between the Mitre tavern and his own lodgings. Macaulay, Boswell's Johnson.

Seneca himself was constitutionally a nervous and timid man, endeavouring, not always with success, to support himself by a sublime philosophy. Lecky, Europ. Morals, I. 204.

6†. In bot., same as nerved.—Nervous center. See nerve-center.—Nervous deafness, deafness from disease of the auditory nerve or brain-centers.—Nervous fever. See *fever*¹.—Nervous fluid, the fluid formerly supposed to circulate through the nerves, and regarded as the agent of sensation and motion.—Nervous headache, headache with nervous irritability; megrim.—Nervous impulse. See impulse.—Nervous prostration, weakness or depression due to the want of nervous power; neurasthenia.—Nervous substance, the substance of which the essential part of a nerve or a ganglion-cell and its processes is composed.—Nervous system, the nerve-centers with the peripheral nerves and organs of sense. The function of this system is to direct the functions of active organs, muscular and epithelial, in response to the varying states of the body, its several parts and its environment, in such manner as shall conduce to life and health and the bearing and raising of healthy offspring. Whether the nervous system has a direct trophic influence on passive tissues, protective or sustentacular, is undetermined.—Stomatogastric nervous system. See stomatogastric.—Sympathetic nervous system. See sympathetic.—Syn. 3. Forcible.—5. Timorous, excitable, high-strung.

nervously (nėr′vus-li), adv. In a nervous manner. (a) With strength or vigor.

He [Marston] thus nervously describes the strength of custom. T. Warton, Hist. Eng. Poetry, IV. 47.

(b) With weakness or agitation of the nerves; with restless agitation.

Rendered nervously cautious and anxious by so many successive losses. Scott.

nervousness (nėr′vus-nes), n. The state or quality of being nervous. (a) The state of being composed of nerves. (b) Strength; force; vigor.

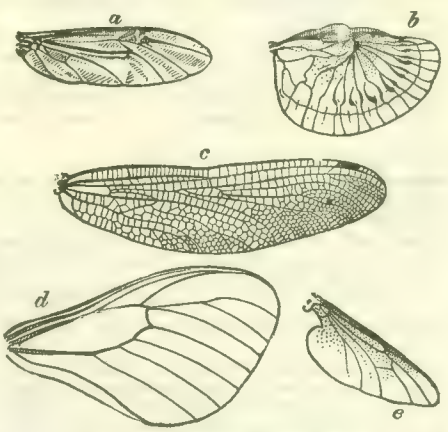
If there had been epithets joined with the other substantives, it would have weakened the nervousness of the sentence. J. Warton, Essay on Pope.

(c) Morbid psychical irritability; unsteadiness of nervous control; a state of despondency consequent on an affection of the nerves.



If we mistake not, moreover, a certain quality of nervousness had become more or less manifest, even in so solid a specimen of Puritan descent as the gentleman now under discussion. Hawthorne, Seven Gables, viii.

nervular (nėr′vū-lär), a. [< nervule + *-ar*³.] In entom., pertaining to, on, or near the nervures of an insect's wing: as, nervular dots, lines, etc.

nervule (nėr′vūl), n. [= F. nervule, < L. nervulus, dim. of nervus, a nerve: see nerve.] A small nerve; specifically, in entom., a small nervure or vein of the wing, emitted by a larger one or connecting two other nervures. Also called nervulet, veinlet, venule, or branch.

nervulet (nėr′vū-let), n. [< nervule + -let.] In entom., same as nervule.—Coronate nervulet. See coronate.

nervure (nėr′vūr), n. [< F. nervure, a rib (in arch., bot., etc.), < L. nervus, a sinew, fiber, nerve: see nerve.] 1. In arch.: (a) Any one of the ribs of a groined vault, but especially that part of a rib which forms one of the sides of a compartment of the groining. (b) A projecting molding, particularly if small and acute-angled in profile. Also called nerve.—2. In bot., a vein or nerve of a leaf.—3. In entom., one of the tubes or tubular thickenings which ramify in an insect's wing; a nerve, vein, or costa proceeding along one of certain definite lines, to strengthen the wing and, through a central hollow, to nourish it. The wing is developed as a sac-like projection of the body-wall, and is hence composed of two closely applied membranes. The nervures are exactly apposed thickenings of the dorsal and ventral membranes. In most insects a groove extends along the inner surface of the thickening of each wall, forming a tube in the center of each nervure within which the fluids of the body circulate. The larger ones also contain tracheæ. The number of these nervures is greatest and their arrangement is most complicated in some of the Orthoptera and Neuroptera, while they are almost entirely wanting in some of the small Hymenoptera. The nervures furnish important zoölogical characters. See cut in preceding column.—Coronate, cross, discoidal, externomedian, internomedian, marginal, etc., nervure. See the adjectives.—Inner apical nervure. See inner.

Nervures or Venation of Wings in Insects.

a, Coleoptera: common chafer (Melolontha vulgaris); b, Euplexoptera: earwig (Forficula auricularis); c, Odonata: dragon-fly (Æschna maculatissima); d, Lepidoptera: butterfly (Parnassius apollo); e, Diptera: a fly (Bibio marci).

★nervus (nėr′vus), n.; pl. nervi (-vī). [L. nervus: see nerve.] In anat. and zoöl., a nerve.

nervy (nėr′vi), a. [< nerve + *-y*¹.] 1. Vigorous; sinewy; strong, as if well-nerved or full of nervous force.

Death, that dark spirit, in 's nervy arm doth lie. Shak., Cor., ii. 1. 177.

Between
His nervy knees there lay a boar-spear keen. Keats, Endymion, i.

2. Courageous; having or exhibiting fortitude or nerve.

Yonder brisk and sinewy fellow has taken one short, nervy step into the ring, chanting with rising energy. G. W. Cable, The Century, XXXI. 523.

Nesæa (nē-sē′ä), n. [NL. (Commerson, 1789), < L. Nesæe, < Gr. Νησαίη, the name of a sea-nymph or Nereid, fem. of νησαῖος, of an island, < νῆσος, an island.] A genus of dicotyledonous plants of the family Lythraceæ, type of the tribe Nesæeæ, known by the three- to six-celled capsule wholly concealed within the calyx. There are 44 species, leafy erect herbs or shrubs, with four-angled branches and purplish or bluish flowers, natives of warmer Asia, Africa, Australia, and America. Decodon verticillatus, in the United States, a conspicuous inhabitant of shallow waters, with opposite or whorled leaves and long arching tufted stems, enormously thickened below, with remarkable white spongy and floccose tissue (aërenchyma), has been referred to this genus. This species is called swamp-loosestrife.

nescience (nesh′iens), n. [= F. nescience = Sp. Pg. nesciencia = It. nescienza, < LL. nescientia, ignorance, < L. nescien(t-)s, ignorant: see nescient.] The state of not knowing; lack of knowledge; ignorance.

The ignorance and involuntary nescience of men. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 800.

nescient (nesh′ient), a. [= OF. nescient, < L. nescien(t-)s, ppr. of nescire, be ignorant, know not, < ne, not, + scire, know: see science.] Destitute of knowledge; ignorant; characterized by or exhibiting nescience. Coles, 1717.

nescious (nesh′ius), a. [< L. nescius, ignorant.] Same as nescient.

He that understands our thoughts . . . cannot be nescious of our works. Rev. T. Adams, Works, II. 171.

nescock†, n. See nestcock.

nese¹†, v. t. An obsolete form of neeze.

nese²†, n. An obsolete form of *nose*¹.

nesh (nesh), a. [< ME. nesh, nesch, nessch, neysch, < AS. hnesc, hnæsc, soft, tender, = MD. nesch, nes, soft, wet, = Goth. hnaskwus, soft, tender. Cf. nask, nasky, nasty.] 1†. Soft; tender.

I was fader of his flesch,
His Moder hedde an herte nesch.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 143.

Take wylde tansey, and grynde yt, and make yt neshe, & ley it therto. Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 36.

It semeth for love his harte is tender nessh.
Court of Love, l. 1092.

2. Delicate; weak; poor-spirited. [Prov. Eng.]

Synne was harde, hys blood was nessche,
To defende folk fro feendys wode.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 217.

3. Soft; friable; crumbly. [Prov. Eng.]—For hard or for nesh†, in hard or in nesh†, come weal, come woe; in good fortune or bad.

In nesse, in hard, y pray the nowe,
In al stedes thou him avowe.
Arthour and Merlin, p. 110. (Halliwell.)

nesh† (nesh), v. t. [< nesh, a.] To make soft, tender, or weak.

Nesh not your womb [stomach] by drinking immoderately. Ashmole, Theatrum Chemicum (1652), p. 113. (Latham.) neshen† (nesh′n), v. t. [< nesh + *-en*¹. See nesh.] To make tender or soft.

nesiote (nē'si-ōt), a. [< Gr. νησιώτης, an islander, < νῆσος, an island.] Insular; inhabiting an island.

neski, neskhi (nes'ki), n. [Ar.] The cursive or running hand ordinarily used in Arabic manuscripts and printed books.

Two systems of writing were used concomitantly, the Cufic or uncial and the Neski or running hand.
Encyc. Brit., XIII. 117.

Nesogæa (nē-sō-jē'ạ), n. [NL., < Gr. νῆσος, an island, + γαῖα, the earth.] In zoögeog., Polynesia or Oceania, with New Zealand excluded, considered with reference to the geographical distribution of its animals.

Nesogæan (nē-sō-jē'ạn), a. [< Nesogæa + -an.] In zoögeog., of or pertaining to Nesogæa.

Nesokia (nē-sō'ki-ạ), n. [NL.] A genus of murine rodents of the subfamily Murinæ, Bandicoot (Nesokia bandicota).

having a short, scaly, nearly naked tail, and including several species of Indian bandicoot-rats, as N. bandicota. J. E. Gray.

Nesomys (nes'ō-mis), n. [NL., < Gr. νῆσος, an island, + μῦς, a mouse.] A remarkable genus of murine rodents of the family Muridæ, having teeth of sigmodont pattern. It is peculiar to Madagascar, where it is one of 5 genera which constitute the entire rodent fauna of the island, so far as is known. The genus was established by W. Peters in 1870.

Nesomys rufus.

Nesonetta (nes-ō-net'ạ), n. [NL., < Gr. νῆσος, an island, + νῆττα, a duck.] A genus of erismaturine ducks of the family Anatidæ and the subfamily Erismaturinæ, established by G. R. Gray in 1844. N. aucklandica, the only species known, inhabits the Auckland Islands, whence the name.

Nesotragus (nē-sot'ra-gus), n. [NL., < Gr. νῆσος, an island, + τράγος, a goat.] A genus of small antelopes inhabiting Zanzibar and Mozambique. N. moschatus is the typical species. Same as Neotragus.

ness (nes), n. [< ME. nesse, < AS. næss = Icel. nes = Dan. næs = Sw. näs, a headland; akin to nose[1].] A point of land running into the sea; a promontory; a headland; a cape.

We weyed anker, and bare cleere of the nesse.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 310.

[Ness occurs as a termination of the names of some promontories or headlands: as, Sheer*ness*, Dunge*ness*.]

-ness. [< ME. -nes, -nesse, < AS. -nes, -nis, -nys, -ness, etc., = OS. -nissi, -nissea, -nissia, -nessi, -nussi, -nussia = OFries. -nesse = MD. -nesse, D. -nis = MLG. -nisse = OHG. -nassī, -nussī, -nissī, -nissa, -nessī, -nessa, MHG. -nisse, -nusse, -nis, -nus, G. -nis, -niss = Goth. -nassus (as in thiudinassus, kingdom), prop. -n-assu-s, the n belonging orig. to the stem (adj. or pp.) of the word, and the suffix being -assu-s (= OHG. -issa, -ussa, -ussi), as in ufar-assus, superfluity; perhaps orig. -as-tu-s*, a similar termination occurring in mist[1], q. v. The termination is fem. in AS., etc., but also neut. in OHG., and masc. in Goth.] A suffix of Anglo-Saxon origin, used to form, from adjectives, nouns denoting the abstract quality of the adjective, as goodness, sweetness, whiteness, humbleness, hopefulness, spiritualness, crookedness, neglectedness, obligingness, the quality or state of being good, sweet, white, etc. All such words are originally abstract, but some have come to be used also as concrete, as witness, a person who gives testimony, wilderness, a wild region. The suffix is applicable to any adjective; but in adjectives of Latin origin the equivalent suffix -ity, of Latin origin, is also used (and is often preferable): as in torpidness, credibleness, equivalent to torpidity, credibility.

Nesslerization (nes″lèr-i-zā'shọn), n. [< Nesslerize + -ation.] The process of Nesslerizing. See Nesslerize.

The OF. nest is from E. From the L. word (nidus) are derived E. nide, nidus, nidification, nye[2], nias, eyas, etc.] 1. A structure formed or used by a bird for incubation and the rearing of its young. Such nesting-places are of the most diverse character, some birds making a slight nest or none at all, while others construct for their eggs receptacles requiring remarkable skill and industry. The materials used are also extremely various, as twigs, leaves, grass, moss, wool, feathers, mud or clay, etc. Some birds, for the sake of safety, excavate burrows for their nests in banks or sandy cliffs, or holes in trees. See cuts under hive-nest.

Briddes ich by-helde in bosshes maden nestes.
Piers Plowman (C), xiv. 156.

The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head.
Mat. viii. 20.

2. A place where the eggs of insects, turtles, etc., are laid; a place in which the young of certain small animals are reared, or a number of such animals dwelling together: as, a nest of rabbits.

Seek not a scorpion's nest,
Nor set no footing on this unkind shore.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 2. 86.

3. A snug place of residence; habitation; abode.

Not farre away, not meet for any guest,
They spide a little cottage, like some poore mans nest.
Spenser, F. Q., IV. v. 32.

4. Any abode, especially of evil things: as, a nest of vice.

Lady, come from that nest
Of death, contagion, and unnatural sleep.
Shak., R. and J., v. 3. 151.

5. A number of persons dwelling or consorting together or resorting to the same haunt, or the haunt itself: generally in a bad sense.

The imbecile government, incapable of defending itself, implored Gonsalvo's aid in dislodging this nest of formidable freebooters. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 3.

In almost all of the poorer districts of London are to be found "nests of Irish"—as they are called—or courts inhabited solely by the Irish costermongers.

Holinshed, Hist. Eng., iv. 32.

They have seen perjury and murder nestle themselves into a throne, live triumphant, and die peaceably.
South, Sermons, IV. iv.

Cupid . . . found a downy Bed,
And nestled in his little Head.
Prior, Love Disarmed.

2. To cherish; fondle closely; cuddle, as a bird her young.

This Ithacus so highly is indear'd
To his Minerua that her hand is euer in his deeds;
She like his mother nestles him.
Chapman, Iliad, xxiii. 680.

nestle-cock† (nes'l-kok), n. Same as nestcock.

nestler (nes'lèr), n. A nestling.

The size of the nestler is comic, and its tiny beseeching weakness is compensated perfectly by the happy patronizing look of the mother. Emerson, Domestic Life.

nestling[1] (nes'ling), n. [Verbal n. of nestle, v.] 1. The act of making a nest or going to nest; the act of settling or cuddling down.

Dumb was the sea, and if the beech-wood stirred,
'Twas with the nestling of the gray-winged bird
Midst its thick leaves.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, I. 394.

2†. A nest or nestling-place.

They [the physicians] inquire not of the diversities of the parts, the secrecies of the passages, and the seats or nestlings of the humours.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii.

I like them [aviaries] not, except they . . . have living plants and bushes set in them, that the birds may have more scope and natural nestling.
Bacon, Gardens (ed. 1887).

nestling[2] (nest'ling), n. and a. [< ME. nestling; < nest[1] + -ling[1]; due in part to the verb nestle: see nestling[1].] I. n. 1. A young bird in the nest, or just from the nest.

> The pliant bough
> That, moving, moves the nest and nestling.
> Tennyson, Sea Dreams.

2†. The smallest bird in the nest; the weakest of the brood.

> Second brothers, and poore nestlings,
> Whom more injurious Nature later brings > Into the naked world. Bp. Hall, Satires, II. ii. 43.

II. a. Being still a nestling; being yet in the nest.

> I have educated nestling linnets under the three best singing larks.
> Barrington, Experiments on Singing Birds. (Encyc. Dict.)

Nestor (nes'tor), n. [NL. L., < Gr. Νέστωρ, in Greek legend a king of Pylos in Greece, the oldest of the chieftains who took part in the siege of Troy.] 1. The oldest and wisest (because most experienced) man of a class or company: in allusion to Nestor in Greek legend. Hence—2. A counselor; an adviser.—3. In ornith., a genus of parrots having a remarkably long beak: named from the gray head. Nestor notabilis is the New Zealand kaka; N. productus is another species. There are several others, some recently extinct.

Nestorian (nes-tō'ri-an), a. and n. [< LL. Nestorianus, < Nestorius, Gr. Νεστόριος, Nestorius (see def.).] I. a. Of or pertaining to Nestorius (see Nestorianism), or the Nestorians or their doctrines.

> The people are of sundry kinds, for there are not only Saracens and idolaters but also a few Nestorian Christians.
> Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 760.

Nestorian liturgy. See liturgy, 3 (3).

II. n. 1. A follower of Nestorius; one who denies the hypostatic union of two natures in one person in Christ, holding that he possesses two distinct personalities, the union between which is merely moral. After the Council of Ephesus the Nestorians obtained possession of the theological schools of Edessa, Nisibis, and Seleucia, and were driven by imperial edicts into Persia, where they firmly established themselves. Later they spread to India, Bactria, and as far as China. About 1400 the greater part of their churches perished under the persecutions of Timur, and in the sixteenth century a large part of the remainder joined the Roman Catholics. These are called Chaldeans. See def. 2, and Nestorianism.

2. One of a modern Christian body in Persia and Turkey, the remnant of the once powerful Nestorian denomination. They number about 140,000, are subject to a patriarch (the patriarch of Urumiah) and eighteen bishops, recognize seven sacraments, administer communion in both kinds, and have many fasts. Another community of Nestorian origin still exists on the Malabar coast of India, but since the middle of the seventeenth century these are said to have become Monophysites. See Christians of St. Thomas, under Christian.

> The Persian kings were always more favourable to Nestorians, as believing them to deny the True Divinity of our Lord. J. M. Neale, Eastern Church, i. 142.

Nestorianism (nes-tō'ri-an-izm), n. [< Nestorian + -ism.] In theol., the doctrine that in the God-man the two natures, the divine and the human, are not united in one person, and that consequently he possesses two distinct personalities. Nestorianism is at the opposite extreme of Christological doctrine from Monophysitism. It derives its name from Nestorius, patriarch of Constantinople in the fifth century, who was condemned by the third and fourth ecumenical councils (that of Ephesus in 431 and that of Chalcedon in 451) as promulgating teachings which involved this doctrine and as refusing to assent to the decision of the Ephesine Council. See Theotocos.

> As Eutychianism is the doctrine that the God-man has only the one nature, so Nestorianism is the doctrine that He has two complete persons. Encyc. Brit., XVII. 350.

> The celebrated school at Edessa . . . remained firm against the Arian heresy, but gave way to Nestorianism about the time of Zeno.
> J. M. Neale, Eastern Church, i. 127.

Nestoridæ (nes-tor'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Nestor + -idæ.] A family of parrots represented by the genus Nestor, now peculiar to New Zealand. A. Newton.

Nestorinæ (nes-tō-rī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Nestor + -inæ.] A subfamily of Psittacidæ, represented by the genus Nestor.

nestorine (nes'tō-rin), a. Of or having the characteristics of the Nestorinæ; pertaining to the genus Nestor.

nest-pan (nest'pan), n. A moderately deep pan of earthenware, made of convenient size, in common use among pigeon-fanciers as a receptacle for the nests of their brooding birds.

nest-spring (nest'spring), n. A spiral spring having one or more coils of springs inclosed.

net[1] (net), n. and a. [< ME. net, < AS. net, nett = OS. netti, net = OFries. nette, nitte = D. net = MLG. nette = OHG. nezi, nezzi, MHG. netze, G. netz = Icel. net = Sw. nät = Dan. net = Goth. nati, a net; cf. Icel. nōt, a large net. Root unknown.] I. n. 1. An open textile fabric, of cotton, linen, hemp, silk, or other material, tied or woven with a mesh of any size, designed or used for catching animals alive, either by inclosing or by entangling them; a netting or network used as a snare or trap. Nets are of high antiquity, and there are almost as many kinds of them as there are ways in which a piece of netting or a network can be adapted to the capture of animals. It is characteristic of nets to take the game alive, either by surrounding or inclosing it as in a bag or by entangling it in meshes. Many kinds of net are described and named—from the nature of the game, as, bird-nets, butterfly-nets, fish-nets; from the way in which the game is taken, as, gill-net, gilling-net; from the way in which the net is handled or worked, as, beating-net, dip-net, draw-net, drag-net, drift-net, drop-net, hand-net, landing-net, set-net, stake-net, scoop-net; from the shape of the netting, as, bag-net, purse-net, etc. In the fisheries in which nets are most used, many of them take other names, as fyke, pound, seine, weir, trap. (See these words and the above compounds.) Nets range in size from a few inches to a mile or more: thus, seines have been made reaching (with the ropes which haul them) 5 miles, and sweeping more than 1,000 acres of water-bottom. The material ranges from the finest silk, muslin, etc., to stout cordage; gut or sinew is sometimes used. The mesh is always made with a fixed, not running, knot. The appliances of nets are numerous: as, buoys or buoy-lines to float one border of the net or indicate the whereabouts of a net under water; sinkers, leads, or lead-lines to sink one border of the net to the bottom of the water; cords or ropes for setting, stretching, hauling, pursing, etc., often worked by mechanical contrivances, as a windlass operated by horse- or steam-power; poles or stakes for setting, etc. In some kinds of set-nets or weirs the staking or paling is so extensive in comparison with the netting that the contrivance is converted into a wooden trap, and is, in fact, called a trap. See net[1], v. t., 2.

> But as a brid, whiche woll alight
> And seeth the mete, but nought the nette.
> Gower, Conf. Amant., iii.

> And nets of various sorts, and various snares,
> The seine, the cast-net, and the wicker maze,
> To waste the watery tribes a thousand ways.
> Fawkes, tr. of Idylls of Theocritus, xxi.

2. Figuratively, a snare or device for entrapping or misleading in any way; a moral or mental trap or entanglement.

> Hue were laht by the net so bryd is in snare.
> Flemish Insurrection (Child's Ballads, VI. 272).

> So will I turn her virtue into pitch,
> And out of her own goodness make the net
> That shall enmesh them all.
> Shak., Othello, ii. 3. 367.

> Skill'd to retire, and in retiring draw > Hearts after them tangled in amorous nets.
> Milton, P. R., ii. 162.

3. A light open woven fabric, as gauze or muslin, worn or used as a protection from annoying insects: as, a mosquito-net spread over a bed.—4. Machine-made lace of many kinds. The varieties of machine-net formerly made were whip-net, mail-net, patent net, drop-net, spider-net, balloon-net. The modern varieties, named according to the kind of mesh employed, are warp net, point-net, and bobbin-net. Broad net is woven as wide as the machine will allow. Quillings are narrow widths, several being made at one time in the breadth of the machine. Fancy net has a gimp pattern worked in by hand (called lace-darning) or by the Jacquard attachment.

> Here's a bit o' net, then, for you to look at before I tie up my pack: . . . spotted and sprigged, you see, beautiful, but yallow—'s been lyin' by an' got the wrong colour.
> George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, v. 2.

5. A light open meshed bag for holding or confining the hair. Some are made of threads so fine that they are called invisible nets.

> The hair is usually plaited down on each side of the face and inclosed in a net or cowl. Encyc. Brit., VI. 470.

6. Anything formed with interstices or meshes like a net.

> Nets of checker-work, and wreaths of chain-work, for the chapiters. 1 Ki. vii. 17.

> Now on some twisted ivy-net,
> Now by some tinkling rivulet, . . .
> Her cream-white mule his pastern set.
> Tennyson, Lancelot and Guinevere.

7. In anat. and zoöl., a reticulation or cancellation; a network of anastomosing or inosculating filaments or vessels; a web or mesh; a rete.—8. In math., a rectilinear figure drawn as follows. For a plane net, four points in a plane are assumed, and through pairs of them, and of points subsequently obtained as intersections of lines, straight lines are drawn. For a net in space, five points are assumed, through triads of which, and of points subsequently obtained as intersections of three planes, planes are drawn.—Bag-and-stake net, a kind of net-weir similar to that form of seine sometimes used to take bluefish. In England the bag-and-stake nets are included in the law forbidding the use of fixed engines for the capture of salmon. Massachusetts Report (1866), p. 28.—Baird net, a form of collecting-net: named from its designer, Prof. S. F. Baird.—Bar-net, that part of a stake-net which is hung on stakes in a line at right angles with the shore, and with which the fish first come in contact. See stake-net. [Canada.]—Brussels net. (a) The pillow-made ground of Brussels application lace. (b) A machine-made ground imitating the above.—Bull-net, a large dip-net worked from the rigging by block and tackle, and used in unloading a purse-seine.—Casting-net, a fishing-net consisting of a circle of netting varying in diameter from 4 feet to 15 or more. To its circumference are attached, at short intervals, leaden weights. There is a central opening, usually constituted by a ferrule of bone or metal. One end of a long rope passes through this ferrule, and to it are attached numerous cords extending to the lead-rope. The net is used by gathering up the casting-rope in a coil on one arm, and taking the net itself on the other. By a dexterous fling of the arm holding the net, this is thrown in such a way as to spread out completely, and it is sometimes hurled to a distance of many feet, so as to fall flat on the surface of the water. The leads sink immediately, forming a circular inclosure, and imprisoning any fish that happen to be under it at the time. The rope is then hauled in from the other end, causing the whole circumference to pucker inwardly, the leads and pucker coming together in a compact mass. These nets are extensively used in the West Indies and the southern United States.—Cast-net, a fishing-net that is cast; a casting-net.—Cherry-net, a net spread over a cherry-tree to keep off birds.

> To catch a dragon in a cherry net,
> To trip a tigress with a gossamer,
> Were wisdom to it. Tennyson, Princess, v.

Clue-net, a purse-seine. [New Jersey.]—Collecting-net, a small seine used for collecting fish for specimens of natural history; a collecting-seine.—Darned net, net of any kind, embroidered with either white or colored thread of any material. It differs from darned embroidery in giving less solid and uniform opaque surfaces, and in depending more upon the outline formed by a single thread carried through the meshes. See darned netting, under netting.—Diving-net, a net arranged somewhat like a fyke, for taking rock-fish, perch, etc. [New Jersey.]—Draft-net, a haul-seine. [New Jersey.]—Drag-net, a small seine dragged or hauled in shoal water, one end of the net being fastened in the mud by means of the staff. The drag-net is from 75 to 100 yards long, and 25 to 37 meshes deep, with a mesh of from 1½ to 2 inches. The lead-line is provided with heavy lead sinkers, the cork-line with floats.—Dredge-net. See rake-dredge.—Drift-net, a fishing-net which drifts with the tide. Drift-nets are arranged on the same principle as gill-nets (see gill-net), except that they are allowed to drift about with the tide instead of being secured to stakes. They are shot or paid out from boats in a straight line, and kept perpendicular by buoys along the top and leads at the bottom, and are drawn out straight across the current by a boat rowed in the proper direction.—Dutch net, a pound-net. [North Carolina.]—Gang or hook of nets. See gang.—Glade net. See glade-net.—Maltese net, in lace-making, a ground or réseau in which the Maltese cross appears, especially one consisting of octagons each inclosing a Maltese cross, and alternating with elongated hexagons and small triangles, producing a very complex pattern.—Run net, darned netting of a simple sort in which the needlework is not elaborately stitched. A. S. Cole, Embroidery and Lace.—To run the net, to feel for fish that may have been caught, by handling the cork-line of a net without further disturbing its set in the water; run the cork-line hand over hand. The struggling of the fish is readily felt in this way, and they are ungilled as soon as possible, that they may not injure themselves nor be devoured by other fish.—Water-net, a fresh-water alga, Hydrodictyon utriculatum. See Hydrodictyon.

II. a. 1. Made of netting: as, a net fence.—2. Resembling netting; having a structure which is like netting—that is, one which has open meshes, large in proportion to the thickness of the threads.—3. Caught in a net; netted: as, net fish.—4. Reticulate or cancellate; netted or net-veined, as an insect's wings.—Net embroidery. (a) Decorative needlework done upon net as a foundation. (b) Decorative work done upon net, but not strictly needlework, as muslin appliqué (which see, under muslin).—Net-mackerel. See mackerel[1].

net[1] (net), v.; pret. and pp. netted, ppr. netting. [< net[1], n.] I. trans. 1. To make as a net; make network of; form into a netting; mesh; knot or weave in meshes.

> In mediæval times the vestments of the clergy frequently had netted coverings of silk.
> Drapers' Dict., p. 239.

2. To capture or take with a net, as game; insnare, entangle, or entrap in or by means of network, as any animal. Quadrupeds are not often netted, traps or snares or guns being commonly used for their capture. Birds are netted in several different ways: by springing a net over them; by driving them into a winged and tunneled net, as ducks; by the use of a hand-net on a pole, as in taking insects; and by entangling them in the meshes of a spread net. Fishes, including shell-fish, are netted by every device which can be put into effect by means of network. The use of the net in these cases is, however, in one of two leading methods, entangling and inclosing. In the former of these, the fish swims against a vertical sheet of netting, finds the mesh too small to go through, and is caught by the gills in trying to back out. Insects are netted by collectors in one of two ways: with the butterfly-net, which is a very light bag of silk, gauze, etc., on a frame and pole; and with the beating-net, a bag of stout cloth or light canvas on a frame, with a short handle, used to beat or brush the grass and bushes. See net[1], n.

3. To take as if with a net; capture by arts, wiles, or stratagems; entangle in difficulty; beguile.

> And now I am here netted and in the toils. Scott.

4. To put into or surround with a net for protection or safe-keeping; hold in place by means of a net, as one's hair; veil or cover, as the head with a net; spread a net over or around, as a fruit-tree to keep off the birds, or a bed to keep out mosquitos.

To leave his favourite tree to strangers, after all the pains he had been at in netting it to keep off the birds.
Miss Edgeworth, Belinda, xxi. (Davies.)

Old Yew, which graspest at the stones
That name the under-lying dead,
Thy fibres net the dreamless head,
Thy roots are wrapt about the bones.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, ii.

II. intrans. 1. To make nets or form network; be occupied in knotting or weaving a suitable material into netting.

Ideal visits I often pay you, see you posting round your sylvan walks or sitting netting in your parlour, and thinking of your absent friends. Seward. (Latham.)

The OPruss. noatis, Lith. notere, Ir. nenaid, nettle, appear to be unrelated. Skeat assumes an orig. initial h, and compares Gr. κνίδη, a nettle, and E. nit[1] (AS. hnitu); but if there were an orig. initial h, it would appear in OHG. and AS., as in other cases.] 1. A herbaceous plant of the genus Urtica, armed with stinging hairs. U. dioica is the common, great, or stinging nettle, native in the northern Old World, naturalized in the United States and elsewhere. This plant is now somewhat cultivated in Germany for its fiber, which, properly dressed, is fine and silky. The tender shoots are not unfrequently used as a pot-herb. This and the small nettle, U. urens, were formerly in use as diuretics and astringents. The Roman nettle of southern Europe is U. pilulifera. U. cannabina of Siberia is locally utilized as a fiber-plant.

Upper Part of a Fruiting Stem of Nettle (Urtica dioica).
a, the male flower; b, the female flower; c, a stinging hair, taken from the leaf, highly magnified.

Out of this nettle, danger, we pluck this flower, safety.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., ii. 3. 10.

The Earth doth not always produce Roses and Lilies, but she brings forth also Nettles and Thistles.
Howell, Letters, I. vi. 57.

2. One of several plants of other genera of the nettle family (Urticaceæ); any nettle-like plant: generally with a qualifying word.—Chili nettle. See Loasaceæ.—False nettle, Bœhmeria cylindrica. [U. S.]—In dock, out nettle. See dock[1].—Neilgherry nettle, the East Indian Girardinia (Urtica) heterophylla. It yields a fine white and glossy strong fiber, locally important.—Nettle broth, nettle porridge, a dish made with nettles cut early in the season before they show any flowers.

There we did eat some nettle porrige, which was made on purpose to-day for some of their coming, and was very good. Pepys, Diary, Feb. 27, 1661.

neuma (nū'mą̈), n. [ML.: see neume.] Same as neume.

neumatic (nū-mat'ik), a. [< neume + -atic[2]. Cf. pneumatic.] In music, of or pertaining to neumes.—Neumatic notation. See notation.

neume (nūm), n. [< ME. neume, newme, neme, < OF. neume, "a sound, song, or close of song after an anthem" (Cotgrave), < ML. pneuma, also neupma, neuma, a song, a sign in music, < Gr. πνεῦμα, breath, breathing: see pneuma. In the sense of 'sign,' some compare Gr. νεῦμα, a nod.] 1†. Modulation of the voice in singing. Nominale MS. (Halliwell.)

Newme [var. nevme, neme] of a songe, neupma.
Prompt. Parv., p. 355.

2. In music: (a) A sign or character used in early medieval music to indicate a tone or a phrase. A large number of these characters were used, more or less complicated in form and meaning. They were first written alone over the text to be sung, but soon one and then two or more horizontal lines were added to indicate some fixed pitch, as F or C. Neumes were in use as early as the eighth century; their origin is obscure. They were the first important step toward a graphic musical notation in which relative pitch should be indicated by relative position on a page. They passed over gradually into the more definite ligatures and the staff-notation of later times. The earlier examples cannot be deciphered with entire certainty. (b) A melodic phrase or division, sung to a single syllable, especially at the end of a clause or sentence; a sequence. [In this sense also pneuma.]

neumic (nū′mik), a. [< neume + -ic.] Of or pertaining to neumes: as, neumic notation.

neura, n. Plural of neuron.

neurad (nū′rad), adv. [< neur(al) + *-ad*3.] Toward the neural axis or neural side of the body, in direction or relative position: opposed to hemad.

neuradynamia (nū″ra-dī-nā′mi-ạ), n. [NL., < Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + ἀδυναμία, weakness: see adynamia.] Neurasthenia.

neuradynamic (nū″ra-dī-nam′ik), a. [< neuradynamia + -ic.] Pertaining to, of the nature of, or suffering from neuradynamia.

neuræmia, neuræmic. See neuremia, neuremic.

neural (nū′rạl), a. [< Gr. νεῦρον (= L. nervus), ★a sinew, nerve (see nerve), + -al. Cf. nerval.] 1. Pertaining to nerves or the nervous system at large; nervous.—2. Specifically, of or relating to the cerebrospinal nervous system of a vertebrate. Hence—3. Situated on that side of the body, with reference to the vertebral axis, on which the brain and spinal cord lie; dorsal or tergal: opposed to ventral, sternal, visceral, or hemal.—4. In physiol., done or taking place in the nerves.—Neural arch, the arch of a vertebra which incloses and protects the corresponding part of the spinal cord, consisting essentially of a pair of neurapophyses, to which various other apophyses are usually affixed, as diapophyses, zygapophyses, etc.: opposed to hemal arch; also extended to a similar segment of the skull by those who hold the vertebrate theory of the skull, according to which, for example, the exoccipital and supraoccipital bones are parts of the neural arch of the hindmost cranial vertebra. See cuts under endoskeleton and cervical.—Neural axis, canal, lamina, mollusks, etc. See the nouns.—Neural spine, the spinous process of a vertebra, developed at the junction of a pair of neurapophyses, over the neural canal: usually single and median, sometimes paired or bifid: opposed to hemal spine. See cuts under cervical, endoskeleton, lumbar, carapace, Chelonia, and pleurospondilia.—Neural tremors, neural units, in psychol. See the quotation.

> If . . . we . . . confine ourselves to the Nervous System, we may represent the molecular movements of the bioplasm by the neural tremors of the psychoplasm; these tremors are what I call neural units—the raw material of Consciousness; its several neural groups formed by these units represent the organized elements of tissues.
> G. H. Lewes, Probs. of Life and Mind, I. 108.

★neuralgia (nū-ral′jiạ), n. [Also neuralgy; = F. névralgie = Sp. neuralgia = Pg. nevralgia = It. neuralgia, < NL. neuralgia, < Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + ἄλγος, pain.] A pain, corresponding frequently to the distribution of some one nerve, which is not due immediately and simply to excessive stimulation of the nerve or nerves involved by some gross or extra-nervous lesion, but to a nutritive or other molecular change in the nerves themselves or their central connections. The pain is usually paroxysmal, varying in intensity, and described as shooting, stabbing, boring, burning, or deep-seated. Neuralgia is largely confined to adult life, is more frequent in women than in men, and is especially apt to occur in neuropathic individuals. It is induced by cold, exhaustion (from overwork, worry, over-lactation, mental shock, lack of food and rest), anemia malaria, alcohol, lead, and glycohemia. In addition to this so-called idiopathic neuralgia, symptomatic neuralgia is sometimes used to designate neuralgiform pains incident to some gross lesion.—Ciliary, intercostal, etc., neuralgia. See the adjectives.

neuralgic (nū-ral′jik), a. [< neuralgia + -ic.] Pertaining to, of the nature of, or affected by neuralgia: as, neuralgic pains; a neuralgic patient.

neuralgiform (nū-ral′ji-fôrm), a. Resembling or of the naturo of neuralgia.

neuralgy (nū-ral′ji), n. Same as neuralgia. [Obsolete or provincial.]

neuralist (nū′rạl-ist), n. [< neural + -ist.] A neuropath.

neuramœba (nū-ra-mē′bạ), n.; pl. neuramœbæ (-bē). [NL., < Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + NL. amœba: see amœba, 3.] A nerve-cell regarded as an organism of the morphic valence of an amœba: correlated with myamœba and osteamœba. Coues, 1884.

neuranal (nū-rā′nạl), a. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + L. anus, anus: see anal.] Of or relating to the outlet of the canal of the neural cord of a vertebrate embryo.

> A current of water, which escaped by the neuranal canal (as in larval Amphioxus). Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 184.

neurapophysial (nū-rap-ō-fiz′i-ạl), a. [< neurapophysis + -al.] Of or pertaining to a neurapophysis.

neurapophysis (nū-ra-pof′i-sis), n.; pl. neurapophyses (-sēz). [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + ἀπόφυσις, an offshoot, process: see apophysis.] In anat., a process or part of a vertebra which, meeting its fellow in midline over the centrum of the vertebra, constitutes a neural arch and completes a neural canal. A neurapophysis consists essentially of the parts of a vertebra known in human anatomy as the pedicel and lamina; it usually bears other apophyses, as diapophyses or transverse processes, zygapophyses or oblique or articular processes, and is usually surmounted by a neural spine or spinous process. See cut under cervical.

neurasthenic (nū-ras-then′ik), a. and n. [< neurasthenia + -ic.] I. a. Of or pertaining to neurasthenia or nervous debility; affected or characterized by neurasthenia.

II. n. A person suffering from nervous debility.

> Neurasthenics almost always gain by being a great deal in the open air. Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, V. 164.

neurasthenically (nū-ras-then′i-kạl-i), adv. In a neurasthenic manner; as regards neurasthenia.

neuration (nū-rā′shọn), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, a nerve, + -ation. Cf. nervation.] 1. In entom., nervature; venation, as of an insect's wing.—2. In anat., the way or mode of distribution of nerves; the system of the nerves; nervation.

neuratrophia (nū-ra-trō′fi-ạ), n. [NL., < Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + ἀτροφία, wasting: see atrophy.] Impaired nutrition of the nervous system, or of some part of it.

neuratrophic (nū-ra-trof′ik), a. [< neuratrophia + -ic.] Pertaining to neuratrophia.

neurectomy (nū-rek′tọ-mi), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, a nerve, + ἐκτομή, a cutting out, < ἐκτέμνειν, ἐκταμεῖν, cut out, < ἐκ, out, + τέμνειν, ταμεῖν, cut.] The operation of excising or cutting out a part of a nerve.

neuremia, neuræmia (nū-rē′mi-ạ), n. [NL. neuræmia, < Gr. νεῦρον, a sinew, tendon, nerve, + αἷμα, blood.] A purely functional disease of the nerves. Laycock.

neuremic, neuræmic (nū-rē′mik), a. [< neuremia + -ic.] Relating to or affected with neuremia.

neurenteric (nū-ren-ter′ik), a. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + ἔντερον, intestine: see enteric.] Pertaining to the neuron and to the enteron; connecting the neural canal with the enteric tube.—Neurenteric canal or passage, the temporary passageway or communication which may persist for a time in vertebrates between the neural and the enteric tube. This connection leads from the hinder end of the neural tube into the enteric cavity, and is said to have been discovered by Gasser.

neurepithelial (nū-rep-i-thē′li-ạl), a. See neuroepithelial.

neuriatry (nū-rī′ạ-tri), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + ἰατρεία, healing, < ἰατρεύειν, heal, < ἰατρός, a physician: see iatric.] The treatment of nervous diseases.

neuric (nū′rik), a. [< Gr. νεῦρον, a nerve, + -ic.] 1. Belonging to a nerve or to the nervous system; nervous.

> Dr. Barety . . . has attempted to show that actual "neuric rays" are emitted by eyes and fingers, which are susceptible of reflection from mirrors, concentration by lenses, etc. Proc. Soc. Psych. Research, Oct., 1886, p. 173.

2. Having a nervous system.

neuricity (nū-ris′i-ti), n. [< neuric + -ity.] The peculiar or essential properties or functions of nerves collectively; nerve-force.

> Neuricity is not electricity any more than is myonicity. Owen, Comp. Anat., I. iv.

neuridine (nū′ri-din), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, sinew, + *-id*2 + *-ine*2.] A ptomaine ($C_5H_{14}N_2$) commonly produced in the putrefaction of proteids. It forms crystalline salts with gold and platinum chlorids, and when pure is not toxic in its effects.

neurilemma (nū-ri-lem′ạ), n.; pl. neurilemmata (-ạ-tạ). [NL., prop. neurolemma*, < Gr. νεῦρον, a nerve, + λέμμα, a husk, skin, < λέπειν, strip, peel: see lepis.] 1. The delicate structureless sheath of a nerve-fiber; the primitive sheath; the sheath of Schwann.—2. The sheath of a nerve-funiculus; the perineurium.—3†. Of the spinal cord, the pia mater.

neurilemmatic (nū″ri-le-mat′ik), a. Pertaining to the neurilemma.

neurilemmitis (nū″ri-le-mī′tis), n. [NL., < neurilemma + -itis.] In pathol., inflammation of the neurilemma.

neurility (nū-ril′i-ti), n. [= F. neurilité; as Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + -ile + -ity.] The specific function of the nervous system—that of conducting stimuli.

> We owe to Mr. Lewes our very best thanks for the stress which he has laid on the doctrine that nerve-fibre is uniform in structure and function, and for the word neurility, which expresses its common properties.
> W. K. Clifford, Lectures, II. 139.

★neurine (nū′rin), n. [= F. neurine; as Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + *-ine*2.] 1. A ptomaine, and possibly also a leucomaine, having the formula $(CH_3)_3.C_2H_3.NOH$. It is formed during the putrefaction of meat and has also been prepared synthetically. It is very poisonous. Same as vinyltrimethylammonium hydroxid.

neurism (nū′rizm), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + -ism.] Nerve-force. E. D. Cope, Origin of the Fittest, p. 20. [Rare.]

neuritic (nū-rit′ik), a. [< neurit-is + -ic.] Of, pertaining to, characterized by, or affected with ★neuritis.

neuritis (nū-rī′tis), n. [NL., < Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + -itis.] In pathol., inflammation of a nerve.—Lipomatous neuritis, the condition of a nerve in which, as the terminal stage of an interstitial neuritis, there is an accumulation of fat in the newly formed connective tissue of the nerve.—Multiple neuritis. See multiple.—Optic neuritis, inflammation of the optic nerve, especially of its retinal termination, the optic papilla; papillitis.—Peripheral neuritis, inflammation of the terminal nerve-twigs.

Neurobranchiata (nū-rọ-brang-ki-ā′tạ), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + NL. branchiatus, having gills: see branchiate.] The so-called Pulmonata operculata, or operculate pulmoniferous gastropods, as of the families Cyclostomidæ, Aciculidæ, and related forms.

neurobranchiate (nū-rọ-brang′ki-āt), a. Pertaining to the Neurobranchiata, or having their characters.

neurocentral (nū-rọ-sen′trạl), a. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + κέντρον, center: see central.] Relating both to the neural arch and to the centrum of a vertebra.—Neurocentral suture, the line on each side of the centrum along which a neurapophysis meets and fuses with the centrum. The body of a vertebra may be thus in part neurapophysial.

Third Cervical Vertebra of Young Echidna, the pieces slightly separated: ncs, neurocentral suture; na, neural arch; c, centrum; t, transverse process; v, vertebrarterial canal.

neurocœle (nū′rọ-sēl), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + κοῖλον, cavity: see cœlum.] The entire hollow or system of cavities of the cerebrospinal axis.

neurocœlian (nū-rọ-sē′li-ạn), a. [< neurocœle + -ian.] Of or pertaining to the neurocœle.

neurocrane (nū′rọ-krān), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + κρανίον, skull, cranium: see cranium.] The brain-case; the cranial as distinguished from the facial and chronosteal parts of the skull.

> For the three segments of the cranium, forming a vaulted tubular brain-case, or neurocrane, are morphologically complete without the intervention of a chronosteon.
> Coues, Amer. Jour. Otology, IV. 19.

neurocranial (nū-rọ-krā′ni-ạl), a. [< neurocrane + -ial.] Of or pertaining to the neurocrane. Coues.

neurodeatrophia (nū-rọ-dē-a-trō′fi-ạ), n. [NL., < Gr. νευρώδης, like sinews or nerves (see neuroid) (applied to the retina as abounding in nerves), + ἀτροφία, atrophy.] Atrophy of the retina.

neurodynamis (nū-rọ-dī′nạ-mis), n. [NL., < Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + δύναμις, power.] Nervous energy.

neuro-epithelial (nū″rō-ep-i-thē′li-ạl), a. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + E. epithelial.] Pertaining to the endings of nerves in the skin where special modifications of both the nervous and the epidermal tissues result. Neuro-epithelial structures are especially characteristic of the skin of water-breathing vertebrates, and consist of end-buds and nerve-hillocks or neuromasts. Preferably neurepithelial.

neuro-epithelium (nū″rō-ep-i-thē′li-um), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + E. epithelium.] Neuro-epithelial tissue.

neuroglia (nū-rog′li-ạ), n. [NL., < Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + γλία, glue: see glue.] The peculiar sustentacular tissue of the cerebrospinal axis.

neurogliac (nū-rog′li-ak), a. [< neuroglia + -ac.] Having the character of neuroglia.

neurogliar (nū-rog′li-ạr), a. [< neuroglia + -ar.] Of or pertaining to neuroglia.

neurography (nū-rog′rạ-fi), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + -γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] Descriptive neurology; a description of or treatise on nerves.

neurohypnologist (nū″rō-hip-nol′ō-jist), n. [< neurohypnolog-y + -ist.] One who is skilled in or who practises induction of the hypnotic state. Also neurypnologist.

neurohypnology (nū″rō-hip-nol′ō-ji), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + ὕπνος, sleep, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] 1. Knowledge or investigation of hypnotism.—2. The means or process employed for inducing the hypnotic state. See hypnotism.

Also neurypnology.

neurohypnotism (nū-rō-hip′nō-tizm), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + E. hypnotism.] Same as hypnotism.

neuroid (nū′roid), a. and n. [< Gr. νευροειδής, νευρώδης, like a sinew, sinewy, < νεῦρον, sinew, nerve, + εἶδος, form.] I. a. Resembling a nerve, or the substance of the nerves.

II. n. One of the pair of distinct neural elements which compose the neural arch of a vertebra; a neurapophysis: correlated with pleuroid. G. Baur, Amer. Nat., XXI. 945.

neurokeratin (nū-rō-ker′a-tin), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + κέρας (κερατ-), horn, + *-in*².] A substance allied to ceratin. It forms the sheath of Schwann and the inner sheath about the axis-cylinder, as well as the connecting-bands traversing the myelin between these, but is found in largest quantity in the white substance of the brain.

neurological (nū-rō-loj′i-kal), a. [< neurology + -ic-al.] Of or pertaining to neurology.

neurologist (nū-rol′ō-jist), n. [< neurology + -ist.] One who is versed in neurology.

neurology (nū-rol′ō-ji), n. [< NL. neurologia (NGr. νευρολογία), < Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] Scientific knowledge or investigation of the form and functions of the nervous system in sickness and in ★health.

neuroma (nū-rō′mă), n.; pl. neuromata (-ma-tă). [NL., < Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + -oma.] 1. A tumor formed of nervous tissue.—2. A fibroma developed on a nerve.

neuromalacia (nū″rō-ma-lā′si-ą), n. [NL., < Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + μαλακία, softness.] Softening of nerves or nervous tissue.

neuromast (nū′rō-mast), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + μαστός, a hillock.] In zoöl., a neuro-epithelial sense-organ, or modified epidermal tract, specialized as a sensitive surface or area. It may be free on the general surface of the integument, or more or less covered in a special sac or inversion of the epidermis, or even entirely withdrawn from the epidermis into canals of the corium, hence called neuromastic canals. These canals may be strengthened by bones or scales developed about the site of the neuro-epithelial tract. Neuromasts are found in all fishes and aquatic amphibians, but not in the higher air-breathing vertebrates. Also called nerve-hillock.

neuromastic (nū-rō-mas′tik), a. [< neuromast + -ic.] Pertaining to or connected with neuromasts: as, neuromastic canals, into which these structures may be withdrawn; neuromastic bones or scales, developed in connection with neuromasts.

neuromata, n. Plural of neuroma.

neuromatous (nū-rom′a-tus), a. [< neuroma(t-) + -ous.] Pertaining to or of the nature of a neuroma.

neuromere (nū′rō-mēr), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve (with ref. to neuron), + μέρος, a part.] A segment or division of the neuron.

neuromerous (nū-rom′e-rus), a. [< neuromere + -ous.] Segmented, as the neuron of a vertebrate; having or consisting of nervous metameres.

neuromimesis (nū″rō-mi-mē′sis), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + μίμησις, imitation: see mimesis.] Imitation in neurotic patients of organic disease; nervous mimicry.

neuromimetic (nū″rō-mi-met′ik), n. [< neuromimesis, after mimetic.] Pertaining to or exhibiting neuromimesis.

neuromuscular (nū-rō-mus′kū-lăr), a. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + L. musculus, muscle: see muscular.] Pertaining to nerve and to muscle; especially, resembling or partaking of the nature both of nervous and of muscular tissue; having a character intermediate between that of muscle and that of nerve; representing or physiologically acting both as a nerve and as a muscle: as, the neuromuscular cells of the fresh-water polyp (Hydra). In these cells, which exhibit the beginnings both of a nervous and of a muscular system, the indifference of such systems is seen; for every single cell is in part nervous, responding to stimuli, and in part muscular, or executive of movements which result from the stimulation of the other part. The motile filaments into which these neuromuscular cells are drawn out are called fibers of Kleinenberg. The whole complex of the nervous and muscular systems of any animal is to be regarded as based upon and derived from this primitive, simple, and direct continuity of parts of a single neuromuscular form-element, one part functioning as a nerve and the other as a muscle. Also nervimuscular.

neuromyological (nū-rō-mī-ō-loj′i-kal), a. [< neuromyology + -ic-al.] Of or pertaining to neuromyology.

neuromyology (nū″rō-mī-ol′ō-ji), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + μῦς, muscle, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology. Cf. myology.] A system of classifying and naming muscles with reference to the nerves; myology based upon neurology.

Neurology is the key to myology; and a neuro-myology is practicable.

Coues and Shute, N. Y. Med. Record, XXXII. 93.

★neuron (nū′ron), n.; pl. neura (-ră). [NL., < Gr. νεῦρον, nerve: see nerve.] 1. The cerebrospinal axis in its entirety.—2. The nerve-cell with its processes and their branches.—3. In entom., a nervure of an insect's wing; a vein or costa.

neuronosos (nū-ron′ō-sos), n. [NL., < Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + νόσος, disease.] Any disease of the nervous system. Also neuronosus.

neuropath (nū′rō-path), n. [< neuropath-y.] 1. In pathol., one who assigns to the nervous system an excessive if not exclusive responsibility for disease.—2. A person of a nervous organization liable to or exhibiting nervous disease.

neuropathic (nū-rō-path′ik), a. [< neuropath-y + -ic.] Of or pertaining to neuropathy.

neuropathical (nū-rō-path′i-kal), a. [< neuropathic + -al.] Same as neuropathic.

neuropathically (nū-rō-path′i-kal-i), adv. In a neuropathic manner.

neuropathological (nū-rō-path-ō-loj′i-kal), a. [< neuropathology + -ic-al.] Pertaining to a diseased condition of the nervous system or some part of it.

neuropathologist (nū″rō-pā-thol′ō-jist), n. [< neuropathology + -ist.] One who is skilled in neuropathology.

neuropathology (nū″rō-pā-thol′ō-ji), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + πάθος, suffering, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology. Cf. pathology.] The sum of human knowledge concerning the diseases of the nervous system.

neuropathy (nū-rop′ą-thi), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + -παθεια, < πάθος, suffering.] In pathol., a general term for disease of the nervous system.

neurophysiological (nū-rō-fiz″i-ō-loj′i-kal), a. [< neurophysiology + -ic-al.] Pertaining to neurophysiology.

neurophysiology (nū-rō-fiz-i-ol′ō-ji), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + φυσιολογία, physiology.] Physiology of the nervous system.

neuropodial (nū-rō-pō′di-al), a. [< neuropodium + -al.] Pertaining to neuropodia: as, a neuropodial cirrus or filament. See cuts under Polynoë, præstomium, and pygidium.

neuropodium (nū-rō-pō′di-um), n.; pl. neuropodia (-ą). [NL., < Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + πούς (ποδ-) = E. foot.] One of the series of ventral or inferior foot-stumps of a worm; one of the lower parapodia of an annelid; a ventral oar: opposed to notopodium. See parapodium.

neuropore (nū′rō-pōr), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + πόρος, pore.] An orifice of communication between the neural canal and the exterior in the embryos of some animals. An anterior neuropore, where the brain remained last in connection with the epidermis, may correspond to the pineal body. In the lancelet it is a permanent opening. A posterior neuropore may be a neuranal orifice, or on closure of that orifice may be diverted into a neurenteric canal.

neuropsychology (nū-rō-sī-kol′ō-ji), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + E. psychology.] Neurology including psychology.

neuropsychopathic (nū-rō-sī-kō-path′ik), a. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + ψυχή, soul, + παθός, suffering: see pathic.] Pertaining to disease of the nervous system, including those parts of it subserving psychic functions.—Neuropsychopathic constitution, a permanent condition of irritable weakness of the nerve-centers, especially the higher or psychical ones, exhibiting itself in irregular sleep, exaggerated febrile reactions, liability to delirium and convulsions, headache, susceptibility to alcohol, diminished or exaggerated sexual instinct, self-consciousness, fickleness in emotions, lack of determination, insane temperament or diathesis.

neuropter (nū-rop′tėr), n. [NL.] A neuropterous insect; a member of the order Neuroptera.

Neuroptera (nū-rop′te-rą), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of neuropterus*, < Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + πτερόν, a wing.] An order of the class Insecta, founded by Linnæus in 1748. It was originally composed of the genera Libellula, Ephemera, Phryganea, Hemerobius, Myrmeleon, Panorpa, and Raphidia (Rhaphidia), the winged termites being included in Hemerobius. The group thus constituted has suffered many changes, and entomologists are still far from agreed upon its proper definition. Fabricius founded a distinct order Odonata for the Linnean Libellulæ or dragon-flies. Kirby separated the Linnean Phryganeæ or caddis-flies under the ordinal name Trichoptera. Erichson founded the order Pseudoneuroptera for those Linnean neuropters whose metamorphosis is incomplete and whose pupæ are active. These eliminations left the Neuroptera to consist of the families Sialidæ, Hemerobiidæ, Mantispidæ, Myrmeleonidæ, and Panorpidæ. By some authors the Phryganeidæ (the Trichoptera of Kirby) are still assigned to Neuroptera, though M'Lachlan, Brauer, and others exclude them. The last-named authority has the largest following in restricting the order Neuroptera to the four families Sialidæ, Hemerobiidæ, Mantispidæ, and Myrmeleonidæ, forming a separate order Panorpatæ for the family Panorpidæ, and leaving the Trichoptera out as a separate order. In this restricted sense the technical characters of the Neuroptera are—wings four in number and reticulate; labial palpi three joined, the joints free mandibles free; pupæ distinctly mandibulate; and larvæ as in Myrmeleon. These insects are all carnivorous in the larval state, and are either aquatic or terrestrial, the aquatic forms pupating terrestrially. See cuts under Chrysopa, Mantis, and nervure.

neuropteral (nū-rop′te-ral), a. [As neuropterous + -al.] Same as neuropterous.

neuropteran (nū-rop′te-ran), n. [As neuropterous + -an.] A neuropter.

Neuropteris (nū-rop′te-ris), n. [NL., < Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + πτερίς, fern.] A group of fossil ferns, described by Brongniart in 1822, very widely distributed, especially characteristic of the Paleozoic coal-measures in different parts of the world, and not passing above the Permian. The fronds are pinnate, bipinnate, or tripinnate, the pinnules rounded, heart-shaped, or auriculated at the base, the median nerve sometimes almost entirely wanting, and generally disappearing altogether before the point of the pinnule is reached—the nervation diverging from the base or from the middle nerve, fan-like and curving backward. In several species the main stem bears rounded or kidney-shaped leaflets, which were formerly referred to a distinct genus (Cyclopteris. The fructification of Neuropteris has not yet been clearly made out, but on account of the structure of the petioles, which combine characters of the Marattiaceæ and the cycads, the genus is included in the Cycadofilices.

neuropterology (nū-rop-te-rol′ō-ji), n. [< NL. Neuroptera + Gr. -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] That branch of entomology which treats of neuropterous insects.

neuropteron (nū-rop′te-ron), n. [NL.: see neuropter.] An insect of the order Neuroptera; a neuropter.

neuropterous (nū-rop′te-rus), a. [< NL. neuropterus*, < Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + πτερόν, wing.] Having conspicuous neuration of the wings; netted-winged; specifically, pertaining to the Neuroptera, or having their characters. Also neuropteral. See cut under nervure.

neuropurpuric (nū″rō-pėr-pū′rik), a. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + NL. purpura + -ic.] Pertaining to the nervous system and to purpura.—Neuropurpuric fever, epidemic cerebrospinal meningitis.

neuroretinitis (nū-rō-ret-i-nī′tis), n. [NL., < Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + NL. retina, q. v., + -itis.] Inflammation of the retina and the optic nerve.

neurorthopter (nū-rôr-thop′tėr), n. A member of the order Neurorthoptera.

Neurorthoptera (nū-rôr-thop′te-rą), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + NL. Orthoptera.] An order of fossil insects of the coal period, founded by C. Brongniart for the reception of numerous forms which resemble the modern leaf-insects or Phasmidæ.

neurorthopterous (nū-rôr-thop′te-rus), a. Of or pertaining to the Neurorthoptera.

neurosal (nū-rō′sal), a. [< neurosis + -al.] Of the nature of or pertaining to a neurosis; originating in the nervous system: as, neurosal disorders; the neurosal theory of gout.

neurose (nū′rōs), a. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + -ose. Cf. nervose, nervous.] 1. In bot., same as nerved.—2. In entom., having many nervures or veins: applied specifically to an insect's wing when it has discal as well as marginal nervures. ★See cut under nervure.

★neurosis (nū-rō′sis), n.: pl. neuroses (-sēz). [NL., < Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + -osis.] 1. A nervous disease without recognizable anatomical lesion, as epilepsy, hysteria, neuralgia, etc.—2. Normal action of a nerve; molecular change in a nerve or nerve-center.

neuroskeletal (nū-rō-skel′e-tal), a. [< neuroskeleton + -al.] Of or pertaining to the neuroskeleton; endoskeletal; skeletal, with special reference to the nervous system.

neuroskeleton (nū-rō-skel′e-ton), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + σκελετόν, a dry body (skeleton): see skeleton.] The endoskeleton of a vertebrate; the skeleton proper, or, as ordinarily understood, that which consists of the interior bony framework of the body, and is developed in special relation with and upon the pattern of the nervous system, serving to inclose and support the cerebrospinal axis and main nervous trunks: a term introduced by Carus in 1828. The term is correlated with dermoskeleton, scleroskeleton, and splanchnoskeleton. All the bones of "the skeleton" of ordinary language are neuroskeletal. Compare endoskeleton and exoskeleton.

neurospast† (nū′rō-spast), n. [< Gr. νευρόσπαστος, drawn or actuated by strings, as a puppet, < νεῦρον, a sinew, fiber, string, + σπαστός, verbal adj. of σπᾶν, draw out or forth: see spasm.] A puppet; a little figure put in motion by a string.

That outward form is but a neurospast.
Dr. H. More, Psychathanasia, I. ii. 34.

neurospastic† (nū-rō-spas′tik), a. [< neurospast + -ic.] Of or pertaining to or resembling a neurospast.

To these, with subtile wires and neurospastic springs, they give, now and then, various motions of head, and eyes, which they have made to weep.
Evelyn, True Religion, II. 281.

neuroterous (nū-rot′e-rus), a. Pertaining to the genus Neuroterus.

Neuroterus (nū-rot′e-rus), n. [NL. (Hartig, 1840).] A genus of hymenopterous gall-insects of the family Cynipidæ, exhibiting parthenogenesis. Forms of one of the alternate generations are known as Spathegaster. N. lenticularis makes oak-galls, the insect produced in which in turn makes galls of another kind, which yield Spathegaster. The neuroterous generation is represented only by females, the spathegastric by both sexes.

neurotherapeutics (nū-rō-ther-a-pū′tiks), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + E. therapeutics.] Therapeutics of nervous disease.

neurotherapy (nū-rō-ther′a-pi), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + θεραπεία, medical treatment.] Same as neurotherapeutics.

neurotic (nū-rot′ik), a. and n. [< neurosis (-ot-) + -ic.] I. a. 1. Relating to the nervous system or to neuroses: as, a neurotic disease.

All of us, in certain neurotic crises, hear music or see pictures or receive other striking and mysterious impressions. New Princeton Rev., II. 158.

2. Prone to the development of neuroses.

The neurotic woman is sensitive, zealous, managing, self-forgetful, wearing herself for others; the hysteric, whether languid or impulsive, is purposeless, introspective, and selfish. Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, V. 162.

3. Capable of acting on the nerves; nervine.

II. n. 1. A disease having its seat in the nerves.—2. A medicine for nervous affections; a nervine.

neurotomical (nū-rō-tom′i-kal), a. [< neurotomy + -ic-al.] Pertaining to neurotomy.

neurotomy (nū-rot′ō-mi), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, a tendon, sinew, nerve, + -τομία, < τέμνειν, ταμεῖν, cut.] In surg., the division of a nerve.

neurotonic (nū-rō-ton′ik), n. [< Gr. νεῦρον, a nerve, + E. tonic.] A medicine employed to strengthen the nervous system.

neurotrophic (nū-rō-trof′ik), a. [< Gr. νεῦρον, nerve, + τροφή, nourishment.] Pertaining to or dependent on trophic influences coming through the nerves.

neurypnologist (nū-rip-nol′ō-jist), n. [< neurypnolog-y + -ist.] Same as neurohypnologist.

neurypnology (nū-rip-nol′ō-ji), n. Same as neurohypnology. Braid.

Neustrian (nūs′tri-an), a. [< Neustria (see def.) + -an.] Of or pertaining to Neustria, a kingdom of the West Franks in the sixth, seventh, and eighth centuries, comprising France north of the Loire, and Flanders: as generally used, opposed to Austrasian.

To no small extent the Neustrian Franks had lost their old Germanic vigour. Encyc. Brit., IX. 531.

neut. An abbreviation of neuter.

neuter (nū′tėr), a. and n. [< L. neuter, neither; in grammatical use, neuter, tr. Gr. οὐδέτερος (neutrum genus, tr. Gr. γένος οὐδέτερον, neuter gender); < ne, not (see ne), + uter, either, one of two.] I. a. 1. Neither the one thing nor the other; not adhering to either party; taking no part with either side, as in a contention or discussion; neutral.

The duke and all his countrey abode as neuter, and helde with none of both parties.
Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron., I. cclii.

I cannot mend it, I must needs confess; . . .
But since I cannot, be it known to you
I do remain as neuter. Shak., Rich. II., ii. 3. 159.

Mr. Burchell, on the contrary, dissuaded her with great ardour; and I stood neuter. Goldsmith, Vicar, xiii.

2. In gram.: (a) Of neither gender; neither masculine nor feminine: used when words are grammatically or formally distinguished as masculine, feminine, and neuter—a distinction made in English only in the pronouns he, she, it. (b) Neither active nor passive; intransitive. Abbreviated n. and neut.—3. In bot., same as neutral.—4. In zoöl., having no fully developed sex: as, neuter bees.

II. n. 1†. A neutral.

Shall we, that in the battle sate as neuters,
Serve him that 's overcome?
Fletcher (and another), False One, I. 1.

Damn'd neuters, in their middle way of steering,
Are neither fish, nor flesh, nor good red herring.
Dryden, Epilogue to the Duke of Guise, l. 39.

2. An animal of neither sex, and incapable of propagation; one of the imperfectly developed females of certain social insects, as ants and bees, which perform all the labors of the community; a worker. See cuts under bee, Atta, and Termes.—3. In bot., a plant which has neither stamens nor pistils. See cut under neutral.—4. In gram., a noun of the neuter gender. Abbreviated n. and neut.

neutral (nū′tral), a. and n. [= Sp. Pg. neutral = It. neutrale, < L. neutralis, neuter, < neuter, neither: see neuter.] I. a. 1. In the condition of one who refrains from taking sides in a contest or dispute; taking no active part with either of two contestants or belligerents; not engaged on or interfering with either side.

Who can be wise, amazed, temperate and furious, Loyal and neutral, in a moment? No man.
Shak., Macbeth, ii. 3. 115.

He [Temple] was placed in the territory of a great neutral power, between the territories of two great powers which were at war with England.
Macaulay, Sir William Temple.

A neutral State is one which sustains the relations of amity to both the belligerent parties, or, negatively, is a non hostis, . . . one which sides with neither party in a war. Woolsey, Introd. to Inter. Law, § 155.

2. Belonging to a neutral state: as, neutral ships; a neutral flag.—3. Neither one thing nor the other; intermediate; indifferent; mediocre.

Some things good, and some things ill do seem,
And neutral some, in her fantastic eye.
Sir J. Davies, Immortality of the Soul, xx.

I was resolved to assume a look perfectly neutral: . . . a complete virginity of face, uncontaminated with the smallest symptom of meaning.
Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, xcvi.

4. In chem., exhibiting neither acid nor alkaline qualities: as, neutral salts.—5. In bot., sexless; having neither stamens nor pistils, as Neutral Flowers of (a) Snow-ball Tree (Viburnum Opulus); (b) Coreopsis verticillata (a ray-flower); (c) Polypodon Texanus.

the ray-flowers of many composites, the marginal flowers of Hydrangea, and the upper florets of many grasses. See cut under Hydrangea.—6. In elect. and magnetism, not electrified; not magnetized.—7. In color, of low chroma; without positive quality of color; grayish.—Neutral axis, in mech. See *axis*1.—Neutral blue, equilibrium. See the nouns.—Neutral line or equator of a magnet. See magnet.—Neutral salts, in chem., salts in which all the hydrogen atoms of an acid capable of replacement by basic radicals have been so replaced, as sodium sulphate (Na_2SO_4), distinguished from hydrogen-sodium sulphate ($NaHSO_4$). Neutral salts may, however, react either acid, alkaline, or neutral with test-paper. Better called normal salts.—Neutral vowel, the vowel-sound heard in such accented syllables as but, son, flood, trust, firm, earn, etc., and very widely in unaccented syllables: so called because of the virtual absence in its utterance of a positive determining position of the organs, it being rather the product of intonation of their indifferent position in breathing, and the form toward which vowels excessively slighted in pronunciation tend. It is instanced also by the French "mute e" (where this is not altogether silenced), by the a of many unaccented syllables in German, and so on.—Neutral zone, in bot., in the Characeæ, the motionless hyaline band of protoplasm, entirely destitute of chlorophyl-grains, which marks the boundary between two currents of oppositely rotating protoplasm in active growing cells. Also called indifferent line.

II. n. A person, party, or nation that takes no part in a contest between others; one who or that which occupies a neutral or indifferent position.

As a painted tyrant, Pyrrhus stood,
And like a neutral to his will and matter,
Did nothing. Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2. 503.

The right of blockade is one affecting neutrals, and a new kind of exercise of this right cannot be introduced into the law of nations without their consent.
Woolsey, Introd. to Inter. Law, App. iii., p. 443.

neutralisation, neutralise, etc. See neutralization, etc.

neutralist (nū′tral-ist), n. [< neutral + -ist.] One who professes neutrality; a neutral. [Rare.]

Intrusting of the militia and navy in the hands of neutralists, unfaithful and disaffected persons.
Petition of the City of London to the House of Commons, [1648, p. 6. (Latham.)

neutrality (nū-tral′i-ti), n. [= F. neutralité = Sp. neutralidad = Pg. neutralidade = It. neutralità = D. neutraliteit = G. neutralität = Sw. Dan. neutralitet, < ML. neutralita(t-)s, a neutral condition, < L. neutralis, neutral: see neutral.] 1. The state of being neutral or of being unengaged in a dispute or contest between others; the taking of no part on either side; in international law, the attitude and condition of a nation or state which does not take part directly or indirectly in a war between other states, but maintains relations of amity with all the contending parties. It is not a departure from neutrality to furnish to either of the contending parties supplies which do not fall within the description of contraband of war—that is, arms and munitions of war, and things out of which munitions of war are made.

Purchase but their neutrality, thy sword Will, in despite of oracles, reduce
The rest of Greece. Glover, Athenaid, ix.

Venice, with her usual crafty policy, kept aloof, maintaining a position of neutrality between the belligerents.
Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 14.

2. Indifference in quality; a state neither very good nor very evil. [Rare.]

There is no health; physicians say that we
At best enjoy but a neutrality.
Donne, Anatomy of the World.

3†. The state of being of the neuter gender.

Hence appeareth the truth of those words of our Saviour, . . . I and the Father are one, where the plurality of the verb, and the neutrality of the noun, with the distinction of their persons, speak a perfect identity of their essence.
Bp. Pearson, Expos. of the Creed, ii. 3, § 38.

4. In chem., the state of being neither acid nor basic; absence of the power to saturate or combine with either an acid or a base.—Armed neutrality. See armed.—Proclamation of neutrality, in U. S. hist., the proclamation by which Washington, in 1793, announced the neutrality of the United States in the war then begun between Great Britain and France.
=Syn. 1. Neutrality, Indifference. A nation may be very far from viewing or regarding with indifference a war between two of its neighbors, and yet it may preserve a strict neutrality—that is, it may refrain strictly from helping the one that it wishes to see victorious or hindering the one that it wishes to see defeated.

A state may stipulate to observe perpetual neutrality towards some or all of its surrounding neighbors, on condition of having its own neutrality respected.
Woolsey, Introd. to Inter. Law, § 155.

Met
With blank indifference, or with blame reproved.
M. Arnold, Buried Life.

neutralization (nū″tral-i-zā′shon), n. [= F. neutralisation; as neutralize + -ation.] 1. The act of neutralizing; specifically, in chem., the process by which an acid and a base are so combined that the resulting compound has neither acid nor basic properties. Thus, if a solution of sodium hydroxid is carefully added to sulphuric acid, the acidity of the mixture grows less and at length quite disappears, leaving the mixture with neither acid nor basic properties. This is the neutralization point. If more sodium hydroxid is added, it imparts a basic or alkaline property to the mixture. Neutralization can then be brought about only by addition of an acid. In these cases the acid and base are said to neutralize each other. The name neutralization is also given to the decomposition of alkaline carbonates by the addition of some stronger acid in quantity just sufficient wholly to displace carbonic acid.

There are some cases in which the neutralization is effected by the addition of a substance which, even if added in excess, produces a precipitate, and so leaves the solution neutral, so that the addition of an excess of the precipitant is without much importance.
Lea, Photography, p. 425.

2. (a) An act of one or more nations imposing upon one of their number or upon another state a condition of permanent neutrality by ordaining that it shall not take part in any war into which the others may enter, in consideration for which its freedom from attack is usually guaranteed, as in the case of Switzerland in 1815, and Belgium since its separation from the Netherlands in 1830. (b) An act of military powers agreeing that certain persons, property, and places, such as surgeons, chaplains, and the wounded, medical supplies, hospitals, and ambulances, shall be deemed neutral in war, and not subject to capture, etc., as was agreed by the Geneva Convention, 1864. (c) More loosely, the act of securing by convention immunity for certain territory or waters from being made the scene of hostilities or of exclusive national maritime jurisdiction, as for the Black Sea, 1856, and for the Congo in Central Africa, 1885. (d) The condition of immunity and restriction resulting from any of such acts.

★ Also spelled neutralisation.

neutralize (nū′trạl-īz), v. t.; pret. and pp. neutralized, ppr. neutralizing. [= F. neutraliser = Sp. Pg. neutralizar = It. neutralizzare; as neutral + -ize.] 1. To render neutral; reduce to a state of neutrality between different parties or opinions. Specifically—(a) To bestow by convention a neutral character upon (states, persons, and things which would or might otherwise bear a belligerent character); declare non belligerent. (b) To prohibit hostilities within the limits of, as territory or waters.

The article of the treaty which referred to the Black Sea is of especial importance. "The Black Sea is neutralised; its waters and its ports, thrown open to the mercantile marine of every nation, are formally and in perpetuity interdicted to the flag of war of either of the Powers possessing its coasts or of any other Power."
J. M'Carthy, Hist. Own Times, xxviii.

2. In chem., to destroy or render inert or imperceptible the peculiar properties of, by chemical combination. See neutralization, 1.

Ammonia neutralizes the most powerful acids, and forms a very important class of salts.
W. A. Miller, Elem. of Chem., § 369.

3. To render inoperative; invalidate; nullify; counterbalance: as, to neutralize opposition.

He acts as Archimedes would have done if he had attempted to move the earth by a lever fixed on the earth. The action and reaction neutralise each other.
Macaulay, West. Reviewer's Def. of Mill.

As one poison will sometimes neutralise another, when wholesome remedies would not avail, so he was restrained by a bad passion from quaffing his full measure of evil. Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, xi.

Also spelled neutralise.

=Syn. 3. Annul, Nullify, Annihilate, Neutralize. These words agree in meaning the bringing of a thing to nothing, causing it to cease to be absolutely, or as to some special relation. Annul represents an official or authoritative act: as, to annul an edict. (See abolish.) Nullify, to render invalid or of no avail, is more general and less often official: a law may be illegally nullified by inert resistance. To annihilate is to reduce to nothing, and should be used only where absolute putting out of existence is meant; such expressions as "his army was literally annihilated" are manifestly improper; "his army was annihilated" would be proper by strong hyperbole, if the army was so broken up that no parts of it were ever gathered together again. To neutralize is to bring to nothing in respect to some special relation, or to render inoperative or inefficacious in respect to certain other agencies or forces, by a contrary or counterbalancing force: as, to neutralize an acid; his efforts were neutralized by the influence of his opponent. That which is neutralized would naturally have force in itself; hence we should not speak of neutralizing a law or a command.

neutralizer (nū′trạl-ī-zėr), n. [< neutralize + -er[1].] One who or that which neutralizes; that which destroys, disguises, or renders inert the peculiar properties of anything. Also spelled neutraliser.

This neutralizer should be set on a higher level, that no further pumping, to the end of the acetate of lime process, may be necessary. Spons' Encyc. Manuf., I. 13.

neutrally (nū′trạl-i), adv. In a neutral manner; without taking part with either side; as a neutral.

neutria, n. See nutria.

neutrophile (nū′trō-fil), a. [< L. neuter, neither, ★+ Gr. φίλος, loving.] In histol. and bacteriol., staining with dyes of neutral reaction.

neuvaine (nė-vān′), n. [F. (= Sp. Pg. It. novena), a period of nine days: see novena.] Same as novena.

nevadite (nē-vä′dīt), n. [< Nevada, one of the United States, + -ite[2].] See rhyolite.

neve[1]†, n. [ME., < AS. nefa, nephew: see nephew.] A nephew.

Vt of Egipte, riche man,
Wente Abram in to lond Canaan;
And Loth hise neue and Sarray Bileften bi-twen Betel and Ay.
Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), l. 799.

Preieth a pater noster priuely this time
For the hend erl of Herford, sir Humfray de Bowne,
The king Edwardes newe at Glouseter that ligges.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 166.

neve[2]†, n. [< L. nepos, a spendthrift, prodigal: see nephew.] A spendthrift. Halliwell.

neve[3]†, n. A Middle English form of neaf.

neve[4], n. See næve.

névé (nā-vā′), n. [F., < L. nix (niv-), snow: see snow[1].] Same as firn. Also glacier-snow.

nevel (nev′el), v. t.; pret. and pp. neveled or nevelled, ppr. neveling or nevelling. [Also spelled, erroneously, knevel; freq., < neve, neaf, the fist: see neaf.] To pommel; beat with the fists. [Scotch.]

Twa land-loupers . . . got me down, and knevelled me sair aneuch. Scott, Guy Mannering, xxiv.

nevent† (nev′en), v. t. [< ME. nevenen, nevnen, nempnen, nemnen, < AS. nemnian, nemnan (= OS. nemnjan = OHG. nemnan, MHG. nemnen, nennen, G. nennen = Icel. nefna = Goth. namnjan), name, < nama (naman-), name: see name[1], n. Cf. name[1], v.] To name; call; tell; say.

He that neuenes God and sweris fals dispyse God.
Hampole, Prose Treatises (E. E. T. S.), p. 10.

I wol yow telle, as was me taught also,
The foure spirites and the bodies sevene,
By ordre, as ofte I herde my lord hem nevene.
Chaucer, Prol. to Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 268.

never (nev′ėr), adv. [< ME. never, nevere, nevre, nefer, nefre, nævre, etc. (also contr. neer, < ME. nere, ner), < AS. nāfre, never, not ever, < ne, not, + āfre, ever: see ne and ever.] 1. Not ever; not at any time; at no time, whether past, present, or future.

He ansuerde that he wolde neuer be knyght before that the beste knyght of the worlde that eny man knewe hadde yove hym armes and the acoole.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 520.

One day we shall blessedly meet again, never to depart.
Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, iii.

She never was to me but all obedience,
Sweetness, and love.
Fletcher, Humorous Lieutenant, iv. 4.

Regions of sorrow, doleful shades, where peace
And rest can never dwell; hope never comes,
That comes all. Milton, P. L., i. 66.

Never did a more gallant and self-confident little army tread the earth. Irving, Granada, p. 86.

2. In no degree; not at all; not a whit; not, emphatically.

"Throw down the ba', ye Jew's daughter, Throw down the ba' to me!"
"Never a bit," says the Jew's daughter,
"Till up to me come ye."
Hugh of Lincoln (Child's Ballads, III. 139).

Let it not displease thee, good Bianca,
For I will love thee ne'er the less, my girl.
Shak., T. of the S., i. 1. 77.

At this rate a head will be reckoned never the wiser for being bald. Steele, Spectator, No. 497.

Never fear, he's the son of an excellent Scottish lawyer; he'll shew blood, I'll warrant him.
Scott, Guy Mannering, xxxvii.

[Never in this use, with the following indefinite article a, is equivalent to no, or none, and in the contracted form ne'er a is the source of the dialectal or slang adjective nary.

'Tis no matter: ne'er a fantastical knave of them all shall flout me out of my calling.
Shak., As you Like it, iii. 3. 107.]

Never indebted, in law, a plea allowed at common law in actions of debt on simple contracts other than negotiable paper, to the effect that defendant "never was indebted in manner and form as in the declaration alleged," which plea in general put in issue whatever plaintiff might be required to prove under his declaration.—Never so, never such, to whatever extent or degree; no matter how (much, great, etc.); as never before was.

Though there be never so moche taken awey thereof on the Day, at Morwe it is as fulle azen as evere it was.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 32.

Which will not hearken to the voice of charmers, charming never so wisely. Ps. lviii. 5.

But as for the women, poore soules! bee they never so good, they have the gates shut against them.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 46.

[In this idiom there is a suppressed comparison—'never (at any other time) so (great, good, much, etc.) as in the case supposed or considered.' Never, becoming merely emphatic, is now usually replaced by ever.]—Never the near†, never the nearer. William Morris, Earthly Paradise, III. 202.

2. Anew; afresh; in a new and different manner or form.

newmarket (nū'mär″ket), n. [Named after Newmarket in England.] 1. A game of cards played by any number of persons with a full pack of cards and a layout, consisting of the ace, king, queen, and jack of different suits, made up from another pack and on which bets are placed. Whatever card is first led by the eldest hand must be followed by the one who holds the next above it in sequence in the same suit. As certain cards remain in the pack, they may stop the sequence, and the last player on one sequence is allowed to begin another with the lowest card of it he holds. As the duplicates of the cards on the layout are played, the stakes on those cards are won. The player first getting rid of all his cards wins a chip from each of the others for every card they hold, and the play stops.

2. Same as Newmarket coat.

Newmarket coat. 1. A close-fitting coat, originally worn for riding.

news (nūz), n. [First in late ME. newes, newys; pl. of new (early mod. E. newe); not a native E. idiom, but as a translation of F. nouvelles, news (see novel, n., 2). The supposition that news represents the AS. partitive genitive in hwæt niwes (= L. quid novi), 'what news?' lit. 'what of new,' lacks the confirmation of ME. examples. That news is or was felt to be somewhat out of accord with E. idiom is also indicated by an absurd etymology still sometimes propounded, namely, that news is "information from the four quarters of the compass"—N E W S, north, east, west, south. Though plural in form, news is singular in use.] 1. A new or uncommon and more or less surprising thing; a new or unexpected event or occurrence.

A case so graue, a newes so new, a victorie so seldome hearde of. Letters of Sir Antonie of Gueuara, p. 2.

The next newes that happened in this time of ease was that, a merry fellow hauing found some few Dollars against the Flemish wracke, the bruit went currant the treasure was found. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 135.

It was no news then [in a time of famine] for a Woman to forget her sucking child, so as not to have compassion upon the Son of her Womb. Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. viii.

It is no news for the weak and poor to be a prey to the strong and rich. Sir R. L'Estrange.

In Burmarsh you could not cross a road without someone seeing you and making news of it. W. C. Russell, Sailor's Sweetheart, i.

2. Recent, but not necessarily unexpected, intelligence of something that has lately taken place, or of something before unknown or imperfectly known; tidings.

And laye in the hauyn where as they were before, of the whiche newys oure sayde company were ryght joyous and thanked Almyghty God. Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 64.

Thus answer I in name of Benedick,
But hear these ill news with the ears of Claudio.
Shak., Much Ado, ii. 1. 180.

He that hath bargains to make, or news to tell, should not come to do that at church. Donne, Sermons, iv.

Although our title, sir, be News,
We yet adventure here to tell you none,
But shew you common follies.
B. Jonson, Staple of News, Prol.

There is fearful News come from Germany. Howell, Letters, I. ii. 4.

The newspaper creates and feeds the appetite for news. When we read it, it is not to find what is true, what is important, what we must consider and reflect upon, what we must carry away and remember, but what is new. J. F. Clarke, Self-Culture, p. 310.

3. A newspaper. [Obsolete or provincial.]

So when a child, as playful children use,
Has burnt to tinder a stale last-year's news.
Cowper, On Names of little Note in Blog. Brit.

4†. A messenger with news.

In the mean-time there coming a News thither with his horse to go over. Pepys, Diary, July 31, 1665.

News-ink. See ink[1].=Syn. 2. News, Intelligence, Tidings, Advices. News is the most general word, applying to real information which is or is not important, interesting, or expected; news meets especially the desire to know. Intelligence is also a general word, applying to news or information of an interesting character, enabling one to understand better the situation of things in the place from which intelligence comes: as, intelligence from the Sandwich Islands to the 1st ult.; intelligence of a mutiny. Tidings are awaited with anxiety. Advices are items of information sent for the benefit or pleasure of those receiving them. Thus, Philip II. expected no intelligence from the Armada for some days after it sailed; soon rumor brought him false news of a glorious victory gained over the English; his first reliable news of the defeat of the Armada came through advices; he received from time to time tidings of uniform disaster.

Beyond it blooms the garden that I love;
News from the humming city comes to it.
Tennyson, Gardener's Daughter.

Prince Eugene afterwards very candidly declared that he had himself given for intelligence three times as much as Marlborough was charged with on that head. Lecky, Eng. in 18th Cent., i.

To hear the tidings of my friend,
Which every hour his couriers bring.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, cxxvi.

At night he retires home, full of the important advices of the day. Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, iv.

news-pamphlet (nūz'pamf″let), n. Formerly, a publication issued occasionally when any special event seemed to call for it. Such pamphlets were precursors of newspapers, and appeared especially in the sixteenth century.

newspaper (nūz'pā″pėr), n. A paper containing news; a sheet containing intelligence or reports of passing events, issued at short but regular intervals, and either sold or distributed gratis; a public print, or daily, weekly, or semi-weekly periodical, that presents the news of the day, such as the doings of political, legislative, or other public bodies, local, provincial, or national current events, items of public interest on science, religion, commerce, as well as trade, market, and money reports, advertisements and announcements, etc. Newspapers may be classed as general, devoted to the dissemination of intelligence on a great variety of topics which are of interest to the general reader, or special, in which some particular subject, as religion, temperance, literature, law, etc., has prominence, general news occupying only a secondary place. The first English newspaper is believed to be the "Weekly News," issued in London in 1622. The beginnings of newspapers in Germany and Italy are said to reach back to the sixteenth century, although it is often stated that the oldest newspaper is the "Frankfurter Journal," founded in 1615. In the United States "Publick Occurrences" was started in Boston in 1690, but was suppressed; the Boston "News-Letter" followed in 1704; but the oldest existing newspaper in the country is the "New Hampshire Gazette," founded in 1756.

This month, a certain great Person will be threatened with death or sickness. This the News Paper will tell them. Isaac Bickerstaff, Predictions for the Year 1708.

There now exist but two newspapers which were in being in Queen Anne's reign, namely the "London Gazette" (but that has been kept alive through its official nursing) and — but one due to private enterprise — Berrow's "Worcester Journal" which was established in 1709.
J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 66.

She had the best intention of being nice to him.
Atlantic Monthly, LVIII. 436.

[Nice in this sense is very common in colloquial use as a general epithet of approbation applicable to anything that pleases.]—To make nice of†. See *make*1.—Syn. 3. Nice, Dainty, Fastidious, Squeamish, finical, delicate, exquisite, effeminate, fussy. Nice is the most general of the first four words; it suggests careful choice: as, he is nice in his language and in his dress: it is rarely used of overwrought delicacy. Dainty is stronger than nice, and ranges from a commendable particularity to fastidiousness: as, to be dainty in one's choice of clothes or company; a dainty virtue. Fastidious almost always means a somewhat proud or haughty particularity; a fastidious person is hard to please, because he objects to minute points or to some point in almost everything. Squeamish is founded upon the notion of feeling nausea; hence it means fastidious to an extreme, absurdly particular.—4. Definite, rigorous, strict.—5. Accurate, Correct, Exact, etc. See accurate.—9. Luscious, savory, palatable.

nicefy† (nī'si-fī), v. t. [< nice + -e-fy.] To make nice of (a thing); be squeamish about. [Rare.]

nicely (nīs'li), adv. [< nice + *-ly*2.] In a nice manner, in any sense of the word nice. (a) Fastidiously; critically; curiously: as, he was disposed to look into the matter too nicely.

Be satisfied if poetry be delightful, or helpful, or inspiring, or all these together, but do not consider too nicely why it is so. Lowell, Wordsworth.

(b) With delicate perception: as, to be nicely sensible. (c) Accurately; exactly; with exact order or proportion: as, the parts of a machine or building nicely adjusted; a shape nicely proportioned a dress nicely fitted to the body. (d) Agreeably; becomingly; pleasantly: as, she was nicely dressed. (e) Satisfactorily: as, the work progresses nicely. [Colloq.]

Nicene (nī'sēn), a. [< LL. Nicænus, less correctly Nicenus, of Nicæa or Nice (Nicæna fides, the Nicene Creed), < Nicæa, also Nicea, < Gr. Νίκαια (> Νικαῖος, adj.), a name of several cities (see def.), < νικαῖος, victorious, < νίκη, victory.] Of or pertaining to Nicæa or Nice, a town of Bithynia, Asia Minor.—Nicene council, either of two general councils which met at Nicæa. The first Nicene council, which was also the first general council, met in A. D. 325, condemned Arianism, and promulgated the Nicene Creed in its earlier form. The second Nicene council, accounted also the seventh general council, was held in 787, and condemned the Iconoclasts. The recognition of the first Nicene council as ecumenical has been almost universal among Christians of all confessions; it is acknowledged to the present day not only by the Roman Catholic and the Greek churches, and by many Protestant churches, but by Nestorians, Jacobites, and Copts. The Anglican Church does not accept the second Nicene council as ecumenical.—Nicene Creed or Symbol, a summary of the chief tenets of the Christian faith, first set forth as of ecumenical authority by the first Nicene council (A. D. 325), but closely similar in wording to ancient creeds of Oriental churches, and especially founded upon the baptismal creed of the church of Cæsarea in Palestine. The distinctive word added at Nice to exclude the possibility of an Arian construction was homoüsion (consubstantial), which word, however, was already in well-established theological use. This creed ended with the words and in the Holy Ghost, and an anathema against the distinctive tenets of the Arians was subjoined to it. The second general council—that is, the first Constantinopolitan (A. D. 381)—reaffirmed this creed, and also authorized, as subsidiary to it, an explanatory version previously formulated, probably in a local synod at Antioch, and closely similar to the baptismal creed of the church of Jerusalem, differing from the Nicene form very slightly in wording, but adding a fuller statement as to the Holy Ghost, directed against the heresy of the Macedonians, and concluding as in the form still used. At the Chalcedonian (or fourth general) council (A. D. 451), the second form was authorized equally with the first as the Nicene faith, and was officially and historically known from that time forward as the Nicene Creed; church historians, however, sometimes speak of it as the Nicæno-Constantinopolitan Creed. Both these forms have been reaffirmed ever since by all councils claiming to be ecumenical. The second form came into general use in the Eastern Church in the latter part of the fifth century, and has remained unaltered in that church to the present day. It remained unaltered in the West also for some centuries, but an important addition, namely, the word filioque, 'and (from) the Son,' after the words who proceedeth from the Father, in the last paragraph, was introduced in the sixth century, and, though not formulated by the Roman Church in the ninth century, had nevertheless been accepted throughout all western Europe. It is this form, with the interpolated filioque, which is used by the Roman Church, the Anglican Church, and all Protestant churches which accept the Nicene Creed, and it is this last form, therefore, which is generally called by that name. The Western forms begin "I believe," not "We believe," as in the Greek. The Nicene Creed in its second form is the only authoritative creed of the Eastern Church.

niceness (nīs'nes), n. The character or quality of being nice, in any sense of that word. =Syn. See nice.

nicery (nī'sėr-i), n. [< nice + -ery.] Daintiness; affectation of delicacy. Chapman.

niceteet†, n. A Middle English form of nicety.

In ancient Roman architecture niches were generally semicircular in plan, and terminated in a semi-dome at the top. They were sometimes, however, square-headed, and in classical architecture sometimes also square in plan. They were ornamented with pillars, architraves, and consoles, and in other ways. In the architecture of the middle ages niches were extensively used in decoration and for the reception of statues. In the Romanesque style they were so shallow as to be little more than panels, and the figures were frequently carved on the back in high relief. In the Pointed style they became more deeply recessed, and were highly enriched with elaborate canopies, and often much accessory ornament. In plan they are most frequently a semi-octagon or a semi-hexagon, and their heads are formed of groined vaulting, with bosses and pendants according to the prevalent architecture of the time. They are often projected on corbels, and adorned with pillars, buttresses, and various moldings. Compare cut under gallery.

William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 4145.

As I have but one boon to ask, I trust you will not ★nick me with nay. Scott, Abbot, xxxviii.

★nick[3] (nik), n. [Perhaps a particular use of nick[1], as a 'point marked'; otherwise < nick[2], a 'wink' in the sense of 'moment.'] 1. Point, especially point of time: as, in the nick of—that is, on the point of (being or doing something).

Schol. Does the sea stagger ye?
Mast. Now ye have hit the nick.
Fletcher, Pilgrim, iii. 6.

In the nick of being surprised, the lovers are let down and escape at a trap-door. Steele, Guardian, No. 82.

2. The exact point (of time) which accords with or is demanded by the necessities of the case; the critical or right moment; the very moment: used chiefly in the phrases in the nick or in the nick of time—that is, at the right moment, just when most needed or demanded.

The masque dogg'd me, I hit it in the nick;
A fetch to get my diamond, my dear stone.
Middleton, Blurt, Master-Constable, ii. 2.

Most fit opportunity! her grace comes just i' th' nick.
Ford, Love's Sacrifice, ii. 2.

I never could have found him in a sweeter temper for my purpose—to be sure, I'm just come in the nick!
Sheridan, The Rivals, iv. 3.

This harsh restorative . . . was presented to English poetry in the nick of time.
E. Gosse, From Shakespeare to Pope, p. 40.

3. A lucky or winning throw in the game of hazard: as, eleven is the nick to seven. See hazard, 1.

nick[3] (nik), v. [< nick[3], n.] I. trans. 1†. To strike or hit right; hit or hit upon exactly; fit into; suit.

In these verses by reason one of them doth as it were nicke another, and haue a certaine extraordinary sence with all. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 111.

Words nicking and resembling one the other are applicable to different significations. Camden, Remains, p. 158.

And then I have a salutation will nick all.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, ii. 1.

The just season of doing things must be nicked, and all accidents improved. Sir R. L'Estrange.

2†. In gaming, to throw or turn up; hit or hit upon.

My old luck: I never nicked seven that I did not throw ames ace three times following.
Goldsmith, She Stoops to Conquer, iii.

3†. To delude or deceive; cozen; cheat, as at dice.

We must be sometimes witty,
To nick a knave; 'tis as useful as our gravity.
Fletcher (and another ?), Prophetess, iii. 1.

4. To catch in the act. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—To nick the nick, to hit exactly the critical moment or time. Halliwell.

II. intrans. 1. To fit; unite or combine; be adapted for combining: said, in stock-breeding, of the crossing of one strain of blood with another.—2. To suit; compare; be comparable. [Colloq.]

Only one sport "nicks" with cycling, and that is fair toe and heel walking, doubtless owing to the strengthening of the legs generally, and the ankle work.
Bury and Hillier, Cycling, p. 227.

3. In the game of hazard, to throw a winning number. Compare nick[3], n., 3.—4†. To bet; gamble.

Thou art some debauch'd, drunken, leud, hectoring, gaming Companion, and want'st some Widow's old Gold to nick upon. Wycherley, Plain Dealer, ii. 1.

Nick[4] (nik), n. [Not found in ME.; known in mod. use only in Old Nick, the devil, supposed to be a perverted use of (St.) Nicholas (G. Nicolaus, in popular form Nickel, applied to the devil, etc.). It is otherwise taken to be derived, with a transfer of sense, from AS. nicor, a water-goblin: for this, see nicker[1].] The devil: usually with the addition of Old.

Don't swear by the Styx.
It 's one of Old Nick's
Most abominable tricks
To get men into a terrible fix.
J. G. Saxe, Dan Phaëton.

nick[5]† (nik), v. t. [< nick(name).] To nickname; hence, to annoy or tease by nicknaming.

Warbeck, as you nick him, came to me,
Commended by the states of Christendom,
A prince, though in distress.
Ford, Perkin Warbeck, iv. 3.

nickar-nuts, n. pl. Same as bonduc-seeds.

nickar-tree, n. See nicker-tree.

nick-eared (nik'ērd), a. Crop-eared.

★nickel (nik'el), n. and a. [= D. G. nickel = Dan. nikkel = F. nickel = Russ. nikkelĭ = NL. niccolum, < Sw. nickel, nickel, so called by Cronstedt in 1754, abbr. from Sw. kopparnickel (G. kupfernickel), a mineral containing the metal, < koppar (= E. copper) + nickel*, a word identified by some with G. Nickel, the devil (see Nick[4]) (cf. cobalt as related to kobold), and by others compared with Icel. knikill (Haldorson), a ball, lump.] I. n. 1. Chemical symbol, Ni; atomic weight, 58.68. A metal closely related to cobalt, with which it almost always occurs. The two are, in fact, so much alike that their chemical separation is by no means an easy task. The specific gravity of nickel is given as varying from 8.9 to 9.1; in this and in atomic weight it differs little from cobalt. Nickel and cobalt are also closely allied to iron, which they resemble in color, although slightly whiter than that metal, the former having rather a yellowish tinge, the latter a bluish. They are both magnetic, but in a less degree than iron. Both also stand on a par with that metal in regard to most of those qualities which make it valuable in the arts, namely tenacity, malleability, and ductility, but both are so much scarcer than iron that there is no possibility of their replacing that metal to any considerable extent. The occurrence of nickel (as also of cobalt) in connection with iron in meteorites is interesting and peculiar. (See meteorite.) The ores of nickel are somewhat widely disseminated, but nowhere occur in great abundance. The arseniuret (kupfernickel), nickeliferous pyrrhotite, and the silicate are the principal sources of this metal, the last having been found within a few years in considerable quantity in New Caledonia, where it is exceptionally free from cobalt. Nickel was discovered by Cronstedt in 1751; but it is only within a few years that it has begun to be of considerable commercial importance. Its value has varied greatly since it came into general use. It is an ingredient of certain valuable alloys and especially of German silver, and is now much experimented with in this direction. It is largely used for plating iron and brass in order to improve their appearance and preserve them from rusting. It is also somewhat employed in coinage, in the United States, Belgium, Switzerland, Germany, and Mexico. Nickel is largely used to toughen steel for the manufacture of armor-plate.

The length of a nickel rod should be diminished by magnetization. Encyc. Brit., XXX. 444.

2. In the United States, a current coin representing the value of five cents, made of an alloy of one part of nickel to three of copper. [Colloq.]

II. a. Consisting of or covered with nickel.

nickel (nik'el), v. t.; pret. and pp. nickeled or nickelled, ppr. nickeling or nickelling. [< nickel, n.] To plate or coat, as metal surfaces, with nickel, either by electrolytic processes or by chemical operations.

nickelage (nik'el-āj), n. [< nickel + -age.] The art or process of nickel-plating. Also nickelure.

What he [Ladislas Adolphe Gaiffe] called "nickelure," and what his imitators style nickelage, has become an extensive industry. Sci. Amer., N. S., LVI. 340.

nickel-bloom (nik'el-blōm), n. Same as annabergite.

nickel-glance (nik'el-glāns), n. Same as gersdorffite.

nickel-green (nik'el-grēn), n. Same as annabergite.

nickelic (nik'el-ik), a. [< nickel + -ic.] Pertaining to or containing nickel.

nickeliferous (nik-e-lif'e-rus), a. [< nickel + L. ferre = E. bear[1].] Containing nickel: as, nickeliferous pyrrhotite. Also niccoliferous.

nickeline (nik'el-in), n. [< nickel + -ine[2].] Same as niccolite.

nickelize (nik'el-īz), v. t.; pret. and pp. nickelized, ppr. nickelizing. [< nickel + -ize.] Same as nickel. Also nickelise.

Nickelised or nickel-plated iron should be employed.
Ure, Dict., IV. 338.

nickel-ocher (nik'el-ō″kėr), n. Same as annabergite.

nickelous (nik'el-us), a. [< nickel + -ous.] Related to or containing nickel.

nickel-plated (nik'el-plā″ted), a. Coated or plated with nickel.

nickel-plating (nik'el-plā″ting), n. The process of covering the surface of metals with a coating of nickel, either by means of a heated solution or by electrodeposition, for the purpose of improving their appearance or their wearing qualities, or of rendering them less liable to oxidation by heat or moisture.

nickel-silver (nik'el-sil″vėr), n. One of the many names of the alloy best known in English as German silver, and in German as Neusilber. See German silver, under silver.

nickelure (nik'el-ūr), n. [< nickel + -ure.] Same as nickelage.

nicker[1]† (nik'ėr), n. [< ME. nicker*, nycker, niker, nikyr, nyker, nykyr, a water-sprite, < AS. nicor (in inflection also nicer-, nicr-, niecr-, niecr-), a sea-monster, a hippopotamus, = MD. nicker, necker, D. nikker = MLG. nicker, LG. nikker (?) There she gae mony a nicher and snear.
Lochmaben Harper (Child's Ballads, VI. 6).

nicker-nuts (nik'ėr-nuts), n. pl. Same as bonduc-seeds.

nicker-pecker (nik'ėr-pek″ėr), n. A woodpecker; especially, the green woodpecker, Gecinus viridis. Also called nickle. [Prov. Eng.]

nicker-tree (nik'ėr-trē), n. The name of two climbing shrubs, Guilandina Crista and G. major, found in the tropics of both hemispheres. Their seeds, called nicker-nuts, bonduc-seeds, or Molucca beans, are carried by ocean currents to remote parts. In India these, as also the root, are used as a tonic and febrifuge. See bonduc-seeds. Also written nickar-tree.

nicking-file (nik'ing-fīl), n. A thin file for making the nicks in screw-heads. E. H. Knight.

nicking-saw (nik'ing-sâ), n. A small circular saw for making the nicks in screw-heads, etc.

nickle (nik'l), n. [Var. of nicker[2].] Same as nicker-pecker.

nicknack (nik'nak), n. 1. See knickknack.

The furniture, the draperies, and the hundred and one nicknacks lying around on tables and étagères showed the touch of a tasteful woman's hand.
T. B. Aldrich, Ponkapog to Pesth, p. 64.

2†. A repast to which all present contributed.

James. I am afraid I can't come to cards; but shall be sure to attend the repast. A nick-nack, I suppose?
Cons. Yes, yes; we all contribute, as usual.
Foote, The Nabob, i.

nicknackery, n. See knickknackery.

nicknacket (nik'nak-et), n. [< nicknack + -et.] A little knickknack.

This comes of carrying popish nicknackets about you.
Scott, Abbot, xix.

nickname (nik'nām), n. [< ME. nekename, prop. ekename (an ekename being misdivided a nekename) (= Icel. auknefni = Sw. öknamn = Dan. ögenavn; also = LG. eket-, eker-name = D. oekername (corrupt forms), LG. also as verb, nicknamen; prob. after E.); < eke + name. In the F. nom de nique, a nickname, nique is appar. < G. nicker, nod: see nick[2].] 1. A name added to or substituted for the proper name of a person, place, etc., especially in ridicule or reproach; an opprobrious or contemptuous appellation.

Christian. Is not your name Mr. By-ends, of Fair Speech?
By-ends. This is not my name, but indeed it is a nickname that is given me by some that cannot abide me; and I must be content to bear it as a reproach.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, i.

2. A familiar or diminutive name.

From nicknames or nursenames came these (. . . it is but my conjecture) [Bill and Will for William, Clem for Clement, etc.].
Camden, Remains, Surnames.

nicotianin (ni-kō'shi-an-in), n. [< nicotian + -in[2].] A concrete oil extracted from the leaves of tobacco. It has the smell of tobacco-smoke, and affords nicotine.

nicotina (nik-ō-tī'nä), n. [NL.] Same as nicotine.

nicotine (nik'ō-tin), n. [= F. nicotine = Sp. nicotina, < NL. nicotina, tobacco, < Nicot (see nicotian) + -ina[1].] A volatile alkaloid base ($C_{10}H_{14}N_2$) obtained from tobacco. It forms a colorless clear oily liquid, which has a weak odor of tobacco, except when ammonia is present, in which case the smell is powerful. It is highly poisonous, and combines with acids, forming acrid and pungent salts.

nicotined (nik'ō-tind), a. [< nicotine + -ed[2].] Saturated or poisoned with nicotine.

nicotinism (nik'ō-tin-izm), n. [< nicotine + -ism.] The various morbid effects of the excessive use of tobacco.

nicotinize (nik'ō-tin-īz), v. t.; pret. and pp. nicotinized, ppr. nicotinizing. [< nicotine + -ize.] To impregnate with nicotine.

nicotylia† (nik-ō-til'i-ä), n. [< nicot(ian) + -yl + -ia.] Same as nicotine.

nictate (nik'tāt), v. i.; pret. and pp. nictated, ppr. nictating. [< L. nictatus, pp. of nictare, wink: see nick[2].] To wink; nictitate.

Neither is it to be esteemed any defect or imperfection in the eyes of man that they want the seventh muscle, or the nictating membrane, which the eyes of many other animals are furnished withal.
Ray, Works of Creation, ii.

nictation (nik-tā'shon), n. [< L. nictatio(n-), a winking, < nictare, wink: see nictate.] Same as nictitation.

Not only our nictations for the most part when we are awake, but also our nocturnal volutations in sleep, are performed with very little or no consciousness.
Cudworth, Intellectual System, p. 161.

nictitans (nik'ti-tanz), n.; pl. nictitantes (nik-ti-tan'tēz). [NL., sc. membrana: see nictitant.] The winker; the third eyelid or nictitating membrane of many animals: more fully called membrana nictitans.

nictitant (nik'ti-tant), a. [< L. nictitan(t-)s, ppr. of nictitare, wink: see nictitate.] In entom., having the central spot or pupil lunate instead of round: said of an ocellated spot.

nictitate (nik'ti-tāt), v. i.; pret. and pp. nictitated, ppr. nictitating. [< L. nictitatus, pp. of nictitare, freq. of nictare, wink: see nictate.] To wink.—Nictitating membrane. See membrane.—Nictitating spasm, in pathol., a variety of histrionic spasm consisting in persistent winking or clonic spasm of the orbicularis palpebrarum.

nictitation (nik-ti-tā'shon), n. [< nictitate + -ion.] The act of winking. Also nictation.

The eye is sensitive even to the near approach of mischief, and resents a hostile demonstration, the quickness of nictitation exceeding even that of vision itself.
Bibliotheca Sacra, XLV. 12.

nidamental (nid-ą-men'tal), a. [< nidamentum + -al.] Protective of eggs, embryos, or young; covering or containing such objects; secreting an egg-case or capsule: thus, a bird's nest is nidamental with respect to the eggs and young.—Nidamental capsule. See capsule.—Nidamental glands. See gland.—Nidamental ribbon, the string of eggs of some mollusks, covered and connected by the secretion of the nidamental gland.

Nidamental Capsule of the Common Whelk (Buccinum undatum) on an oyster-shell. a, b, young whelks.

nidamentum (nid-ą-men'tum), n.; pl. nidamenta (-tä). [L., the materials for a nest, a nest, < nidus, a nest: see nidc.] An egg-case; a protective case or covering of ova.

The eggs . . . are usually deposited in aggregate masses, each enclosed in a common protective envelope or nidamentum.
W. B. Carpenter, Micros., § 581.

nidary† (nid'ą-ri), n. [< L. nidus, a nest, + -ary.] A place for building nests.

In this rupellary nidary does the female lay eggs and breed.
Evelyn.

nidation (ni-dā'shon), n. [< L. nidus, a nest (see nide, nidus), + -ation.] The development of the endometrial epithelium in the intermenstrual periods.

nidder (nid'ėr), v. t. [A dial. form of nether[1], v.] 1. To keep down or under.

Sair are we nidder'd. Ross, Helenore, p. 51. (Jamieson.)

2. To press hard upon; straighten: applied to bounds. Jamieson.—3. To pinch or starve with cold or hunger; hence, to stunt in growth. Jamieson.—4. To harass; plague; annoy.

They niddart ither wi' lang braid swords,
Till they were bleedy men.
Rose the Red and White Lillie (Child's Ballads, V. 403).

[Scotch in all uses.]

niddicock† (nid'i-kok), n. [< niddy + cock[1], used as a dim. suffix.] A foolish person; a noodle.

They were neuer such fond niddicockes as to offer anie man a rod to beat their own tailes.
Holinshed, Chronicles of Ireland, p. 94.

Oh Chrysostome, thou . . . deservest to be stak'd, as well as buried in the open fields, for being such a goose, widgeon, and niddecock, to dye for love.

night-feeder (nīt'fē″dėr), n. An animal that feeds mostly or entirely by night: specifically applied to the bird Nyctiornis amictus. Most fishes are said to be night-feeders, yet all of them feed more or less in the daytime.

night-fire (nīt'fīr), n. 1. Fire burning in the night.—2. Ignis fatuus; will-o'-the-wisp.

Foolish night-fires, women's and children's wishes,
Chases in arras, gilded emptinesse; . . .
These are the pleasures here.
Herbert, Dotage. (Latham.)

night-fish (nīt'fish), n. A variety of the cod with a dark back, taken on some of the Newfoundland banks, as well as on the east coast of Prince Edward's Island. They are of large size, and will, it is said, take the hook at night only.

night-fishery (nīt'fish″ėr-i), n. A mode of fishing by night, or a place where fishing is done by night. Night-fishery is practised to some extent by anglers. The best months for it are the latter part of June, and July and August, and the best nights are those that follow a hot day.

night-flier (nīt'flī″ėr), n. A bird that flies in the night.

night-flower (nīt'flou″ėr), n. The night-jasmine, Nyctanthes Arbor-tristis.

night-fly (nīt'flī), n. An insect that flies in the night.

Rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs,
Upon uneasy pallets stretching thee,
And hush'd with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber,
Than in the perfumed chambers of the great.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iii. 1. 11.

night-foe (nīt'fō), n. One who attacks by night.

Wherefore else guard we his royal tent,
But to defend his person from night-foes?
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., iv. 3. 22.

night-fossicker (nīt'fos″i-kėr), n. In gold-digging, one who robs a digging by night.

night-fossicking (nīt'fos″i-king), n. In gold-digging, the practice of robbing diggings by night. See fossick, v., 2.

night-foundered (nīt'foun″dėrd), a. Lost or distressed in the night.

Either some one like us night-founder'd here,
Or else some neighbour woodman, or, at worst,
Some roving robber calling to his fellows.
Milton, Comus, l. 483.

nightfowl†, nightfowl (nīt'foul), n. [ME. nihtfuel (= Icel. nāttfugl); < night + fowl.] A night-bird.

Upon the middle of the night
Waking, she heard the night-fowl crow:
The cock sung out an hour ere light.
Tennyson, Mariana.

nightgalet, n. An obsolete form of nightingale[1].

night-glass (nīt'glàs), n. A telescope (usually binocular) constructed so as to concentrate as much light as possible, and thus adapted for seeing objects at night.

nightgown (nīt'goun), n. [< night + gown.] 1†. A loose gown worn in one's chamber, at night or in the daytime; a dressing-gown; a robe de chambre; a negligée gown or housedress, for either men or women.

Get on your nightgown, lest occasion call us,
And show us to be watchers.
Shak., Macbeth, ii. 2. 70.

The Lady, tho' willing to appear undrest, had put on her best Looks, and painted herself for our Reception. Her Hair appeared in a very nice Disorder, as the Night Gown which was thrown upon her Shoulders was ruffled with great Care. Addison, Spectator, No. 45.

Others come in their night-gowns to saunter away their time. Steele, Spectator, No. 49.

2. A night-dress for women, commonly high in the neck, with sleeves, and covering the whole person.—3. A night-dress for men. [Colloq. or humorous.]

night-hag (nīt'hag), n. A witch supposed to wander or fly abroad in the night.

Nor uglier follow the night-hag, when, call'd
In secret, riding through the air she comes.
Milton, P. L., ii. 662.

★night-hawk (nīt'hâk), n. 1. A caprimulgine bird of the genus Chordeiles. The common nighthawk of the United States is C. popetue or C. virginianus, also called bullbat, and in the West Indies pisk and piramidig. It flies chiefly toward evening and in cloudy weather, and belongs to the same family (Caprimulgidæ) as the whippoorwill and chuck-will's-widow, though it is of a different genus. It is 9 or 10 inches long, 23 in extent of wings, of a slim form, with very small bill but widely cleft and capacious mouth, long, sharp, thin-bladed wings, forked tail, and small weak feet; the plumage is intimately blended with black, brown, gray, and tawny shades, something like dark-veined marble, and the male has a pure white V-shaped mark on the throat, and large white blotches on the wings and tail, which are tawny in the female. It abounds in temperate North America, and is a bird of powerful flight, often seen careering in pursuit of insects, twisting and doubling with great ease and grace, and frequently falling through the air with a hoarse cry. It lays two eggs of elliptical form and dark variegated color, placing them on the ground with little or no nest. The bird is migratory, and retires beyond the United States in the autumn. There are several other species of the same genus, as C. henryi and C. texensis.

2. The night-jar or goatsucker, Caprimulgus europæus. [Eng.]—3. One of certain petrels of the genus Œstrelata: as, the white night-hawk or mutton-bird, Œ. lessoni.

night-heron (nīt′her″ǫn), n. A heron of crepuscular or somewhat nocturnal habits. There are several species, of most parts of the world, belonging to the family Ardeidæ, and genera Nyctiardea or Nycticorax and Nycticherodius. The common European bird to which the name night-heron (and also night-raven) was originally applied is Ardea nycticorax of the older writers, now Nyctiardea nycticorax, Nycticorax nycticorax, etc.

Night-heron (Nycticorax nycticorax).

The bird is 2 feet long and 44 inches in extent of wings; the crown and middle of the back are glossy blackish-green, and most other parts are bluish-gray with a lilac or lavender tinge, the forehead, throat-line, and under parts being whitish. Two or three very long white filamentous feathers spring from the back of the head; the eyes are red, the bill is black, and the lores and legs are greenish. The sexes are alike. The young are very different, being some shade of dingy brown or chocolate-brown, boldly spotted with white. Night-herons nest in heronries, sometimes of vast extent; they build a bulky frail nest of twigs, and lay 3 or 4 eggs of a pale-green color, 2 inches long by 1½ in breadth. The common night-heron of the United States is Nycticorax nycticorax nævius; it is popularly called qua-bird and squawk, from its cry. The night-herons of the genus Nycterodius are slightly different. N. violaceus is the yellow-crowned night-heron, common in the southern United States.

night-house (nīt′hous), n. A tavern or public-house permitted to be open during the night. [Eng.]

The coach-stands in the larger thoroughfares are deserted; the night-houses are closed.
Dickens, Sketches, Scenes, i.

★nightingale[1] (nī′tin-gāl), n. [< ME. nightingale, nigtingale (with unorig. medial n), nightegale, nyghtgale, < AS. nihtegale, nihtegala, nehtegale (in old glosses also naectegale, nectægalae, nictigalae, a nightingale, also rarely a night-raven) (= OS. nahtigala = MD. nachtegale, D. nachtegaal = OHG. nahtagala, nahtigala, MHG. nahtegale, nahtegal, G. nachtigall; cf. mod. Icel. nætrgali = Sw. näktergal = Dan. nattergal, after G.), a nightingale, < niht, gen. nihte, night, + gale*, singer, < galan, sing: see gale[1].] 1. A small sylviine bird of Europe, Asia, and Africa, belonging to the order Passeres, the suborder Oscines, the family Sylviidæ, and the genus Daulias. There are two kinds, formerly regarded as specifically identical, and variously called by ornithologists Motacilla or Sylvia or Philomela or Luscinia luscinia or philomela, and by other New Latin names. The two kinds are most commonly distinguished as Daulias luscinia or D. vera, the true nightingale, and D. philomela. The former is the one which is common in Great Britain, and to which the name nightingale specially pertains. The poets call both birds philomel or Philomela. The famous song of the nightingale, heard chiefly at night, is the love-song of the male, which ceases as soon as his propensities are gratified, as is usual with birds. The nightingale is migratory, like nearly all insectivorous birds of the northern hemisphere, extending its migrations far to the north of Europe in the spring. In England, where it appears about the middle of April and passes the summer, it is quite locally distributed, being very common in some places, and rare in or absent from others apparently equally suited to its habits. It haunts woods, copses, and hedgerows, especially where the soil is rich and moist, and is so secretive as to be oftener heard than seen. The favorite food of the nightingale is the larvæ of insects, especially the hymenopters, as wasps and ants. The nest is placed on the ground or near it; the eggs are 4 or 5 in number, pale olive-brown, about ¾ inch long by a little over ½ inch broad. The length of the bird is 6¾ inches; its extent of wings is 10½ inches. The sexes are alike reddish-brown above, below pale grayish-brown, whitening on the throat and belly, the tail being brownish-red. This nightingale is sometimes specified as the brake-nightingale, when the other species (D. philomela) is called thrush-nightingale.

This sotted preest, who was gladder than he?
Was never brid gladder agayn the day,
Ne nyghtingale in the sesoun of May,
Nas never noon that luste bet to singe.
Chaucer, Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 332.

The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren.
Shak., M. of V., v. 1. 104.

2. Some bird which sings sweetly and hence is likened to or mistaken for a nightingale. Thus, the bird called Virginia nightingale is a finch, the cardinal grosbeak, Cardinalis virginianus; that called Indian nightingale is a kind of thrush, Kittacincla macrura. Persian nightingales are various bulbuls of the family Pycnonotidæ. (See Pycnonotus.) The mock nightingale is the black-capped warbler, Sylvia atricapilla.—Irish nightingale, the sedge-warbler, Acrocephalus phragmitis.—Scotch nightingale, the Irish nightingale. [Local, Eng.]

nightingale[2] (nī′tin-gāl), n. [So called after Florence Nightingale, conspicuous as a hospital nurse in the Crimean war and later. The surname Nightingale is derived from the name of the bird: see nightingale[1].] A sort of flannel scarf, with sleeves, designed to be worn by persons confined to bed. It was largely used by the sick and wounded in the Franco-German war, 1870–1. Imp. Dict.

nightingalize (nī′tin-gāl-īz), v. i.; pret. and pp. nightingalized, ppr. nightingalizing. [< nightingale[1] + -ize.] To sing like a nightingale. [Rare.]

He sings like a lark when at morn he arises,
And when evening comes he nightingalizes.
Southey, Nondescripts, viii. (Davies.)

nightish (nī′tish), a. [< night + -ish[1].] Pertaining to night, or attached to the night.

But if thou chaunce to fall to check, and force on erie fowle, Thou shalt be worse detested then than is the nightish owle. Turberville, The Lover. (Richardson.)

night-jar (nīt′jär), n. A bird, Caprimulgus europæus, of the family Caprimulgidæ. The name Night-jar (Caprimulgus europæus).

is sometimes extended to all the goatsuckers or birds of the same family. Also called night-churr, night-crow, churn-owl, fern-owl, etc.

And with a sudden rush from behind the citron's shade the night-jar tumbled out upon the evening air.
P. Robinson, Under the Sun, p. 66.

night-key (nīt′kē), n. A key for opening a door that is fitted with a night-latch.

night-lamp (nīt′lamp), n. A lamp specially adapted to be kept burning during the night in a bedroom.

Thou art staring at the wall,
Where the dying night-lamp flickers, and the shadows rise and fall. Tennyson, Locksley Hall.

night-latch (nīt′lach), n. A form of door-lock with a spring-latch which may be opened by a knob or handle from the inside, but only by a key from the outside.

nightless (nīt′les), a. [< night + -less.] Having no night: as, the nightless period in the arctic regions.

night-light (nīt′līt), n. 1. An artificial light intended to be kept burning all night.

T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Oxford, i. 9.

night-liner (nīt′lī″nėr), n. 1. One of a line or class of public vehicles which stand all night in the streets to pick up passengers.—2. The driver of such a conveyance. [Colloq. in both senses.]

night-long (nīt′lông), a. [< ME. nightlong*, < AS. nihtlang, nihtlong, < niht, night, + lang, long. Cf. nightlong, adv.] Lasting a night.

Sleep, kinsman thou to death and trance
And madness, thou hast forged at last
A night long Present of the Past
In which we went thro' summer France.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, lxxi.

nightlong† (nīt′lông), adv. [< ME. nihtlonge, nihtlonges, < AS. nihtlanges (= MHG. nahtlanc = Icel. nättlengis, cf. neut. nättlangt), with gen. suffix, < nihtlang, adj., night-long: see night-long, a.] Through the night.

nightly (nīt′li), a. [< ME. nightly, nihtlic*, < AS. nihtlīc (= D. nachtelijk = MLG. nachtlik = OHG. nahtlīh, MHG. nachtlich, G. nächtlich = Icel. nætrligr = Sw. nattlig = Dan. natlig), < niht, night: see night and -ly[1].] 1. Happening or appearing in the night: as, nightly dews.

A fortnight hold we this solemnity,
In nightly revels and new jollity.
Shak., M. N. D., v. 1. 376.

A cobweb spread above a blossom is sufficient to protect it from nightly chill. Tyndall, Radiation, § 16.

2. Taking place or performed every night.

Hell heard her curses from the realms profound,
And the red fiends that walk the nightly round.
Pope, Iliad, ix. 686.

3. Used in the night.

For with the nightly linen that she wears
He pens her piteous clamours in her head.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 680.

=Syn. Nightly, Nocturnal. The former is the more familiar. Nightly tends to limitation to that which occurs every night (see definition 2), while nocturnal tends to cover both that which belongs to the night, as nocturnal insects, flowers, vision, and that which exists or occurs, however accidentally, in the night, as a nocturnal ramble.

nightly (nīt′li), adv. [< nightly, a.] 1†. By night.

Chain me with roaring bears,
Or shut me nightly in a charnel-house.
Shak., R. and J., iv. 1. 81.

2. Every night.

And nightly to the list'ning earth
Repeats the story of her birth.
Addison, Paraphrase of Ps. xix.

nigrosine (nig′rō-sin), n. [< L. niger (nigr-), ★black, + -ose + *-ine*2.] A coal-tar color used in dyeing, prepared from the hydrochlorid of violaniline. This product is variously modified in the process of manufacture: several shades, varying from blue through bluish-gray to gray-violet to black (the last being called nigrosine), are produced. Other names for the various other shades are violaniline, Elberfeld blue, bengaline, aniline gray, Coupier's blue, etc.

nihil (nī′hil), n. [< L. nihil, contr. nīl, also nihilum, contr. nīlum, nothing, < ne, not, + hilum, a little thing, a trifle. Cf. *nichil, nil*2.] Nothing. —Clerk of the nihils. See clerk.—Nihil (or nil) ad rem, nothing to the point or purpose.—Nihil album†, the flowers or white oxid of zinc.—Nihil capiat per breve (that he take nothing by his writ), a common-law judgment against a plaintiff.—Nihil (or nil) debet (he owes nothing), a plea denying a debt.—Nihil (or nil) dicit (he says nothing), a common-law judgment when defendant makes no answer.—Nihil habuit in tenementis (he had nothing in the tenement or holding), a plea in an action of debt brought by a lessor against a lessee for years, or at will without deed.

nihilianism (nī-hil′yan-izm), n. [< nihilian* (< L. nihil, nothing, + -ian) + -ism.] A name given by the opponents of Peter Lombard to his view that the divine nature did not undergo any change in the incarnation, and that therefore Christ did not become human.

nihilism (nī′hil-izm), n. [= F. nihilisme = Sp. nihilismo; as L. nihil, nothing, + -ism.] 1. In metaph., the doctrine that nothing can really be known, because nothing exists; the denial of all real existence, and consequently of all knowledge of existences or real things.

Nihilism is scepticism carried to the denial of all existence. Fleming, Vocab. Philos.

2. In theol., same as nihilianism.—3. Total disbelief in religion, morality, law, and order.

Nihilism arrives sooner or later. God is nothing; man is nothing; life is nothing; death is nothing; eternity is nothing. J. F. Clarke, Ten Great Religions, viii. 4.

4. (a) Originally, a social (not a political) movement in Russia, in opposition to the customary forms of matrimony, the parental authority, and the tyranny of custom. In this sense the word was introduced by Turgeneff in 1862. See nihilist, 3. (b) Later, a more or less organized secret effort on the part of a large body of malcontents to overturn the established order of things, both social and political. Nihilism comprises several Russian parties, differing in the means of action employed and in the immediate results aimed at, some leaning more toward political radicalism and violence, and others toward economic reorganization and socialism. The movement originated about 1840, and is due largely to the influence of the universities. About 1855–62 it became increasingly democratic, socialistic, and revolutionary under the leadership of Herzen and the magazine "Contemporary." About 1870 revolutionary ideas became the subject of a propaganda among workmen, peasants, and students. The adherents of this movement formed a "people's party" ("Land and Freedom"), purposing the complete overthrow of the existing order of things and the establishment of a socialistic and democratic order in its stead. Under the influence of Bakunin (died 1876) and the persecution of peaceful propagandists by the government, the people's party divided into two factions, the "democratization of land" and the "will of the people," the latter being the stronger. This party was by government persecutions driven to a political contest, and the idea of demoralizing the forces of the government by terror originated and became popular: the adherents of this system called themselves "terrorists." After several unsuccessful attempts they effected the death of the Czar Alexander II. in 1881.

nihilist (nī′hil-ist), n. [= F. nihiliste = Sp. nihilista = Russ. niiilistŭ; as L. nihil, nothing, + -ist.] 1. One who believes in nothing; one who advocates the metaphysical doctrine of nihilism.

For thirty-five years of my life I was, in the proper acceptation of the word, a nihilist—not a revolutionary socialist, but a man who believed in nothing.
Tolstoi, My Religion (trans.), Int.

2. One who rejects all the positive beliefs upon which existing society and governments are founded; one who demands the abolition of the existing social and political order of things.

"A nihilist," said Nicholas Petrovitch, . . . "signifies a man who . . . recognizes nothing?" "Or rather who respects nothing," said Paul Petrovitch. . . . "A man who looks at everything from a critical point of view," said Arcadi. "Does not that come to the same thing?" asked his uncle. "No, not at all; a nihilist is a man who bows before no authority, who accepts no principle without examination, no matter what credit the principle has."
Turgenieff, Fathers and Sons (tr. by Schuyler), v.

Specifically—3. An adherent of nihilism; a member of a Russian secret society which aims at the overthrow of the existing order of things, social, political, and religious; a Russian anarchist or revolutionary reformer. See nihilism, 4.

The word Nihilist was introduced in Russia by Turgenef, who used it in his novel "Fathers and Children" to describe a certain type of character . . . which he contrasted sharply and effectively with the prevailing types in the generation which was passing from the stage. The word . . . was soon caught up by the conservatives and by the Government, and was applied indiscriminately by them, as an opprobrious and discrediting nickname, to all persons who were not satisfied with the existing order of things, and who sought, by any active method whatever, to bring about changes in Russian social and political organization. The Century, XXXV. 51.

nihilistic (nī-hi-lis′tik), a. [< nihilist + -ic.] Relating to the doctrine of social or political nihilism; characterized by nihilism: as, nihilistic views.

Cosmopolitan and nihilistic socialism.
Orpen, tr. of Laveleye's Socialism, p. 244.

nihility (nī-hil′i-ti), n. [= F. nihilité (16th century); < L. nihil, nothing, + -ity. Cf. ML. nihileitas.] The state of being nothing, or of no account or importance; nothingness.

There are many things on the Earth which would be nihility to the inhabitants of Venus.
Poe, Prose Tales, I. 119.

Nike (nī′kē), n. [Gr. Νίκη, personification of νίκη, victory.] In Gr. myth., the goddess of victory, called by the Romans Victoria. She was regularly represented in ancient art as a winged maiden, usually as just alighting from flight, her most frequent attributes being a palm-branch in one hand and a garland in the other, or a fillet outstretched in both hands; sometimes she holds a herald's staff.

Nike Adorning a Trophy.—Greek intaglio of the 4th century B. C., in British Museum. (From "Jahrbuch des Instituts," 1888.)

nil1, v. and n. See *nill*1.

nil2 (nil), n. [L., contracted form of nihil, ★nothing: see nihil.] Nothing.—Nil method. Same as null method (which see, under method).

nil desperandum (nil des-pe-ran′dum). [L.: nil, contr. of nihil, nothing (see nihil); desperandum, gerundive of desperare, despair: see despair.] Nothing is to be despaired of—that is, never despair, or never give up.

nilfaciend (nil′fā-shiend), n. [< L. nil, nothing, + faciendus, gerundive of facere, make: see fact.] In math., a faciend giving a product zero.

nilfacient (nil′fā-shient), n. [< L. nil, nothing (see nil), + facien(t-)s, ppr. of facere, make: see facient, 2.] In math., a facient giving a product zero.

nilfactor (nil′fak″tor), n. [< L. nil, nothing, + factor, a doer, maker: see factor, 5.] In math., a factor giving a product zero.

nilgau, nilghau (nil′gâ), n. [Also nylghau, nylghai, neelghau, neelgye, etc., < Pers. nīlgāu, Hind. nīlgau, nīlgāī, lilgāī, lit. 'blue ox,' < nīl, blue, + gau, ox, cow: see *cow*1.] A large Indian antelope, Portax pictus, related to the addax and the oryx, of a bluish-gray color, with short little-curved horns, a blackish mane, and a bunch of hair on the throat.

Nilio (nil'i-ō), n. [NL.] The typical genus of Nilionidæ, founded by Latreille in 1802. These insects resemble Coccinella; they are of mediocre size and reddish yellow color, sometimes blackish. About 20 species are known, all of which are from Mexico and South America. Also Nilion.

Nilionidæ (nil-i-on'i-dē), n. pl. [< Nilio(n-) + -idæ.] A family of tracheliate heteromerous Coleoptera, typified by the genus Nilio, erected by Lacordaire in 1859. It is a family of rather uncertain relationships, but is customarily placed after the Tenebrionidæ. It consists of three genera, two of which are confined to Mexico and South America, and the third to Java. The beetles are of medium or small size, and are found motionless or slowly walking on the trunks of trees, simulating death when touched, but not falling.

nill[1] (nil), v. [Also nil; < ME. nillen, nellen, < AS. nillan, nellan, contr. of ne willan, will not: see ne and will; cf. willy-nilly.] I.† trans. Will not; wish not; refuse; reject.

nill[3] (nil), n. A dialectal form of nail. Halliwell.

nill[4]† (nil), n. [For ML. nil (nihil), nothing, rendering G. nichts, nothing, but in this connection a reduced form of L. onychitis (Pliny), Gr. ὀνυχῖτις (Dioscorides). N. E. D.] White oxid of zinc: formerly called nil album.

nilly-willy (nil'i-wil'i), adv. See willy-nilly.

Nilometer (nī-lom'e-tėr), n. [= F. nilomètre = Sp. Pg. It. nilometro, < Gr. Νειλομέτριον, a nilometer, < Νεῖλος (L. Nilus), the river Nile, + μέτρον, measure: see meter[1].] 1. A gage or measure of depth or height of the flow of the river Nile.

A flood-gage of this nature is mentioned by Herodotus; and ancient records of inundations have reference to the old Nilometer on the western bank at Memphis. Modern records are officially tabulated from the Nilometer on the island of Er-Rodah, near Cairo, which consists of a pit or well in communication with the Nile in the middle of which stands a marble column inscribed with height-indications in cubits. The rise of the water at Cairo during a favorable inundation is about 25 feet.

2. [l. c.] Hence, any instrument for making a continuous and automatic register of river-heights.

Niloscope (nī'lō-skōp), n. [< Gr. Νειλοσκοπεῖον, a Niloscope, < Νεῖλος, the river Nile, + σκοπεῖν, view.] Same as Nilometer.

nimbus (nim'bus), n. [< L. nimbus, a rain-cloud, a rain-storm, a cloud, a bright cloud feigned to surround the gods when they appeared on the earth, hence in later use the halo of saints; cf. L. nubes, a cloud, nebula, a mist, Gr. νέφος, νεφέλη, a cloud, a mist: see nebula, nebule. Cf. nimb.] 1. A cloud or system of clouds from which rain is falling; a rain-cloud. See cloud[1] (g).—2. In art and Christian archæol., a halo or disk of light surrounding the head in representations of divine or sacred personages; also, a disk or circle sometimes depicted in early times round the heads of emperors and other great men. The nimbus of God the Father is represented as of triangular form, with rays diverging from it on all sides, or in the form of two superposed triangles, or in the same form (inscribed with the cross) as that of Christ. The nimbus of Christ contains a cross more or less enriched: that of the Virgin Mary is a plain circle, or occasionally a circlet of small stars, and that of angels and saints is often a circle of small rays. When the nimbus is depicted of a square form, it is supposed to Ten is nyne to many, be sure,

Where men be fierce and fell.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 92.

Nine days' wonder. See wonder.—Nine men's morris. See *morris*1.—The nine worthies, famous personages, often referred to by old writers and classed together, like the seven wonders of the world, etc. They have been reckoned up in the following manner: three Gentiles (Hector, Alexander, Julius Cæsar), three Jews (Joshua, David, Judas Maccabæus), and three Christians (King Arthur, Charlemagne, Godfrey of Bouillon). They were often introduced in comparisons as to bravery.

Ay, there were some present that were the nine worthies to him. B. Jonson.

To look nine ways, to squint very much.

Squyntyied he was, and looked nyne wayes.
Udall, tr. of Apophthegms of Erasmus, p. 203, note.

Ye sacred nine, celestial Muses! tell,
Who fac'd him first, and by his prowess fell?
Pope, Iliad, xi. 281.

To the nines, to perfection; fully; elaborately: generally applied to dress, and sometimes implying excess in dressing: as, she was dressed up to the nines. [Colloq.] [The phrase is perhaps derived from an old or dialectal form of to then eyne, i. e. to the eyes. The form to the nine in the second quotation is probably sophisticated.]

Thou paints auld nature to the nines
In thy sweet Caledonian lines.
Burns, Pastoral Poetry.

He then . . . put his hand in his pockets, and produced four beautiful sets of handcuffs, bran new—polished to the nine.
C. Reade, Never too Late to Mend, lxv. (Davies.)

ninebark (nīn′bärk), n. An American shrub, Icotorus opulifolius, sometimes planted. It is so named on account of the numerous layers of the loose bark. See cut under Neillia.

ninefold (nīn′fōld), a. [< ME. nizenfold*, < AS. nigonfeald, < nigon, nine, + -feald, = E. -fold: see nine and -fold.] Nine times repeated.

This huge convex of fire,
Outrageous to devour, immures us round Ninefold. Milton, P. L., ii. 436.

[In the following nonsense-passage ninefold seems to be used elliptically for ninefold offspring or ninefold company:

He met the night-mare, and her nine-fold;
Bid her alight,
And her troth plight,
And, aroint thee, witch, aroint thee!
Shak., Lear, iii. 4. 126.]

nine-holes (nīn′hōlz), n. 1. A game in which nine holes are made in a board or the ground, at which the players roll small balls.

Th' unhappy wags, which let their cattle stray,
At Nine-holes on the heath while they together play.
Drayton, Polyolbion, xiv. 22.

Some say the game of nine-holes was called "Bubble the Justice," on the supposition that it could not be set aside by the justices. Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 368.

2. Same as nine-eyes.

nine-killer (nīn′kil″ėr), n. [< nine + killer; also called nine-murder (see nine-murder), and in G. neuntödter, 'nine-killer,' from the common belief that these shrikes were wont to kill just nine birds a day.] A shrike or butcher-bird. The term was originally applied to certain European species, as Lanius excubitor and Lanius (or Enneoctonus) collurio, and subsequently extended to others, as L. borealis of the United States.

nine-lived (nīn′līvd), a. Having nine lives, as the cat is humorously said to have; hence, not easy to kill; escaping great perils or surviving grave wounds or hurts: as, a reckless nine-lived fellow.

nine-murder (nīn′mėr″dėr), n. [Also ninmurder (= LG. negenmörder = G. neunmörder, formerly nünmörder (Gesner)); < nine + murder (for murderer); equiv. to nine-killer, q. v.] Same as nine-killer.

Tennyson, Princess, iv.

niobic (nī-ō'bik), a. [< niob(ium) + -ic.] Of or pertaining to niobium.—Niobic acid, an acid formed by the interaction of niobium pentachlorid and water.

Niobid (nī'ō-bid), n. [< Gr. Νιοβίδης, a son of Niobe, pl. Νιοβίδα, the children of Niobe, < Νιόβη, Niobe: see Niobe and *-id*².] One of the children of Niobe.

Of the Niobids at Florence, besides the mother with the youngest daughter, ten figures may be held as genuine.
C. O. Müller, Manual of Archæol. (trans.), § 126.

Niobite¹ (nī'ō-bīt), n. [< LGr Νιοβῖται, pl., < Νιόβης, Niobes (see def.).] One of a branch of Monophysites, founded by Stephanus Niobes in the sixth century, who opposed the views of the Severians (see Severian). Niobes taught that, according to strict Monophysite doctrine, the qualities of Christ's human nature were lost by its absorption into his divine nature. The Niobites gradually modified their views and returned to the orthodox church.

niobite² (nī'ō-bīt), n. [< niob(ium) + *-ite*².] Same as columbite.

niobium (nī-ō'bi-um), n. [NL., so called in allusion to tantalum, which it closely resembles, and with which it occurs associated in various rare minerals, especially in the so-called columbite (the name tantalum being derived from that of Tantalus, the father of Niobe); < Niobe + -ium.] Chemical symbol, Nb; atomic weight, 93.5. A metal of steel-gray color and brilliant luster. It was first discovered by Hatchett, in 1801, in a mineral obtained at Haddam, Connecticut. This metal, however, which Hatchett called columbium, was reexamined by Wollaston and pronounced identical with tantalum. Forty years later it was again discovered by H. Rose, who gave it the name of niobium, which is now generally adopted. Rose for some time believed that with the niobium another new metal (pelopium) was associated; but later he recognized the fact that the two were one and the same thing. Niobium has a specific gravity of 7.06 at 60° F. When heated in the air it takes fire at a low temperature and burns with a vivid light. The chemical relations of the metal are akin to those of bismuth and antimony. See tantalite, columbite, and yttro-tantalite.

niopo-snuff (ni-ō'pō-snuf), n. See niopo-tree.

niopo-tree (ni-ō'pō-trē), n. [< Venezuelan niopo + E. tree.] A leguminous tree, Stachychrysum peregrinum, of tropical America. An intoxicating snuff is made by roasting and powdering the seeds and adding lime.

niota-bark (ni-ō'tạ-bärk), n. Same as niepa-bark.

The nirt in the nek he naked hem schewed.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 2498.

nirvana (nir-vä'nä), n. [Skt., blowing out (as of a light), extinction, < nis, out, + vāna, blowing, < √ vā, blow, with abstr. noun-suffix -ana.] In Buddhism, the condition of a Buddha; the state to which the Buddhist saint is to aspire as the highest aim and highest good. Originally, doubtless, this was extinction of existence, Buddha's attempt being to show the way of escape from the miseries inseparably attached to life, and especially to life everlastingly renewed by transmigration, as held in India. But in later times this negation has naturally taken on other forms, and is explained as extinction of desire, passion, unrest, etc.

What then is Nirvana, which means simply going out, extinction; it being quite clear, from what has gone before, that this cannot be the extinction of a soul? It is the extinction of that sinful, grasping condition of mind and heart which would otherwise, according to the great mystery of Karma, be the cause of renewed individual existence. That extinction is to be brought about by and runs parallel with, the growth of the opposite condition of mind and heart; and it is complete when that opposite condition of mind and heart is reached. Nirvana is therefore the same thing as a sinless, calm state of mind: and, if translated at all, may best, perhaps, be rendered holiness—holiness, that is, in the Buddhist sense, perfect peace, goodness, and wisdom. Rhys Davids.

Buddhism does not acknowledge the existence of a soul as a thing distinct from the parts and powers of man which are dissolved at death, and the Nirvana of Buddhism is simply Extinction. Encyc. Brit., IV. 434.

nis[1]†. A contraction of ne is, is not.

nis[2] (nis), n. [< Dan. nisse, a hobgoblin, a brownie: see nix[1].] Same as nix[1].

Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 121.

Nitella (nī-tel'ä), n. [NL. (C. A. Agardh, 1824), < L. nitere, shine.] A genus of cellular cryptogamous aquatic plants, of the family Characeæ and type of the tribe Nitelleæ. They are delicate plants, growing, like those of the genus Chara, in ponds and streams, and are rarely more than a few centimeters in height. About 80 species are known, of which number more than 30 are North American.

Nitelleæ (nī-tel'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Nitella + -eæ.] A tribe of cellular cryptogamous plants belonging to the family Characeæ, typified by the genus Nitella. They are characterized by having the stem and leaves always naked, the leaves in whorls of five or six, developing from one to three nodes bearing leaflets. The sporophylla arise directly from the nodes of the leaves, and are often clustered; the coronula is ten-celled, small, and colorless, and the spore-capsule without inner calcareous layer. The order contains 2 genera, Nitella with 80 species, and Tolypella with 13 species.

nitency[1] (nī'ten-si), n. [< nitent* (< L. niten(t-)s, ppr. of nitere, shine) + -cy.] Brightness; luster. [Rare.]

nitency[2] (nī'ten-si), n. [< nitent* (< L. niten(t-)s, ppr. of niti, strive) + -cy.] Endeavor; effort; tendency. [Rare.]

These zones will have a strong nitency to fly wider open.
Boyle, Works, I. 179.

★niter, nitre (nī'tėr), n. [< F. nitre = Sp. Pg. It. nitro, < NL. nitrum, niter, saltpeter, < L. nitrum, < Gr. νίτρον, in Herodotus and in Attic usé λίτρον, native soda, natron: of Eastern origin (Heb. nether), but the Ar. nitrūn, natrūn, natron, is from the Gr. νίτρον: see natron.] A salt (KNO_3), also called saltpeter, and in the nomenclature of chemistry potassium nitrate. It is formed in the soil from nitrogenous organic bodies by the action of microbes, and crystallizes upon the surface in several parts of the world, and especially in the East Indies. In some localities where the conditions are favorable it is prepared artificially from a mixture of common mold, or porous calcareous earth containing potash, with animal and vegetable remains containing nitrogen. Under proper conditions of heat and moisture the nitrogen of the decaying organic matter is oxidized to nitric acid, which combines with potash and lime, forming niter and calcium nitrate. This is afterward dissolved in water and purified. At present it is chiefly prepared from sodium nitrate and potassium chlorid by double decomposition. It is a colorless salt, with a saline taste, and crystallizes in six-sided prisms. It is used somewhat as an antiseptic and as an oxidizing agent, but its most common use in the arts is in the making of gunpowder; it also enters into the composition of fluxes, is extensively employed in metallurgy, and is used in dyeing. In medicine it is prescribed as diaphoretic and diuretic. The substance called niter by the ancients was not potassium nitrate, but either sodium carbonate, more or less mixed with salt and other impurities, or potassium carbonate, chiefly the former, since niter is usually spoken of as having been obtained from the beds of salt lakes, where the alkali must have been soda, this being a mode of occurrence peculiar to soda and not to potash. But the niter which the ancients speak of as having been obtained by leaching wood-ashes was more or less pure potassium carbonate. It was not until the early part of the eighteenth century that soda and potash began to be clearly recognized as distinct substances; and it was considerably later in the century before the chemical relations of the two alkalis were understood. See saltpeter, soda, and potash.—Cubic niter. Same as sodium nitrate.—Sweet spirit of niter. See spirit of nitrous ether, under nitrous.

niter-bush (nī'tėr-bůsh), n. Any shrub of the genus Nitraria.

niter-cake (nī'tėr-kāk), n. Crude sodium sulphate, a by-product in the manufacture of nitric acid from sodium nitrate, the main feature of which is the reaction of sulphuric acid upon crude sodium nitrate, wherein nitric acid is set free and sodium sulphate is produced.

nitery, nitry (nī'tėr-i, -tri), a. [< niter, nitre, + -y[1].] Nitrous; producing niter.

Winter my theme confines; whose nitry wind Shall crust the slabby mire. Gay, Trivia, ii. 319.

★nit-grass (nit'gràs), n. An annual grass, Gastridium australe.

nithe†, n. [ME., < AS. nīth = OS. nīth, nīdh = OFries. nīth, nīd = MD. nīd, D. nijd = MLG. nīt = OHG. nīd, MHG. nīt, G. neid = Icel. nīdh = Sw. Dan. nid = Goth. neith, hatred, envy.] Wickedness.

nithert, adv., a., and v. An obsolete form of nether[1].

nithing† (nī'ŦHing), n. and a. [Also niding; < ME. nithing, < AS. nīthing (= MHG. nīdinc, nīdunc, G. neiding = Icel. nīdhingr = Sw. Dan. niding), a wicked person, a villain, < nīth, envy, hatred: see nithe. Hence niderling, nidering.] I. n. A wicked man.

Thanne spak the gode kyng.
I-wis he has no Nithing.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), l. 196.

He is worthy to be called a niding, the pulse of whose soul beats but faintly towards heaven, . . . who will not run and reach his hand to bear up his [God's] temple.
Howell, Forraine Travell, p. 79.

II. a. Wicked; mean; sparing; parsimonious.

The King and the army publicly declared the murderer to be Nithing. E. A. Freeman, Norman Conquest, II. 67.

nithsdale (niths'dāl), n. [So called in allusion to the escape of the Earl of Nithsdale from the Tower of London about 1715 in a woman's Nithsdale.

(From "A Harlot's Progress — Morning," by William Hogarth.)

cloak and hood brought by his wife.] A hood made so that it can cover and conceal the face. Fairholt.

nitid (nit'id), a. [= Sp. nítido = Pg. It. nitido, < L. nitidus, shining, bright, < nitere, shine. Cf. neat[2] and net[2], ult. < L. nitidus.] 1. Bright; lustrous; shining. [Rare.]

We restore old pieces of dirty gold to a clean and nitid yellow. Boyle, Works, I. 685.

2. Gay; spruce; fine: applied to persons. [Rare.]—3. In bot., having a smooth, shining, polished surface, as many leaves and seeds.

nitidiflorous (nit″i-di-flō'rus), a. [< L. nitidus, shining, + flos (flor-), flower.] Having brilliant flowers; characterized by the luster or polished appearance of its flowers, as a plant.

nitidifolious (nit″i-di-fō'li-us), a. [< L. nitidus, shining, + folium, leaf: see folious.] Having shining leaves; characterized by lustrous or polished leaves.

nitidous (nit'i-dus), a. [< L. nitidus, shining, bright: see nitid.] In zoöl. and bot., having a smooth and polished surface; nitid.

Nitidula (nī-tid'ū-lä), n. [NL., < LL. nitidulus, somewhat spruce, rather trim, dim. of L. nitidus, bright, spruce, trim: see nitid.] 1. In entom., the typical genus of the family Nitidulidæ, established by Fabricius in 1775. The species are wide-spread, but not numerous, and are found chiefly on carrion.—2. In ornith., a genus of Indian flycatchers, containing N. hodgsoni. E. Blyth, 1861.

Nitidulidæ (nit-i-dū'li-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Nitidula + -idæ.] A family of clavicorn Coleoptera, typified by the genus Nitidula. The family was founded by Leach in 1817. These beetles and their larvæ feed on decomposing animal and vegetable substances, and are found in rotten wood, on fungi, and in various other situations, as on pollen, and an Australian species eats wax in bees' nests. The family is a large and wide-spread one. More than 30 genera and upward of 100 species are North American. They are popularly known as sap-beetles, and sometimes as bone-beetles.

Nititelæ (nit-i-tē'lē), n. pl. [NL., < L. nitidus, bright, + tela, a web.] A group of spiders, so called from their glistening silken webs.

nititelous (nit-i-tē'lus), a. Like the Nititelæ.

niton (nī'ton), n. [< L. nitere, shine.] Chem. sym., Nt; at. wt., 222.4. An autoluminescent gas, the radium emanation, now regarded as an element. See ★radium.

nitor† (nī'tọr), n. [L.] Brightness.

That nitour and shining beauty which we find to be in it [amber]. Topsell's Beasts (1607), p. 681. (Halliwell.)

nitr-. See nitro-.

nitramidin (nī-tram'i-din), n. [< nitr(ic) + amidin.] An explosive substance produced by the action of strong nitric acid upon paper.

nitran (nī'tran), n. [< nitr(ic) + -an.] Graham's name for the radical NO_3, which must be supposed to exist in the nitrates, when they are regarded as formed on the type of the chlorids, as nitric acid (NO_3H). Watts.

Nitraria (nī-trā'ri-ä), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1741), < L. nitraria, a place where natron was found: see nitriary.] A genus of dicotyledonous choripetalous shrubs of the family Zygophyllaceæ, known by the single ovules; the niter-bush. There are 3 species, of Africa, western and central Asia, and Australia. They are rigid, sometimes thorny bushes, with alternate or clustered fleshy leaves, white flowers in cymes, black or red drupes, and seeds sometimes with three seed-leaves. See damouch and lotus-tree, 3.

★nitrate (nī'trāt), n. [< NL. nitratum, nitrate (prop. neut. of nitratus), < L. nitratus, mixed with natron, < nitrum, natron, NL. niter: see niter, nitric.] A salt of nitric acid. The nitrates are generally soluble in water, and easily decomposed by heat. They are much employed as oxidizing agents, and may be prepared by the action of nitric acid on metals or on metallic oxids.—Barium nitrate. See barium.—Glyceryl nitrate. Same as nitroglycerin.—Nitrate of potash, niter.—Nitrate of silver, silver oxidized and dissolved by nitric acid diluted with two or three times its weight of water, forming a solution which yields transparent tabular crystals on cooling, these crystals constituting the ordinary commercial silver nitrate. When fused the nitrate is white and massive, and may be cast into small sticks in a mold; these sticks form the lapis infernalis or lunar caustic employed by surgeons as a cautery. It is sometimes employed for giving a black color to the hair, and is the basis of the indelible ink used for marking linen. It is also very largely used in photography. Also called argentic nitrate.—Nitrate of soda, sodium nitrate, a salt analogous in its chemical properties to potassium nitrate or niter. It commonly crystallizes in obtuse rhombohedrons. It is found native in enormous quantities in the rainless district on the borders of Chile, whence the world's supply is obtained. Its chief uses are as a fertilizer, and for the production of nitric acid and saltpeter (potassium nitrate). It cannot be generally used for the manufacture of gunpowder, on account of its hygroscopic quality. See saltpeter.

nitrate (nī'trāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. nitrated, ppr. nitrating. [< nitrate, n.] 1. To treat or prepare with nitric acid: as, nitrated guncotton.—2. To convert (a base) into a salt by combination with nitric acid.

nitratin (nī'trā-tin), n. [< nitrate + *-in*².] Native sodium nitrate. Also called soda niter. See niter and nitrate.

nitration (nī-trā'shọn), n. The process or act of introducing into a compound by substitution the radical nitryl, NO_2.

nitre, n. See niter.

Nitrian (nit'ri-ạn), a. [< Gr. Νιτρία, a town in Lower Egypt, pl. Νιτρίαι, Νίτραιαι, Νίτριαι, the Natron Lakes, < νιτρία, a place where natron was dug, < νίτρον, natron: see niter, natron.] Of or pertaining to the valley of the Natron Lakes (Nitriæ), southwest of the delta of the Nile, at one time a chief seat of the worship of Serapis and afterward celebrated for its Christian monasteries and ascetics.

Those fierce bands of Nitrian and Syrian ascetics who, reared in the narrowest of schools, treated any divergence from their own standard of opinion as a crime which they were entitled to punish in their own riotous fashion.
Encyc. Brit., XVI. 701.

nitriary (nī'tri-ā-ri), n.; pl. nitriaries (-riz). [Irreg. for nitrary*, < L. nitraria, a place where natron was found (cf. Gr. νιτρία, in same sense), < nitrum, natron: see niter.] An artificial bed of animal matter for the formation of niter; a place where niter is refined.

nitric (nī'trik), a. [= F. nitrique = Sp. nítrico = Pg. nitrico, < NL. nitricus, < nitrum, niter: see niter.] Of, pertaining to, or derived from niter: applied in chemistry to oxygen compounds of nitrogen which contain more oxygen than those other compounds to which the epithet nitrous is applied. See nitrous.—Nitric acid, HNO_3, an acid prepared by distilling a mixture of sulphuric acid and sodium nitrate. It has also been made by electric sparks passed through moist air. When pure it is a colorless liquid, but it is usually yellowish, owing to a small admixture of oxids of nitrogen. Its smell is very strong and disagreeable, and it is intensely acrid. Applied to the skin it cauterizes and destroys it. It is a powerful oxidizing agent, and acts with great energy on most combustible substances, simple or compound, and upon most of the metals. It exists in combination with the bases potash, soda, lime, and magnesia, in both the vegetable and the mineral kingdom. It is employed in etching on steel or copper; in metallurgy and assaying; also in medicine, in a diluted state, as a tonic, and in affections of the alimentary tract and of the liver; and in concentrated form as a caustic. In the arts it is known by the name of aqua fortis. Also called azotic acid.—Nitric-acid furnace, in acid-works, a small furnace where sodium nitrate and sulphuric acid are heated to supply nitrous fumes for the oxidation of sulphurous acid to sulphuric acid.—Nitric oxid, N_2O_2 or NO, a gaseous compound of nitrogen and oxygen, produced by the action of dilute nitric acid upon copper. Also nitrogen dioxid.

nitride (nī'trid or -trīd), n. [< niter (NL. nitrum) + *-ide*¹.] A compound of nitrogen with any more electropositive element or radical, particularly a compound of nitrogen with phosphorus, boron, silicon, or a metal.

nitriferous (nī-trif'e-rus), a. [< NL. nitrum, niter, + L. ferre = E. *bear*¹.] Niter-bearing: as, nitriferous strata.

nitrifiable (nī'tri-fī-ạ-bl), a. Capable of nitrification. See nitrification.

nitrification (nī″tri-fi-kā'shọn), n. [= F. nitrification = Pg. nitrificação, < NL. nitrum, niter, + -ficatio(n-): see -fication.] The process, induced by certain microbes, by which the nitrogen of organic material in the soil is oxidized to nitric acid. A certain degree of heat and the presence of moisture, air, and a base which may combine with the acid are necessary conditions of nitrification.

The presence of water may indeed be considered as one of the conditions essential to nitrification.
Playfair, tr. of Liebig's Chemistry, ii. 8. (Latham.)

★nitrify (nī'tri-fī), v.; pret. and pp. nitrified, ppr. nitrifying. [= F. nitrifier = Pg. nitrificar, < NL. nitrum, niter, + L. facere, make.] I. trans. To convert into niter.

Nitrogen that may be present [in germinating plants] in a nitrified form, or in a form easily nitrified, may escape assimilation by being set free by the denitrifying ferment described by Gayon and Dupetit and Springer.
Science, IX. 111.

★II. intrans. To be converted into niter.

nitrine (nī'trin), n. [< nitrum + *-ine*².] A kind of nitroglycerin patented by Nobel, a Swedish engineer, in 1866.

nitrite (nī'trīt), n. [= F. nitrite; as nitrum + *-ite*².] A salt of nitrous acid. Azotite is a synonym.—Nitrite of amyl. See *amyl*².

★nitro-, nitr-. [< NL. nitrum, niter (see niter); in comp. referring to nitryl, nitric, or nitrogen.] An element in some compounds, meaning 'niter,' and usually implying 'nitrogen' or 'nitric acid'; specifically, as a prefix in chemical words, indicating the presence of the radical nitryl (NO_2) in certain compounds: as, nitro-aniline, *nitro*anisic acid, nitro-benzamide, nitro-benzoic acid.

nitro-aërial (nī″trō-ā-ē'ri-ạl), a. Consisting of or containing niter and air. Ray.

nitrobarite (nī-trō-bar'īt), n. [< nitrum (nitric) + bar(ium) + *-ite*².] Native barium nitrate.

nitrobenzene (nī-trō-ben'zēn), n. [< nitrum (nitric) + benzene.] Same as nitrobenzol.

nitrobenzol, nitrobenzole (nī-trō-ben'zōl), n. [< nitrum (nitric) + benzol.] A liquid ($C_6H_5NO_2$) prepared by adding benzol drop by drop to fuming nitric acid. It closely resembles oil of bitter almonds in flavor, and, though it has taken a prominent place among the narcotic poisons, it is largely employed, as a substitute for that oil, in the manufacture of confectionery and in the preparation of perfumery. It is important as a source of aniline in the manufacture of dyes. It is known also as essence of mirbane, a fancy name given to it by M. Collas of Paris. See aniline. Also, more properly, called nitrobenzene.

nitrocalcite (nī-trō-kal'sīt), n. [< nitrum (nitric) + calcite.] Native nitrate of calcium. It occurs as a pulverulent efflorescence on old walls and limestone rocks, has a sharp bitter taste, and is of a grayish-white color.

nitrocellulose (nī-trō-sel'ū-lōs), n. [< nitrum (nitric) + cellulose.] A cellulose ester; a compound of nitric acid and cellulose. The name is given both to guncotton and to the substance from which collodion is made. See guncotton and collodion.

nitrochloroform (nī-trō-klō'rō-fôrm), n. [< nitrum (nitric) + chloroform.] Same as chloropicrin.

nitro-compound (nī'trō-kom″pound), n. A carbon compound which is formed from another by the substitution of the monatomic radical NO_2 for hydrogen, and in which the nitrogen atom is regarded as directly joined to a carbon atom.

★nitrogelatin (nī-trō-jel'ạ-tin), n. [< nitrum (nitric) + gelatin.] An explosive consisting largely of nitroglycerin with smaller proportions of guncotton and camphor. At ordinary temperatures it is a thick semi-transparent jelly. It is less sensible to percussion than dynamite, and is less altered by submergence.

nitrogen (nī'trō-jen), n. [= F. nitrogène = Sp. nitrógeno = Pg. nitrogeno, < NL. nitrogenum, < nitrum, niter (with ref. to nitric acid), + -gen, producing: see -gen.] Chemical symbol, N; atomic weight, 14.01. An element existing in nature as a colorless, odorless, tasteless gas, reducible to a liquid under extreme pressure and cold. Its specific gravity is .9674 (air = 1). It is neither combustible nor a supporter of combustion, nor does it enter readily into combination with any other element. At a high temperature it unites directly with silicon, calcium, magnesium, and other elements. It forms about 77 per cent. of the weight of the atmosphere, and is a necessary constituent of all animal and vegetable tissues. With hydrogen it forms the strong base ammonia, and with hydrogen and oxygen a series of acids of which nitric acid is commercially the most important. It may be most readily prepared from atmospheric air. There are five known compounds of nitrogen and oxygen—viz., nitrous oxid or nitrogen monoxid, N_2O; nitric oxid, N_2O_2; nitrogen trioxid, N_2O_3; nitrogen tetroxid, N_2O_4; nitrogen pentoxid, N_2O_5. Formerly called azote.

nitrogeneous† (nī-trō-jē'nē-us), a. [< nitrogen + -eous.] Same as nitrogenous. Smart.

nitrogenic (nī-trō-jen'ik), a. [< nitrogen + -ic.] Same as nitrogenous.

He spoke further of the action of nitric acid on carbonic and nitrogenic compounds.
Nature, XL. 312.

nitrogenize (nī-troj'e-nīz), v. t.; pret. and pp. nitrogenized, ppr. nitrogenizing. [< nitrogen + -ize.] To impregnate or imbue with nitrogen. Hoblyn. Also spelled nitrogenise.—Nitrogenized foods, nutritive substances containing nitrogen—principally proteids.—Non-nitrogenized foods, such foods as contain no nitrogen—principally carbohydrates and fats.

nitrogenous (nī-troj'e-nus), a. [< nitrogen + -ous.] Pertaining to or containing nitrogen. Also nitrogenic.

A little meat, fish, eggs, milk, beans, pease, or other nitrogenous food.
The Century, XXXVI. 260.

nitroglucose (nī-trō-glö'kōs), n. [< nitrum (nitric) + glucose.] An organic substance produced by acting on finely powdered cane-sugar with nitrosulphuric acid. In photography it has been added in very small quantities to collodion, with the view of increasing the density of the negative. It renders the sensitized film less sensitive to light.

nitroglycerol, nitroglycerin (nī-trō-glis'e-rol, -rin), n. [< nitrum (nitric) + glycerol, -rin.] A compound ($C_3H_5N_3O_9$) produced by the action of a mixture of strong nitric and sulphuric acids on glycerol at low temperatures. A light-yellow, oily liquid, of specific gravity 1.6, and a most powerful explosive agent, detonating when struck, or when heated quickly to 306° F. For use in blasting it is mixed with one fourth its weight of silicious earth, and is then called dynamite. Taken internally, it is a violent poison, but in minute doses is used in medicine in the treatment of angina pectoris and heart-failure. Also called glonoin, nitroleum, blasting-oil, glyceryl nitrate, trinitrate of glyceryl, and trinitrin.

nitrohydrochloric (nī-trō-hī-drō-klō'rik), a. [< nitrum (nitric) + hydrochloric.] A term used only in the following phrase.—Nitrohydrochloric acid, an acid composed of a mixture of concentrated nitric and hydrochloric acids, used for the solution of many substances, more especially of the noble metals. Also called nitromuriatic acid and aqua regia.

nitroleum (nī-trō'lē-um), n. [< NL. nitrum, niter, + L. oleum = Gr. ἔλαιον, oil.] Same as nitroglycerin. E. H. Knight.

nitromagnesite (nī-trō-mag'ne-sīt), n. [< NL. nitrum + magnesium + *-ite*².] A native hydrated nitrate of magnesium found as an efflorescence with nitrocalcite in limestone caves.

★nitrometer (nī-trom'e-tėr), n. [< NL. nitrum, niter, + Gr. μέτρον, a measure.] An apparatus for determining the purity of nitrates (saltpeter, nitroglycerin, etc.) by decomposing them and measuring the nitrogen-dioxid gas evolved.

nitromuriatic (nī-trō-mū-ri-at'ik), a. [< nitrum (nitric) + muriatic.] The older term for nitrohydrochloric.

nitronaphthalene (nī-trō-naf'tha-lēn), n. [< nitrum (nitric) + naphthalene.] A derivative from naphthalene produced by nitric acid. The two possible (α and β) mononitronaphthalenes are known and several dinitro- and trinitronaphthalenes have been prepared.

nitroso-. A prefix denoting that the compound to which it is attached contains the univalent compound radical NO, or nitrosyl.

nitro-substitution (nī-trō-sub-sti-tū'shọn), n. The act of displacing an atom or a radical in a complex body by substituting for it the univalent radical nitryl, NO_2.

nitrosulphuric (nī″trō-sul-fū'rik), a. [< nitrum (nitric) + sulphuric.] Consisting of a mixture of sulphuric acid and some nitrogen oxid: as, nitrosulphuric acid, formed by mixing one part of niter with eight or ten parts of sulphuric acid: a useful agent for separating the silver from the copper of old plated goods.

★nitrosyl (nī'trō-sil), n. [< NL. nitrosus, nitrous, + -yl.] A univalent radical consisting of an atom of nitrogen combined with one of oxygen. In the free state, nitrogen dioxid. Its chlorid and bromide have been isolated, and the radical exists in many complex substances forming the so-called nitroso-compounds.

nitrous (nī'trus), a. [= F. nitreux = Sp. Pg. It. nitroso, < NL. nitrosus, nitrous, < L. nitrosus, full of natron, < nitrum, natron (NL. niter): see niter.] In chem., of, pertaining to, or derived from niter: applied to an oxygen compound which contains less oxygen than those in which the epithet nitric is used: thus, nitrous oxid (N_2O), nitric oxid (N_2O_2); nitrous acid (HNO_2), nitric acid (HNO_3), etc.—Nitrous acid, HNO_2, an acid formed from nitrogen trioxid and water: it readily becomes oxidized to nitric acid.—Nitrous ether, ethyl nitrite, $C_2H_5NO_2$, a derivative of alcohol in which hydroxyl (OH) is replaced by the group NO_2. It is a very volatile liquid. When inhaled it acts very much as amyl nitrite does.—Nitrous oxid gas, N_2O, a combination of nitrogen and oxygen, formerly called the dephlogisticated nitrous gas. Under ordinary conditions of temperature and pressure this substance is gaseous; it has a sweet taste and a faint agreeable odor. When inhaled it produces unconsciousness and insensibility to pain: hence it is used as an anesthetic during short surgical operations. When it is breathed diluted with air an exhilarating or intoxicating effect is produced, under the influence of which the inhaler is irresistibly impelled to do all kinds of silly and extravagant acts; hence the old name of laughing-gas. Also called nitrogen monoxid.—Spirit of nitrous ether, an alcoholic solution of ethyl nitrite containing about 5 per cent. of the crude ether. It is diaphoretic, diuretic, and antispasmodic. Also called sweet spirit of niter.

★nitrum (nī′trum), n. [L., natron, NL., niter: see niter.] 1. Natron.—2. Niter.—Nitrum flammans, ammonium nitrate: so named from its property of exploding when heated to 600° F.

nitry, a. See nitery.

nitryl (nī′tril), n. [< nitrum (nitric) + -yl.] Nitric peroxid (NO_2), a univalent radical assumed to exist in nitric acid and in the so-called nitro-compounds.

nitta-tree (nit′ä-trē), n. [< African nitta, also natta, + E. tree.] A leguminous tree, Parkia Africana, native in western Africa and parts of India. Its clustered pods contain an edible mealy pulp of which the negroes are fond; and in the Sudan the seeds (about fourteen in a pod), after a process of roasting, fermenting in water, etc., are made into a cake which serves as a sauce, though of offensive odor. The name nitta-tree perhaps covers more than one species. Also called African locust.

nitter (nit′ėr), n. [< nit[1] + -er[1].] An insect which deposits its nits on animals, as an œstrus or bot-fly. See cut under bot-fly.

nittings (nit′ingz), n. pl. [Origin obscure.] Small particles of lead ore. [North. Eng.]

Nittings [is] that Ore that stays in the Seive in washing of Smitham. Hooson, Miner's Dict.

nitty (nit′i), a. [< nit + -y[1].] Full of nits; abounding with nits.

I 'll know the poor, egregious, nitty rascal. B. Jonson, Poetaster, iii. 1.

nival (nī′val), a. [< L. nivalis, snowy, < nix (niv-, orig. snighv-*), snow: see snow[1].] 1†. Abounding with snow; snowy. Bailey.—2. Growing amid snow, or flowering during winter: as, nival plants.

Monte Rosa contains the richest nival flora, although most of the species are distributed through the whole Alpine region. Science, IV. 475.

nivel†, (niv′l), v. i. See niffle[1]. Prompt. Parv.

nivellator (niv′e-lā-tor), n. [= F. niveleur = Sp. nivelador; as F. niveler (= Sp. nivelar), level (< nivel, level: see level[1]), + -ator.] A leveler.

There are in the Compte Rendus of the French Academy later papers containing developments of various points of the theory—the conception of nivellators may be referred to. Nature, XXXIX. 219.

nivellization (niv″e-li-zā′shon), n. [< F. niveler, level (see nivellator), + -ize + -ation.] A leveling; a reduction to uniformity, as of originally different vowels or inflections. Vigfusson and Powell, Icelandic Reader, p. 489.

nivenite (niv′en-īt), n. [Named after William Niven of New York.] A hydrated uranate of thorium, yttrium, and lead, occurring in massive forms with a velvet-black color and high specific gravity. As it was, both Savoyards and Nizzards had no choice except to submit to the inevitable. E. Dicey, Victor Emmanuel, p. 231.

nizzy†, n. Same as nisey.

N. L. An abbreviation of New Latin.

N. N. E. An abbreviation of north-northeast.

N. N. W. An abbreviation of north-northwest.

no[1] (nō), adv. [Also dial. (Sc.) na, in enclitic use; < ME. no, na, < AS. nā, nō (= Icel. nei), not ever, no, < ne, not, + ā, aye, ever: see ay[1], o[3]. Cf. nay, another form of no, from the Scand.] 1. Not ever; never; not at all; not.

Tho were thai wounded so strong,
That thai no might doure long.
Arthour and Merlin, p. 350.

No gif thou of the self na tale,
Bot bring thi sawel out of bale.
Eng. Metr. Homilies (ed. Small), p. 141.

[In this sense no is now confined to provincial use, in the form no or na, the Scottish form na being especially used enclitically, as canna, isna, maunna, winna, etc.]

2. Not so; nay; not: with implied, but not expressed, repetition of a preceding (or succeeding) statement denied or question answered in the negative, with change of person if necessary. This is practically equivalent to a complete sentence with its affirmation denied: as, "Was he here yesterday?" "No"—that is, "he was not here yesterday." It is therefore the negative categorematic particle, equivalent to nay, and opposed to yes or yea, the affirmative categorematic particles. The fine distinction alleged to have formerly existed between no and nay, according to which no answered questions negatively framed, as, "Will he not come? No," while nay answered those not including a negative, as, "Will he come? Nay," is hardly borne out by the records. No and nay are ultimately identical in origin, and their differences of use (nay being restricted in use and no now largely superseded by not) are accidental. (a) In answer to a question, whether by another person or asked (in echo or argument) by one's self.

Shall it availe that man to say he honours the Martyrs memory and treads in their steps? No; the Pharisees confest as much of the holy Prophets. Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus.

(b) In answer to a request (expressed or anticipated): in this use often repeated for emphasis: as, no, no, do not ask me. (c) Used parenthetically in iteration of another negative.

There is none righteous, no, not one. Rom. iii. 10.

And thus I leave it as a declared truth, that neither the feare of sects, no, nor rebellion, can be a fit plea to stay reformation. Milton, Church-Government, i. 7.

(d) Used continuatively, in iteration and amplification of a previous negative, expressed or understood.

Yo. Siw. The devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear.
Macb. No, nor more fearful.
Shak., Macbeth, v. 7. 9.

Loss of thee
Would never from my heart: no, no! I feel
The link of nature draw me. Milton, P. L., ix. 914.

No, not the bow, which so adorns the skies,
So glorious is, or boasts so many dyes.
Waller, On a Brede of Divers Colours.

No, in Old England nothing can be won Without a Faction, Good or Ill be done.
Steele, Grief A-la-Mode, Prol.

3. Not: used after or, at the end of a sentence or clause, as the representative of an independent negative sentence or clause, the first clause being often introduced by whether or if: as, he is uncertain whether to accept it or no; he may take it or no, as he pleases.

"I will," she sayde, "do as ye councell me; Comforte or no, or hough that euer it be."

Is it lawful for us to give tribute unto Cæsar, or no?
Luke xx. 22.

Whether they had thir Charges born by the Church or no, it need not be recorded. Milton, Touching Hirelings.

It is hard, indeed, to say whether he [Shakspere] had any religious belief or no. J. R. Green, Hist. Eng. People, vi. 7.

4. See no[2], adv.—No! No! (naut.), the answer to a sentry's hail, to indicate that a warrant officer is in the boat hailed.—Whether or no, in any case; certainly; surely: as, he will do it whether or no. [Colloq.]

no[1] (nō), n.; pl. noes (nōz). [< no[1], adv.] 1. A denial; the word of denial.

Henceforth my wooing mind shall be express'd
In russet yeas and honest kersey noes.
Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 413.

I'm patience its very self! . . . but I do hate a No that means Yes. J. H. Ewing, A Very Ill-tempered Family, iv.

2. A negative vote, or a person who votes in the negative: as, the noes have it.

The division was taken on the question whether Middleton's motion should be put. The noes were ordered by the speaker to go forth into the lobby. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

The ayes and noes. See aye[3].

no[1] (nō), conj. [ME., < no, adv.; partly as a var. of ne, by confusion with no[1], adv.] Nor.

no[2] (nō), a. [< ME. no, an abbr. form, by mistaking the final n for an inflective suffix, of non, noon, earlier nan, < AS. nān, no, none: see none[1], which is the full form of no. No is to none as a (ME. a, o) to one.] Not any; not one; none.

As for the land of Perse, this will I saye,
It ought to paye noo tribute in noo wise.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 2004.

Thou shalt worship no other god. Ex. xxxiv. 14.

My cause is no man's but mine own.
Fletcher (and another), Love's Pilgrimage, ii. 1.

I lastly proceed from the no good it can do to the manifest hurt it causes. Milton, Areopagitica, p. 29.

By Heaven! it [a battle] is a splendid sight to see (For one who hath no friend, no brother there).
Byron, Childe Harold, i. 40.

There were no houses inviting to repose; no fields ripening with corn; no cheerful hearths; no welcoming friends; no common altars.
Story, Discourse, Sept. 18, 1828.

No doubt, end, go, joke, etc. See the nouns. [Like other negatives, no is often used ironically, to suggest the opposite of what the negative expresses.

Here 's no knavery! See, to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together!
Shak., T. of the S., i. 2. 139.

This is no cunning queen! 'slight, she will make him
To think that, like a stag, he has cast his horns,
And is grown young again! Massinger, Bondman, i. 2.

No is used, like not in similar constructions, with a word of depreciation or diminution, to denote a certain degree of excellence, small or great according to circumstances.

But Paul said, I am . . . a Jew of Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, a citizen of no mean city. Acts xxi. 39.

I can avouch that half a century ago the beer of Flanders was no bad tap. N. and Q., 7th ser., VI. 396.]

no[2] (nō), adv. [< ME. no; a reduced form of none[1], adv., as no[2], a., is of none[1], a. It is therefore different from no[1], adv., from which it is not distinguishable in form, and which it represents in all uses other than those given under no[1], adv., 1, 2, 3.] Not in any degree; not at all; in no respect; not: used with a comparative: as, no longer; no shorter; no more; no less.

No sooner met, but they looked; no sooner looked, but they loved; no sooner loved, but they sighed; no sooner sighed, but they asked one another the reason.
Shak., As you Like it, v. 2. 36.

But how compells he? doubtless no otherwise then he draws, without which no man can come to him.
Milton, Civil Power.

nobility (nō-bil′i-ti), n. [< OF. nobilite, nobilete, nobilited, also noblete, noblite, F. nobilité = Pr. nobilitat, nobletat = It. nobilità, < L. nobilita(t-)s, celebrity, excellence, nobility, < nobilis, known, celebrated, noble: see noble. The older nouns in E. are noblesse and nobley.] 1. The character of being noble; nobleness; dignity of mind; that elevation of soul which comprehends bravery, generosity, magnanimity, intrepidity, and contempt of everything that dishonors character; loftiness of tone; greatness; grandeur.

Though she hated Amphialus, yet the nobility of her courage prevailed over it.
Sir P. Sidney.

Sweet mercy is nobility's true badge.
Shak., Tit. And., i. 1. 119.

There is a nobility without heraldry, a natural dignity.
Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, ii. 1.

2. Social or political preëminence, usually accompanied by special hereditary privileges, founded on hereditary succession or descent; eminence or dignity derived by inheritance from illustrious ancestors, or specially conferred by sovereign authority. The Constitution of the United States provides (art. I, sec. ix.): "No title of nobility shall be granted by the United States."

He call'd them untaught knaves, unmannerly,
To bring a slovenly unhandsome corse
Betwixt the wind and his nobility.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., i. 3. 45.

New nobility is but the act of power, but ancient nobility is the act of time.
Bacon, Nobility.

Nobility without an estate is as ridiculous as gold lace on a frieze coat.
Sheridan, The Duenna, ii. 3.

The great peculiarity of the baronial estate in England as compared with the continent is the absence of the idea of caste: the English lords do not answer to the nobles of France or to the princes and counts of Germany, because in our system the theory of nobility of blood as conveying political privilege has no legal recognition. English nobility is merely the nobility of the hereditary counsellors of the crown, the right to give counsel being involved at one time in the tenure of land, at another in the fact of summons, at another in the terms of a patent; it is the result rather than the cause of peerage. The nobleman is the person who for his life holds the hereditary office denoted or implied by his title. The law gives to his children and kinsmen no privilege which it does not give to the ordinary freeman, unless we regard certain acts of courtesy, which the law has recognised, as implying privilege. Such legal nobility does not of course preclude the existence of real nobility, socially privileged and defined by ancient purity of descent or even by connexion with the legal nobility of the peerage; but the English law does not regard the man of most ancient and purest descent as entitled thereby to any right or privilege which is not shared by every freeman. . . . Nobility of blood—that is, nobility which was shared by the whole kin alike—was a very ancient principle among the Germans, and was clearly recognized by the Anglo-Saxons in the common institution of wergild.
Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 188.

In England there is no nobility. The so-called noble family is not noble in the continental sense; privilege does not go on from generation to generation; titles and precedence are lost in the second or third generation.
E. A. Freeman, Amer. Lects., p. 306.

3. A body of persons enjoying the privileges of nobility. Specifically—(a) In Great Britain and Ireland, the body of persons holding titles in virtue of which they are members of the peerage. See peerage; see also quotations from Stubbs and Freeman under def. 2. (b) In some European countries, as in Russia, a class holding a high rank and enjoying, besides social distinction, special privileges; the noblesse. =Syn. 1. Nobility, Nobleness, elevation, loftiness, dignity. In application to things nobleness is rather more appropriate than nobility, as the nobleness of architecture or one's English, while nobility is more likely to be applied to persons and their belongings, as nobility of character or of rank; but this distinction is no more than a tendency as yet. See noble.

nobis (nō′bis). [L., dat. of nos, we: see nostrum.] With us; for or on our part: in zoölogy affixed to the name of an animal to show that such name is that which the author himself has given or by which he calls the object. The plural form is like the editorial "we." The singular mihi, sometimes used, has the same signification. Usually abbreviated nob.

★ noble (nō′bl), a. and n. [< ME. noble, < OF. noble, also nobile, F. noble = Pr. Sp. noble = Pg. nobre = It. nobile, < L. nobilis (OL. gnobilis), knowable, known, well-known, famous, celebrated, high-born, of noble birth, excellent, < noscere, gnoscere, know (= Gr. γιγνώσκειν), know: see know[1].] I. a. 1. Possessing or characterized by hereditary social or political preëminence, or belonging to the class which possesses such preëminence or dignity; distinguished by birth, rank, or title; of ancient and honorable lineage; illustrious: as, a noble personage; noble birth.

He was a noble knyght and an hardy.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 164.

Come they of noble family?
Why, so didst thou.
Shak., Hen. V., ii. 2. 129.

The patricians of a Latin town admitted to the Roman franchise became plebeians at Rome. Thus, from the beginning, the Roman plebs contained families which, if the word noble has any real meaning, were fully as noble as any house of the three elder tribes.
E. A. Freeman, Amer. Lects., p. 292.

2. High in excellence or worth.

The noble army of Martyrs praise thee.
Book of Common Prayer, Te Deum.

The noblest mind the best contentment has.
Spenser, F. Q., I. i. 35.

(a) Great or lofty in character, or in the nature of one's achievements: magnanimous; above everything that is mean or dishonorable: applied to persons or the mind.

Noblest of men, woo't die?
Shak., A. and C., iv. 15. 59.

He was my friend,
My noble friend; I will bewail his ashes.
Fletcher (and Massinger?), Lover's Progress, iv. 3.

Though King John had the Misfortune to fall into the Hands of his Enemy, yet he had the Happiness to fall into the Hands of a noble Enemy.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 124.

Statues, with winding ivy crowned, belong
To nobler poets, for a nobler song.
Dryden, tr. of Persius's Satires, i., Prol.

(b) Proceeding from or characteristic or indicative of greatness of mind: as, noble courage; noble sentiments; noble thoughts.

Thus checked, the Bishop, looking round with a noble air, cried out, "We commit our cause then to Almighty God."
Latimer, Life and Writings, p. xxxix.

For his entertainment,
Leave that to me; he shall find noble usage,
And from me a free welcome.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Malta, iii. 2.

The noblest service comes from nameless hands,
And the best servant does his work unseen.
O. W. Holmes, Ambition.

(c) Of the best kind; choice; excellent.

Jer. ii. 21.

Hir garthes of nobyll sylke they were.
Thomas of Erseldoune (Child's Ballads, I. 99).

My wife, who, poor wretch! sat . . . all day, till ten at night, altering and lacing of a noble petticoat.
Pepys, Diary, Dec. 25, 1668.

See that there be a noble supper provided in the saloon to-night—serve up my best wines, and let me have music, d'ye hear? Sheridan, The Duenna, iii. 1.

(d) In mineral., excellent; pure in the highest degree: as, noble opal; noble hornblende; noble tourmalin. (e) Precious; valuable: applied to those metals which are not altered on exposure to the air, or which do not easily rust, and which are much scarcer and more valuable than the so-called useful metals. Though the epithet is applied chiefly to gold and silver, and sometimes to quicksilver, it might also with propriety be made use of in reference to platinum and the group of metals associated with it, since these are scarce and valuable, and are little acted on by ordinary reagents. (f) In falconry, noting long-winged falcons which swoop down upon the quarry.

3. Of magnificent proportions or appearance; magnificent; stately; splendid: as, a noble edifice.

Vne oppon the Auter was amyt to stond
An ymage full noble in the nome of god, ffyftene cubettes by course all of clene lenght, Shynyng of shene gold & of shap nobill.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 1681.

A noble library . . . looks down upon us with its ponderous and speaking volumes.
Story, Misc. Writings, p. 551.

Most noble, the style of a duke.—Noble hawks, in falconry. See hawk[1].—Noble laurel, the bay-tree, Laurus nobilis. See bay[1], 2, and laurel, 1.—Noble liverwort, the common hepatica or liverleaf, Hepatica Hepatica. See Hepatica.—Noble metals. See def. 2 (e).—Noble parts of the body†, the vital parts, as the heart, liver, lungs, brain, etc. Dunglison.—The noble art, the art of self-defense; boxing.=Syn. 2. Noble, Generous, Magnanimous, honorable, elevated, exalted, illustrious, eminent, grand, worthy. Noble and generous start from the idea of being high-born; in character and conduct they express that which is appropriate to exalted place. Noble is an absolute word in excluding its opposite completely; it admits no degree of the petty, mean, base, or dishonorable; it is one of the words selected for the expression of loftiness in spirit and life. With generous the idea of liberality in giving has somewhat overshadowed the earlier meaning, that of a noble nature and a free, warm heart going forth toward others: as, a generous foe disdains to take an unfair advantage. Magnanimous comes nearer to the meaning of noble; it notes or describes that largeness of mind that has breadth enough and height enough to take in large views, broad sympathies, exalted standards, etc. (See definition of magnanimity.) It generally implies superiority of position: as, a nation so great as the United States or Great Britain can afford to be magnanimous in its treatment of injuries or affronts from nations comparatively weak.

II. n. 1. A person of acknowledged social or political preëminence; a person of rank above a commoner; a nobleman; specifically, in Great Britain and Ireland, a peer; a duke, marquis, earl, viscount, or baron. See nobility and peerage.

I come to thee for charitable license . . .
To sort our nobles from our common men.
For many of our princes—woe the while!—
Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood.
Shak., Hen. V., iv. 7. 77.

Let us see these handsome houses,
Where the wealthy nobles dwell.
Tennyson, Lord of Burleigh.

2. An old English gold coin, current for 6*s.* 8*d.*, first minted by Edward III., and afterward by Richard II., Henry IV., V., and VI., and also by Edward IV., under whom one variety of the noble was called the ryal or rose noble (see ryal). The obverse type of all these nobles was the king in a ship. The reverse inscription, "Jesus autem transiens per medium illorum ibat" (Luke iv. 30), was probably a charm against thieves. Ruding conjectures, though not with much probability, that the coins derived their name from the noble nature of the metal of which they were composed. The coin was much imitated in the Low Countries. See George-noble, quarter noble.

Obverse.

It is the custom in Lancashire for a man to advertise that he will not be responsible for debts contracted by her [his wife] after that date. He is thus said to notchel her, and the advertisement is termed a notchel notice.
N. and Q., 7th ser., VIII. 268.

Will. The first I think on is the king's majesty (God bless him!), him they cried nochell.
Sam. What, as Gaffer Block of our town cried his wife?
Will. I do not know what he did; but they voted that nobody should either borrow or lend, nor sell or buy with him, under pain of their displeasure.
Dialogue on Oxford Parliament, 1681 (Harl. Misc., II. [114]). (Davies.)

nocht (noćht), n. A dialectal (Scotch) form of naught.

nocivet (nō′siv), a. [= Sp. Pg. It. nocivo, < L. nocivus, hurtful, injurious, < nocere, hurt, harm: see nocent.] Hurtful; injurious.

Be it that some nocive or hurtful thing be towards us, must fear of necessity follow thereupon?
Hooker, Eccles. Polity.

nocivous†, a. [< L. nocivus, hurtful: see nocive.] Hurtful; harmful; evil.

Phisitions which prescribe a remedy, . . .
That know what is nocivous, & what good, . . .
Yet all their skill as follie I deride, Vnless they rightly know Christ crucified.
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 147.

nock (nok), n. [< ME. nocke = MD. nocke = Dan. nok = Sw. nock, OSw. nocka, dial. nokke, nokk, a nock, notch; cf. It. nocco, nocca, a nock, of Teut. origin. Now assibilated notch, q. v. Cf. *nick*¹.] 1. A notch; specifically, in archery, the notch on the end of an arrow (or the notched end itself), which rests on the string when shooting, or either of the notches on the horns of the bow where the string is fastened.

He took his arrow by the nocke.
Chapman, Iliad, iv. 138.

Be sure alwayes that your stringe slip not out of the nocke, for then all is in jeopardy of breakinge.
Ascham, Toxophilus, p. 201. (Nares.)

2. In sail-making, the foremost upper corner of boom-sails, and of staysails cut with a square tack.—3†. The fundament; the breech.

So learned Talicotius from
The brawny part of porter's bum Cut supplemental noses, which Wou'd last as long as parent breech;
But when the date of nock was out,
Off dropt the sympathetic snout.
S. Butler, Hudibras, I. i. 285.

Nock-earing, the rope which fastens the nock of a sail.

nock (nok), v. t. [< nock, n. Cf. notch.] 1. To notch; make a notch in.

They [arrows] were shaven wel and dight,
Nokked and fethered aright.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 942.

2. To place the notch of (the shaft or arrow) upon the string ready for shooting.

Captaine Smith was led after him by three great Salvages, holding him fast by each arme: and on each side six went in fyle with their Arrowes nocked.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's True Travels, I. 159.

A proper attention was to be paid to the nocking—that is, the application of the notch at the bottom of the arrow to the bow-string. Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 124.

nockandro† (nok′an-drō), n. [Perhaps humorously formed from nock + Gr. ἀνήρ (ἀνδρ-), a man. (Nares).] Same as nock, 3.

Blest be Dulcinea, whose favour I beseeching, Rescued poor Andrew, and his nock-andro from breeching.
Gayton, Fest. Notes, p. 14. (Nares.)

nocking-point (nok′ing-point), n. In archery, that part of the string of a bow on which the arrow is placed preparatory to shooting.

noctambulation (nok-tam-bū-lā′shon), n. [< L. nox (noct-), night, + ambulatio(n-), a walking about: see night and ambulation.] Somnambulism; sleep-walking. [Rare.]

noctambulism (nok-tam′bū-lizm), n. [= F. noctambulisme = Sp. Pg. noctambulismo = It. nottambulismo; as noctambulo + -ism.] Somnambulism. [Rare.]

noctambulist (nok-tam′bū-list), n. [< L. nox (noct-), night, + ambulare, walk, + -ist.] A sleep-walker; a somnambulist. [Rare.]

noctambulo (nok-tam′bū-lō), n. [< Sp. noctámbulo = Pg. noctambulo = It. nottambulo = F. noctambule, a sleep-walker, < L. nox (noct-), night, + ambulare, walk.] A sleep-walker; a somnambulist.

Respiration being carried on in sleep is no argument against its being voluntary. What shall we say of noctambulos? Arbuthnot, Effects of Air. (Latham.) noctambulon† (nok-tam′bū-lon), n. Same as noctambulo. Dr. H. More.

noctidial (nok-tid′i-al), a. [< L. nox (noct-), night, + dies, a day: see night and dial.] Comprising a night and a day; consisting of twenty-four hours. [Rare.]

The noctidial day, the lunar periodick month, and the solar year, are natural and universal; but incommensurate each to another, and difficult to be reconciled. Holder.

noctiferous† (nok-tif′e-rus), a. [< L. noctifer, the evening star, lit. night-bringer, < nox (noct-), night, + ferre = E. *bear*¹. Cf. Lucifer.] Bringing night. Bailey.

noctiflorous (nok-ti-flō′rus), a. [< L. nox (noct-), night, + flos (flor-), blossom, flower.] In bot., flowering at night.

Noctilio (nok-til′i-ō), n. [NL., < L. nox (noct-), night, + -ilio, as in L. vespertilio, a bat (< vesper, evening): see Vespertilio.] 1. A genus of Central American and South American emballonurine bats, the type of a family Noctilionidæ. N. leporinus, a bat of singular aspect, is the leading species.—2. [l. c.] A member of this genus.

Noctilionidæ (nok-til-i-on′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Noctilio(n-) + -idæ.] A neotropical family of bats, related to the Emballonuridæ and sometimes included in that family, represented by the single genus Noctilio. The ears are large, separate, and with well-developed tragus; there is no nose-leaf; the nostrils are oval and close together, and the snout projects over the lower lip; the short tail perforates the basal third of the large interfemoral membrane; and some peculiarities of the incisor teeth give the dentition an appearance like that of a rodent. These bats share with some others, as the molossoids, the name of bulldog bats.

Noctiluca (nok-ti-lū′kạ), n. [NL., < L. noctiluca, that which shines by night (the moon, a lantern), < nox (noct-), night, + lucere, shine: see lucent.] 1. A genus of free-swimming phosphorescent pelagic flagellate animalcules, type of the family Noctilucidæ. It is sometimes regarded as representative of an order Cystoflagellata (or Rhynchoflagellata), of the class Mastigophora. They are protozoans with one large and one small flagellum, of subspheroidal form, strikingly like a peach in shape, and from $\frac{1}{50}$ to $\frac{1}{20}$ of an inch in diameter (thus of giant size among infusorians). There is only one species, N. miliaris, of almost cosmopolitan distribution, but most abundant in warm seas, where they are foremost among various phosphorescent pelagic organisms which make the water luminous.

Noctiluca miliaris.
e, gastric vacuole; g, radiating filaments; f, anal aperture. (Magnified.)

Noctiluca is extremely abundant in the superficial waters of the ocean, and is one of the most usual causes of the phosphorescence of the sea. The light is given out by the peripheral layer of protoplasm which lines the cuticle. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 93.

2. [l. c.] A member of this genus.

noctilucent (nok-ti-lū′sent), a. [< L. nox (noct-), night, + lucere, shine: see lucent.] Shining by night or in the dark; noctilucid: as, the noctilucent eyes of a cat.

noctilucid¹ (nok-ti-lū′sid), a. [< L. nox (noct-), night, + lucidus, shining: see lucid.] Shining by night; noctilucent.

noctilucid² (nok-ti-lū′sid), n. [< NL. Noctilucidæ.] A member of the family Noctilucidæ.

Noctilucidæ (nok-ti-lū′si-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Noctiluca + -idæ.] A family of free-swimming animalcules, typified by the genus Noctiluca.

noctilucin (nok-ti-lū′sin), n. [As Noctiluca + *-in*².] In phosphorescent animals, the semifluid substance which causes light. Rossiter.

noctilucous (nok-ti-lū′kus), a. [As Noctiluca + -ous.] Same as noctilucent. [Rare.]

Myriads of noctilucous nereids that inhabit the ocean. Pennant.

noctivagant (nok-tiv′a-gant), a. [< L. nox (noct-), night, + vagan(t-)s, ppr. of vagari, wander: see vagrant.] Wandering in the night: as, a noctivagant animal.

The lustful sparrows, noctivagant adulterers, sit chirping about our houses. Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 347.

noctivagation (nok″ti-vā-gā′shon), n. [< L. nox (noct-), night, + vagatio(n-), a wandering, < vagari, wander: see vagrant.] Rambling or wandering in the night.

The Townsmen acknowledge 6*s.* 8*d.* to be paid for noctivagation. A. Wood, Life of Himself, p. 274.

noctivagous (nok-tiv′a-gus), a. [= F. noctivague = Sp. noctívago = Pg. noctivago = It. nottivago, < L. noctivagus, that wanders by night, < nox (noct-), night, + vagari, wander: see vagrant.] Noctivagant. Buckland.

noctograph (nok′tō-grȧf), n. [< L. nox (noct-), night, + Gr. γράφειν, write.] 1. A writing-frame for the blind.—2. An instrument or register which records the presence of watchmen on their beats. E. H. Knight.

Noctua (nok′tū-ạ), n. [NL., < L. noctua, a night-owl, < nox (noct-), night: see night.] In zoöl., a generic name variously used. (a†) An old genus of mollusks. Klein, 1751. (b) In entom., a genus of moths established by Fabricius in 1776. It gives name to the family Noctuidæ and to many corresponding groups of lepidopterous insects, with which it has been considered conterminous, though the old Noctuæ or Noctuælites have been divided into no fewer than twenty two families by some writers. The name is now restricted to moths having the following technical characters: antennæ with very short cilia, rarely demipectinate in the male, simple and filiform in the female; palpi little ascending, with long second and very short third joint; thorax hairy, subquadrate, with rounded, not very distinct collar; abdomen smooth, a little depressed, ending in a tuft cut squarely in the male, obtusely cylindroconic in the female; upper wings entire, obtuse at tip, slightly glistening with spots always distinct; and legs strong, moderately clothed, with the feet almost always spinulose. The larvæ are thick and cylindric, a little swollen behind, with a globular head of moderate size. They live upon low plants, and hide during the day under brush and dry leaves. They hibernate, and pupate in the spring underground without spinning any silk. Nine subgenera of Noctua as thus defined are recognized by Guenée, all erected into genera by many other authors. The genus Noctua in this sense is represented in Europe and America. (c) In ornith., a genus of owls named by Savigny in 1809. It has been used for various generic types of Strigidæ, but is especially a synonym of Athene. The common small sparrow-owl is Noctua passerina, or Athene noctua.

noctuary (nok′tū-ā-ri), n.; pl. noctuaries (-riz). [< L. nox (noct-) (collat. form of abl., noctu), night, + -ary. Cf. diary.] An account of what passes in the night: the converse of diary. [Rare.]

I have got a parcel of visions and other miscellanies in my noctuary, which I shall send to enrich your paper with. Addison, Spectator, No. 586.

noctuid (nok′tū-id), n. and a. I. n. A noctuid moth; one of the Noctuidæ.

II. a. Pertaining to the Noctuidæ. Also noctuidous.

Noctuidæ (nok-tū′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Noctua + -idæ.] 1. An extensive family of nocturnal lepidopterous insects, typified by the genus Noctua, and corresponding to the Linnean section Phalæna noctua. It is a very large and universally distributed group, comprising over 1,500 species in the United States and 1,000 species in Europe. They are in general stout-bodied moths, with crested thorax, stout palpi, and simple antennæ. The larvæ are usually naked, and many species are noted pests to agriculture. By some authors this group has been made a superfamily, as Noctuæ or Noctuites, and divided into more than 50 families.

2. One of the many families into which the superfamily Noctuæ (see Noctuidæ) has been divided by some authors, notably by Guenée, containing the important genera Agrotis, Tryphæna, and Noctua. The characters of this group are not very marked, but most of the species bear spines upon the fore tibiæ.

noctuidous (nok-tū′i-dus), a. Noctuid. Also noctuideous.

noctuiform (nok′tū-i-fôrm), a. [< NL. Noctua + L. forma, form.] 1. Having the form or characters of a noctuid moth; of or pertaining to the Noctuidæ in a broad sense.—2. Resembling a noctuid moth, as an owl-gnat (a dipterous insect).

Noctuiformes (nok-tū-i-fôr′mēz), n. pl. [NL.: see noctuiform.] A tribe of nemocerous dipterous insects; the owl-gnats. See Psychodidæ.

Noctuina (nok-tū-ī′nạ), n. pl. [NL., < Noctua + -ina.] 1. In entom., same as Noctuidæ.—2. In ornith., a subfamily of Strigidæ, named from the genus Noctua. Vigors, 1825.

noctule (nok′tūl), n. [< F. noctule, dim., < L. nox (noct-), night: see night.] 1. A bat of the genus Noctilio or family Noctilionidæ. Cuvier.—2. Vespertilio or Vesperugo noctula, the largest British species of bat, being nearly 3 inches long without the tail, which is fully 1½ inches. It is found chiefly in the south of England, and is seen on the wing during only a short part of the year, retiring early in autumn to hollow trees, caves, or under the eaves of buildings, where many are sometimes found together.

nocturn (nok′tėrn), a. and n. [< ME. nocturne, a., < OF. nocturne, F. nocturne = Sp. Pg. nocturno = It. notturno, < L. nocturnus, pertaining to night, of the night, nightly, < nox (noct-), night, noctu, by night: see night. Cf. diurn.]

I.† a. Of the night; nightly. Ancren Riwle.

II. n. 1. In the early Christian ch., one of several services recited at midnight or between midnight and dawn, and consisting chiefly of psalms and prayers. Later, in both the Greek and Latin churches, these were said just before daybreak, as one service, including both matins and lauds. In the Roman Catholic Church, matins consist sometimes of only one nocturn, and sometimes of three. See matin, 2.

2. The part of the psalter used at nocturns, or the division used at each nocturn.—3. Same as nocturne, 1.

Nocturna (nok-tėr′nä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of L. nocturnus, pertaining to night, of the night: see nocturn.] In Latreille's system of classification, the nocturnal lepidopters proper, or the moths corresponding to the Linnean genus Phalæna, or to the modern Lepidoptera heterocera exclusive of the sphinxes and zygænids (or Crepuscularia). The group was divided into six sections, Bombycites, Noctuo-Bombycites, Noctuælites, Phalænites, Pyralites, and Pterophorites.

Nocturnæ (nok-tėr′nē), n. pl. [NL., fem. pl. of L. nocturnus, pertaining to night: see nocturn.] A section of raptorial birds, including but one family, the Strigidæ, or owls: contrasted with Diurnæ.

nocturnal (nok-tėr′nal), a. [= Sp. nocturnal, < LL. nocturnalis, < L. nocturnus, of the night: see nocturn. Cf. diurnal.] 1. Of or pertaining to the night; belonging to the night; used, done, or occurring at night: as, nocturnal cold; a nocturnal visit: opposed to diurnal.

> The virtuous Youth, of this Commission glad,
> Thought the nocturnal hours all clogg'd with lead.
> J. Beaumont, Psyche, i. 124.

2. Of or pertaining to a nocturn.—3. In zoöl., active by night: as, nocturnal lepidopter.—Nocturnal arc. See arc[1].—Nocturnal birds of prey, the owls. See Nocturnæ.—Nocturnal cognition†, dial, etc. See the nouns.—Nocturnal flowers, flowers which open only in the night or twilight.—Nocturnal Lepidoptera, moths. See Nocturna.—Nocturnal sight. Same as day-blindness.=Syn. 1 and 3. See nightly.

nocturnally (nok-tėr′nal-i), adv. By night; nightly.

nocturne (nok′tėrn), n. [Also nocturn; < F. nocturne = Pr. nocturn = Sp. Pg. nocturno = It. notturno, < L. nocturnus, of the night: see nocturn.] 1. In painting, a night-piece; a painting exhibiting some of the characteristic effects of night-light.

> The illumination of a nocturne differs in no respect from that of a day scene. Quarterly Rev., CXXVII. 111.

2. In music, a composition, properly instrumental, which is intended to embody the dreamy sentiments appropriate to the evening or the night; a pensive and sentimental melody; a reverie; a serenade. The style of composition and the term are peculiar to the romantic school. Also notturno.

nocturnograph (nok-tėr′nō-gräf), n. [< L. nocturnus, of the night, + Gr. γράφειν, write.] An instrument employed in factories, mines, etc., for recording events occurring in the night, such as the firing of boilers, opening and shutting of gates and doors, times of beginning or ending certain operations, etc., or as a check upon the performance of duty by watchmen or operatives left in charge of work. The Engineer, LXV. 207.

Nocua (nok′ū-ä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of L. nocuus, noxious: see nocuous.] Nocuous serpents as a division of Ophidia: contrasted with Innocua. Also called Thanatophidia.

nocument† (nok′ū-ment), n. [< ML. nocumentum, < L. nocere, harm, hurt: see nocent. For the form, cf. document.] Harm; injury. Bp. Bale.

> That he himselfe had no power to auert or alter, not to speake of his enigmaticall answers, snares, not instructions, nocuments, not documents vnto him.
> Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 330.

nocuous (nok′ū-us), a. [= It. nocuo, < L. nocuus, injurious, noxious, < nocere, harm, hurt: see nocent.] 1. Noxious; hurtful.

> Though the basilisk be a nocuous creature.
> Swan, Speculum Mundi, p. 487.

2. Specifically, venomous or poisonous, as a serpent; thanatophidian; of or pertaining to the Nocua.

nocuously (nok′ū-us-li), adv. In a nocuous manner; hurtfully; injuriously.

nod (nod), v.; pret. and pp. nodded, ppr. nodding. [< ME. nodden (not in AS.); cf. G. dial. freq. notteln, shake, wag, jog, akin to OHG. hnōtōn, nuotōn, shake. Hence nidnod. The root seen in L. nuere* (pp. nutus*), nod (in comp. abnuere, etc.), is appar. unrelated: see nutant.]

I. intrans. 1. To incline or droop the head forward with a short, quick, involuntary motion, as when drowsy or sleepy; specifically, in bot., to droop or curve downward by a short bend in the peduncle: said of flowers. See nodding, p. a.

> It is but dull business for a lonesome elderly man like me to be nodding, by the hour together, with no company but his air-tight stove. Hawthorne, Seven Gables, iv.

2. Figuratively, to be guilty of a lapse or inadvertence, as when nodding with drowsiness.

> Nor is it Homer nods, but we that dream.
> Pope, Essay on Criticism, l. 180.
>
> Scientific reason, like Homer, sometimes nods.
> Huxley, Nineteenth Century, XXI. 196.

3. To salute, beckon, or express assent by a slight, quick inclination of the head.

> Cassius is
> A wretched creature, and must bend his body
> If Cæsar carelessly but nod on him.
> Shak., J. C., i. 2. 118.
>
> Nod to him, elves, and do him courtesies.
> Shak., M. N. D., iii. 1. 177.

4. To bend or incline the top or part corresponding to the head with a quick jerky motion, simulating the nodding of a drowsy person.

> Sometime we see a . . . blue promontory
> With trees upon 't, that nod unto the world,
> And mock our eyes with air.
> Shak., A. and C., iv. 14. 6.
>
> Th' affrighted hills from their foundations nod,
> And blaze beneath the lightnings of the god.
> Pope, Iliad, xvii. 672.
>
> Green hazels o'er his basnet nod. Scott, L. of L. M., i. 25.

II. trans. 1. To incline or bend, as the head or top.—2. To signify by a nod: as, to nod assent.

> Craggy Cliffs, that strike the Sight with Pain,
> And nod impending Terrors o'er the Plain.
> Congreve, Taking of Namure.

3. To affect by a nod or nods in a manner expressed by a word or words connected: as, to nod one out of the room; to nod one's head off.

> Cleopatra
> Hath nodded him to her.
> Shak., A. and C., iii. 6. 66.

nod (nod), n. [< nod, v.] 1. A short, quick, forward and downward motion of the head, either voluntary, as when used as a familiar salutation, a sign of assent or approbation, or given as a signal, command, etc., or involuntary, as when one is drowsy or sleepy.

> They sometimes, from the private nods and ambiguous orders of their prince, perform some odious or execrable action. Bacon, Political Fables, vi., Expl.
>
> A look or a nod only ought to correct them, when they do amiss. Locke, Education, § 77.
>
> A mighty King I am, an earthly God; > Nations obey my Word, and wait my Nod.
> Prior, Solomon, ii.
>
> With a nod of his handsome head and a shake of the reins on black Bob, he is gone.
> W. M. Baker, New Timothy, p. 292.

2. A quick forward or downward inclination of the upper part or top of anything.

> Like a drunken sailor on a mast,
> Ready, with every nod, to tumble down.
> Shak., Rich. III., iii. 4. 102.

The land of nod, the state of sleep: a humorous allusion to "the land of Nod on the east of Eden" (Gen. iv. 16). [Colloq.]

Noda (nō′dä), n. [NL. (Schellenberg, 1803), < Gr. νωδός, toothless, < νη- priv. + ὀδούς = E. tooth.] In entom.: (a) Same as Phora. (b) A wide-spread and important genus of Chrysomelidæ, characterized by the shape of the scutellum, which is as broad as it is long and very obtuse, becoming almost circular.

nodal (nō′dal), a. [< node + -al.] Pertaining to a node or to nodes; nodated.—Nodal cell, in the Characeæ, the lowest of an axile row of three cells of which the oögonium, at an early stage of its development

Nodal Cell.—Vertical sections of developing carpogonium of Nitella flexilis, at different stages.

1. Very early stage: a, supporting cell; b, nodal cell; c, central cell; d, d, rudimentary enveloping cells. 2. Later stage (letters as above). In fig. 2 the enveloping cells d, d have almost completely inclosed the central cell c.

and fertilization, consists.—Nodal cone, the tangent cone of a surface, at a node.—Nodal curve, in math., a curve upon a surface, upon which curve every section of the surface has a node, so that the surface has more than one tangent plane at every point of the nodal curve; a curve along which the surface cuts itself.—Nodal figure, a curve formed by the nodal lines of a plate.—Nodal lines, lines of absolute or comparative rest which exist on the surface of an elastic body, as a plate or membrane, whose parts are in a state of vibration. Their existence is shown by sprinkling sand on the vibrating plate. During its motion the sand is thrown off the vibrating parts and accumulates in the nodal lines. The figures thus produced were discovered and studied by Chladni, and are hence called Chladni's figures; they are always highly symmetrical, and the variety, according to the shape of the plate, the way it is supported and set vibrating, etc., is very great.—Nodal locus. See locus.—Nodal points, those points in a vibrating body (as a string extended between two fixed objects) which remain at absolute or comparative rest during the vibration, the portions lying between the nodes being called loops.

Nodal Lines.

nodated (nō′dā-ted), a. [< L. nodatus, pp. of nodare, fill with knots, tie in knots, < nodus, a knot: see node, knot[1].] Knotted.—Nodated hyperbola, in geom., a hyperbola of the third or a higher order with a node.

nodation (nō-dā′shon), n. [< L. nodatio(n-), knottiness, < nodare, fill with knots, tie in knots: see nodate.] The act of making a knot; the state of being knotted. [Rare.]

noddary†, n. [Appar. for noddery*, < nod (or noddy[?]) + -ery.] Foolishness. [Rare.]

> Peoples prostrations of [civil liberties], . . . when they may lawfully helpe it, are prophane prostitutions; ignorant Ideottismes, under naturall noddaries.
> N. Ward, Simple Cobler, p. 51.

nodden† (nod′n), a. [Irreg. < nod + -en[1]; prop. nodded.] Bent; inclined.

> They neither plough nor sow; ne, fit for flail, > E'er to the barn the nodden sheaves they drove.
> Thomson, Castle of Indolence, i. 10.

nodder (nod′ėr), n. [< nod + -er[1].] One who nods, in any sense of that word.

> A set of nodders, winkers, and whisperers. Pope.

nodding (nod′ing), n. [Verbal n. of nod, v.] The act of one who nods: also used attributively: as, a nodding acquaintance (an acquaintance involving no recognition other than a nod).

> I have met him out at dinner, and have a nodding acquaintance with him. E. Yates, Castaway, II. 274.

nodding (nod′ing), p. a. Having a drooping position; bending with a quick motion: as, a nodding plume; specifically, in bot., having a short bend in the peduncle below the flower, causing the latter to face downward; cernuous.

noddingly (nod′ing-li), adv. In a nodding manner; with a nod or nods.

noddipoll†, n. See noddy-poll.

noddle[1] (nod′l), n. [< ME. nodle, nodyl, prob. for orig. knoddel*, dim. of knod* = MD. knodde, a knot, knob, D. knod, a club, cudgel, = G. knoten, a knot, knob: see knot[1]. Cf. knob = nob[1], the head.] 1†. The back part of the head or neck; also, the cerebellum.

> Of that which ordeineth dooe procede—Imaginacion in the forhede, Reason in the braine, Remembrance in the nodel. Sir T. Elyot.
>
> After that fasten cupping glasses to the noddle of the necke. Barrough's Method of Physick (1624). (Nares.)
>
> Occasion . . . turneth a bald noddle after she hath presented her locks in front, and no hold taken.
> Bacon, Delays (ed. 1887).

2. The head.

> I could tell you how, not long before her Death, the late Queen of Spain took off one of her Chapines, and clowted Olivares about the Noddle with it. Howell, Letters, ii. 43.
>
> Come, master, I have a project in my noddle.
> Sir R. L'Estrange.
> These reflections, in the writers of the transactions of the times, seize the noddles of such as were not born to have thoughts of their own. Steele, Tatler, No. 178.

noddle[2] (nod′l), v.; pret. and pp. noddled, ppr. noddling. [Freq. and dim. form of nod. Cf. niddle-noddle.] I. intrans. To make light and frequent nods.

> He walked splay, stooping and noddling.
> Roger North, Lord Guilford, I. 134. (Davies.)

II. trans. To nod or cause to nod frequently.

She noddled her head, was saucy, and said rude things to one's face. Graves, Spiritual Quixote, v. 10.

noddock† (nod′ǫk), n. [Also nodock; appar. the same, with diff. dim. suffix -ock, as noddle.] Same as noddle.

noddy[1] (nod′i), n.; pl. noddies (-iz). [Prob. < nod + -y[1], as if 'sleepy-head'; cf. noddy-poll. Cf. also noddle[1].] 1. A simpleton; a fool.

Hum. What do you think I am?
Jasp. An arrant noddy.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Burning Pestle, ii. 4.

Nay, see; she will not understand him! gull, noddy.
B. Jonson, Alchemist, iv. 2.

2. A large dark-colored tern or sea-swallow of the subfamily Sterninæ and the group Anoëæ or genus Anoüs, found on most tropical and warm-temperate sea-coasts: so called from their apparent stupidity. The several species are much alike, having a sooty-brown or fuliginous plumage, with the top of the head white, the bill and feet black, large pointed wings, and long graduated tail. The common noddy is Anoüs stolidus, which abounds on the southern Atlantic coast of the United States and elsewhere. See cut under Anoüs. 3. The murre, Lomvia troile. [Local, Massachusetts.]—4. The ruddy duck, Erismatura rubida. [New Berne, North Carolina.]—5†. An old game of cards, supposed to have been played like cribbage.

I left her at cards: she'll sit up till you come, because she'll have you play a game at noddy.
Middleton, Blurt, Master-Constable, iii. 2.

Cran. Gentlemen, what shall our game be?
Wend. Master Frankford, you play best at Noddy.
Heywood, Woman Killed with Kindness.

6†. The knave in this game.—7. A kind of four-wheeled cab with the door at the back, formerly in use.

One morning early, Jean-Marie led forth the Doctor's noddy, opened the gate, and mounted to the driving-seat.
R. L. Stevenson, Treasure of Franchard.

noddy[1]† (nod′i), v. t. [< noddy[1], n.] To make a fool of. Davies.

If such an asse be noddied for the nonce,
I say but this to helpe his idle fit,
Let him but thanke himselfe for lacke of wit.
Breton, Pasquil's Fooles-cappe, p. 24.

noddy[2] (nod′i), n. [< nod[1] + -y[1]. Cf. noddy[1].] A device designed to show the oscillation of the support of a pendulum. It consists of an inverted pendulum held in a vertical position by a reed or spring connecting it with its support. The force tending to restore the noddy to the vertical is the excess of the force of the spring over the moment of gravity, and its oscillation is therefore generally slow.

noddy-poll†, n. [Also noddipoll, noddipol, nody-poll; < noddy[1] + poll[1].] A simpleton.

Or els so foolyshe, that a verye nodypoll nydyote myght be ashamed to say it. Sir T. More, Works, p. 709.

noddy-tern (nod′i-tėrn), n. Same as noddy[1], 2.

node (nōd), n. [< F. node, in vernacular uses ★nœud, OF. nod, no, nou = Sp. nodo, in vernacular uses nudo = Pg. It. nodo, < L. nodus, for gnodus*, a knot, = E. knot: see knot[1].] 1. A knot, or what resembles one; a knob; a protuberance. Hence—2. In pathol.: (a) A hard swelling on a ligament, tendon, or bone. (b) A hard concretion or incrustation on a joint affected with gout or rheumatism. Specifically—3. In anat., a joint, articulation, or condyle, as one of the knuckles of the hand, bones being usually enlarged at their articular ends, thus constituting nodes or knotted parts between slenderer portions technically called internodes.—4. In entom., any knot-like part or organ. Specifically—(a) The basal segment of an insect's abdomen when it is short and strongly constricted before and behind, so as to be distinctly separated, not only from the thorax, but from the rest of the abdomen. The term is especially used in describing ants, some species of which have the second abdominal ring constricted in the same manner, forming a second node behind the first. (b) A notch in the anterior margin of the wing of a dragon-fly where the marginal and costal veins meet and appear to be knotted together.

5. In bot., the definite part of a stem which normally bears a leaf, or a whorl of leaves, or in cryptogams, such as Equisetum and Chara, the points on the stem at which foliar organs of various kinds are borne. See cut in next column.—6. In astron., one of the points in which two great circles of the celestial sphere, such as the ecliptic and equator, or the orbit of a planet and the ecliptic, intersect each other; especially, one of the points at which a celestial orbit cuts the plane of the ecliptic. The node at which a heavenly body passes or appears to pass to the north of the plane of the orbit or great circle with which its own orbit or apparent orbit is compared is called the ascending node; that where it descends to the south is called the descending node. (See dragon's head and tail, under dragon.) At the vernal equinox the sun is in its ascending node, at the autumnal equinox in its descending node. The straight line joining the nodes is called the line of nodes.

7. In acoustics, a point or line in a vibrating body, whether a stretched string or membrane, a solid rod, plate, or bell, or a column of air, which, when the body is thrown into vibration, remains either absolutely or relatively at rest: opposed to loop.—8. Figuratively, a knot; an entanglement. [Rare.]

There are characters which are continually creating collisions and nodes for themselves in dramas which nobody is prepared to act with them.
George Eliot, Middlemarch, xix.

9. In dialing, a point or hole in the gnomon of a dial, by the shadow of or light through which either the hour of the day in dials without furniture, or the parallels of the sun's declination and his place in the ecliptic, etc., in dials with furniture, are shown.—10. In geom.: (a) A point upon a curve such that any line passing through it cuts the curve at fewer distinct points than lines in general do. At a node a curve has two or more distinct tangents. If two of these are real, the curve appears to cross itself at this point; if they are all imaginary, the point is isolated from the rest of the real part of the curve. (b) A double point of a surface; a point where there is more than one tangent-plane; especially, a conical point where the form of the surface in the infinitesimally distant neighborhood is that of a double cone of any order. But there are other kinds of nodes of surfaces, as trinodes, binodes, and unodes (see these words), as well as nodal curves. See nodal. (c) A point of a surface: so called because it is a node of the curve of intersection of the surface with the tangent-plane at that point. Cayley.—Lunar nodes, the points at which the orbit of the moon cuts the ecliptic.—Nodes of Ranvier, apparent constrictions in the peripheral medullated nerve-fibers, at regular intervals, where the white substance is interrupted.

node-and-flecnode (nōd′and-flek′nōd), n. A singularity of a surface consisting of a double tangent-plane which intersects the surface in a curve having a flecnode at one of the points of tangency.

node-and-spinode (nōd′and-spī′nōd), n. A singularity of a surface consisting of a double tangent-plane having a parabolic contact at one of the points of tangency.

node-couple (nōd′kup″l), n. A pair of points on a surface at which one plane is tangent: so called because a point of tangency of two surfaces is always a node of their curve of intersection.—Node-couple curve, a curve on a surface the locus of all its node-couples.

node-cusp (nōd′kusp), n. A singularity of a plane curve produced by the union of a node, a cusp, an inflection, and a bitangent; a ramphoid cusp.

node-plane (nōd′plān), n. A tangent-plane to a surface. Cayley.

node-triplet (nōd′trip″let), n. A singularity of a surface consisting of a plane which touches the surface in three points.

nodi, n. Plural of nodus.

nodiak (nō′di-ak), n. [Native name.] The Papuan spiny ant-eater, Zaglossus or Acanthoglossus bruijni. It is of more robust form than the common Australian echidna, with a much longer decurved snout, three-clawed feet, and spiny tongue; the color is blackish with white spines. The animal lives in burrows, and subsists on insects. See cut under Echidnidæ.

nodical (nod′i-kal), a. [< node + -ic-al.] In astron., of or pertaining to the nodes: applied to a revolution from a node to the same node again: as, the nodical revolutions of the moon.

nodicorn (nod′i-kôrn), a. [< L. nodus, knot, + cornu = E. horn.] Having nodose antennæ, as certain hemipterous insects.

nodiferous (nō-dif′e-rus), a. [< L. nodus, knot, ★+ ferre = E. bear[1].] In bot., bearing nodes.

nodiform (nō′di-fôrm), a. [< L. nodus, knot, + forma, form.] In entom., having the form of a knot or little swelling: specifically said of a tarsal joint when it is small and partly concealed by the contiguous joints.

Nodosaria (nō-dō-sā′ri-ạ), n. [NL., < L. nodosus, knotty (see nodose), + -aria.] A genus of polythalamic or multilocular foraminifers, typical of the Nodosariidæ. The cells are thrown out from the primitive spherule in linear series so as to form a shell composed of numerous chambers arranged in a straight or curved line. They occur fossil in Chalk, Tertiary, and recent formations.

nodosarian (nō-dō-sā′ri-ạn), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to the genus Nodosaria: applied especially to a stage of development resembling Nodosaria.

II. n. A member of the genus Nodosaria.

Nodosariidæ (nō″dō-sā-rī′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Nodosaria + -idæ.] A family of perforate Foraminifera, typified by the genus Nodosaria.

nodosarine (nō-dō-sā′rin), a. [< Nodosaria + -ine[1].] Pertaining to Nodosaria or the Nodosariidæ, or having their characters.

nodose (nō′dōs), a. [= Pg. It. nodoso, < L. nodosus, knotty, < nodus, a knot: see node.] 1. In bot., knotty or knobby; provided with knots or internal transverse partitions, as the leaves of some species of Juncus.—2. In zoöl.: (a) Having a node or nodes: said of a longitudinal body which is swollen or dilated at one or more points. (b) Having knot-like swellings on the surface.—Nodose antennæ, in entom., antennæ having one, two, or more enlarged and knot-like joints, the others being slender.

nodosity (nō-dos′i-ti), n.; pl. nodosities (-tiz). [= F. nodosité = It. nodosità, < LL. nodositas, nodosity, < L. nodosus, knotty: see nodose.] 1. The state or quality of being nodose or knotty; knottiness.—2. A knotty swelling or protuberance; a knot.

No, no; . . . it [Croft's Life of Young] is not a good imitation of Johnson; it has all his pomp without his force; it has all the nodosities of the oak without its strength; it has all the contortions of the sibyl without the inspiration. Burke, in Prior, xvi.

nodous (nō′dus), a. [< L. nodosus, knotty: see nodose.] Knotty; full of knots. [Rare.]

This [the ring-finger] is seldom or last of all affected with the gout, and when that becometh nodous, men continue not long after. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iv. 4.

nodular (noḏ′ū-lạr), a. [< nodule + -ar[3].] Pertaining to or in the form of a nodule or knot; consisting of nodules.—Nodular iron ore. Same as eaglestone.

nodularious (noḏ-ū-lā′ri-us), a. [< nodule + -arious.] Having nodules; characterized by small knots or lumps.

nodulated (noḏ′ū-lā-ted), a. [< nodule + -ate[1] + -ed[2].] Having nodules; nodose.

On the hard palate . . . was an irregularly raised patch of nodulated character. Lancet, No. 3457, p. 1119.

nodulation (noḏ-ū-lā′shọn), n. [< nodule + -ation.] The state of being nodulated; also, the process of becoming nodulated.

The nodulation of the material may go on in that position. Science, XIII. 146.

nodule (noḏ′ūl), n. [< L. nodulus, a little knot, dim. of nodus, a knot: see node.] A little knot or lump. Specifically—(a) In anat., the anterior end of the inferior vermiform process of the cerebellum, projecting into the fourth ventricle, in front of the uvula. Also called laminated tubercle and nodulus. (b) In entom., a small rounded elevation on a surface; a tubercle. (c) In bot., the strongly refractive thickening to be observed on the valval side of many diatom frustules, occurring in the middle and at the end of the central clear space not occupied by the transverse striæ. (d) In geol., a rounded, variously shaped mineral mass: a form of concretionary structure frequently seen, especially in clay and argillaceous limestones. The earthy carbonate of iron (clay-ironstone), an important ore, very commonly occurs in the nodular form. The common clay-stones called fairy-stones in Scotland, clay dogs in America, and Loess-männchen in Germany, furnish a good illustration. The nucleus of all these is often some organized substance, as a piece of sponge, a shell, a fish, or the excrement of fishes or other animals; but sometimes an inorganic fragment serves as the center. Nodules, as of troilite, graphite, etc., often occur in masses of meteoric iron. See meteorite.—Lymphoid nodules. See lymphoid.—Nodules of Arantius. See corpora Arantii, under corpus.

noduled (noḏ′ūld), a. [< nodule + -ed[2].] Having little knots or lumps.

Dissect with hammers fine
The granite rock, the nodul'd flint calcine.
Dr. E. Darwin, Botanical Garden, i. 2. 298. (Latham.)

noduli, n. Plural of nodulus.

noduliferous (noḍ-ū-lif′e-rus), a. [< L. nodulus, a little knot, + ferre = E. bear[1].] Having or bearing nodules.

noduliform (noḍ′ū-li-fôrm), a. [< L. nodulus, a little knot, + forma, form.] In the form of a nodule; bearing nodules or knots.

nodulose, nodulous (noḍ′ū-lōs, -lus), a. [< NL. nodulosus, < L. nodulus, a little knot: see nodule.] In bot., having little knots; knotty.

nodulus (noḍ′ū-lus), n.; pl. noduli (-lī). [NL., < L. nodulus, a little knot: see nodule.] In anat., a nodule. For specific use as the name of part of the cerebellum, see nodule (a).

nodus (nō′dus), n.; pl. nodi (-dī). [L., a knot, node: see node.] 1. A knot.—2. In music, an enigmatical canon.—Nodus cursorius, a name given by Nothnagel to a part of the caudate nucleus lying at about the middle of its length. The mechanical or chemical stimulation of this point is stated by him to produce forced movements of leaping and running either straight forward or in a circle.

Nœggerathia (neg-e-rā′thi-ạ), n. [NL., named after J. Nöggerath, a German mining engineer and geologist (1788–1877).] A genus of fossil plants described by Sternberg (1822), found in the European coal-measures, but only rarely, and in regard to the affinities of which there have been much doubt and discussion. Some of the latest authorities place it among the Cycadaceæ. The nervation of the leaves bears considerable resemblance to that of the gingko-tree. Lesquereux describes certain fossil plants occurring in the coal-measures of the Appalachian trough, which more nearly resemble Nœggerathia than do any others found in the United States, under the generic name of Whittleseya.

Noël, n. See Nowel[1].

noematic (nō-ē-mat′ik), a. [< Gr. νόημα, a perception, a thought, understanding, < νοεῖν, see, perceive, < νόος, νοῦς, perception, mind: see nous.] Of or pertaining to the understanding; mental; intellectual.

noematical (nō-ē-mat′i-kạl), a. [< noematic + -al.] Same as noematic. Cudworth, Morality, iv. 3.

noematically (nō-ē-mat′i-kạl-i), adv. In the understanding or mind. Dr. H. More, Immortality of the Soul, i. 2.

noemics (nō-em′iks), n. [< Gr. νόημα, a perception (see noematic), + -ics.] The science of the understanding; intellectual science. [Rare.]

Noëtian (nō-ē′shiạn), a. and n. [< Gr. Νοητός, Noëtus (see def.), + -ian.] I. a. Of or pertaining to Noëtus or Noëtianism.

II. n. A follower of Noëtus of Smyrna in Asia Minor, who about A. D. 200 founded a Monarchian sect or school, and taught a form of Patripassianism.

Noëtianism (nō-ē′shiạn-izm), n. [< Noëtian + -ism.] The teachings of Noëtus or of the Noëtians. See Noëtian.

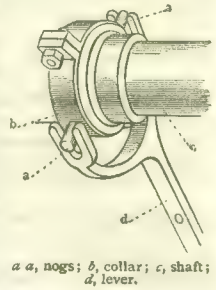
noëtic (nō-et′ik), a. [< Gr. νοητικός, quick of perception, < νόησις, a perception, νοητός, perceivable, also perceiving, < νοεῖν, perceive, see, < νόος, νοῦς, perception, understanding, mind: see nous.] Relating to, performed by, or originating in the intellect.

I would employ the word noetic . . . to express all those cognitions that originate in the mind itself.
Sir W. Hamilton, Metaph., xxxviii.



Noëtic world, the archetypal world of Plato.

noëtical (nō-et′i-kạl), a. [< noëtic + -al.] Same as noëtic.

no-eye pea (nō′ī pē). A variety of pulse produced by the shrub Cajan Cajan. [Jamaica.]

ncf†. A contraction of ne of, not of or nor of.

nog[1] (nog), n. [A var. of knag; cf. Sw. knagg, a knot, knag, = Dan. knag, knage, a knot, a wooden peg, the cog of a wheel: see knag.] 1. A wooden pin; specifically, in ship-carp., a treenail driven through the heel of each shore that supports the ship on the slip.—2. One of the pins or combinations of pins and antifriction rollers in the lever of a clutch-coupling, attached to the inner sides of the bifurcations of the clutch-lever, and working in a groove turned in and entirely around the movable part of the clutch, for sliding the latter along the feather of the rotating shaft to engage it with its counterpart on the shaft to be rotated.—3. A brick-shaped piece of wood inserted in an internal wall; a timber-brick.—4. In mining, a cog; a square block of wood used to build up a chock or cogpack for supporting the roof in a coal-mine.—5. pl. The shank-bones. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

a a, nogs; b, collar; c, shaft; d, lever.

nog[2] (nog), v. t.; pret. and pp. nogged, ppr. nogging. [< nog[1], n.] 1. In ship-carp., to secure by a nog or treenail.—2. To fill with brickwork. See nogging.

nog[2] (nog), n. [Abbr. of noggin.] 1. A little pot; a mug; a noggin.—2. A kind of strong ale.

Dog Walpole laid a quart of nog on 't
He 'd either make a hog or dog on 't.
Swift, Upon the Horrid Plot.

Norfolk nog, a strong kind of ale brewed in Norfolk, England.

Here's Norfolk nog to be had at next door.
Vanbrugh, Journey to London, i. 2.

noggen (nog′n), a. [< nog-s + -en[2].] 1. Made of nogs or hemp. Hence—2. Thick; clumsy; rough. [Prov. Eng. in both uses.]

noggin (nog′in), n. [Also knoggin, and in other forms naggin, knaggie; connected with nog, knog, knag, a pin, a short thick piece, Dan. knag, a peg, Sw. knagg, a peg, knot, cog, wooden handle, etc.: see knag.] 1. A vessel of wood; also, a mug or similar vessel of any material.

The furniture of this Caravansera consisted of a large iron Pot, two oaken Tables, two Benches, two Chairs, and a Potheen Noggin. Carlyle, Sartor Resartus, p. 196.

2. The contents of such a vessel; a small amount of liquor, as much as might suffice for one person.

The sergeant . . . brought up his own mug of beer, into which a noggin of gin had been put.
Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, xxxiv.

3. One end of a keg that has been sawn into halves, used for various purposes on shipboard.—4. The head; the noddle. [Colloq.]

In ship-carp., the act of securing the heels of the shores with treenails. See nog[1].—Nogging-pieces, horizontal pieces of timber fitting in between the quarters in brick-nogging and nailed to them, for the purpose of strengthening the brickwork. Also noggin.

noggle (nog′l), v. i.; pret. and pp. noggled, ppr. noggling. [Cf. naggle.] To walk awkwardly. [Prov. Eng.]

noggler (nog′lėr), n. An awkward or bungling person. [Prov. Eng.]

noggy (nog′i), a. [Appar. < nog[2] + -y[1].] Tipsy; intoxicated. [Prov. Eng.]

noght†, adv. A Middle English form of naught, not[1].

nogs (nogz), n. [Origin obscure. Hence noggen.] Hemp. [Prov. Eng.]

nohow (nō′how), adv. [< no[2], adv., + how[1].] 1. In no manner; not in any way; not at all. [Colloq.]—2. Out of one's ordinary way; out of sorts. [Slang.]—To look nohow, to be out of countenance or embarrassed. Davies. [Slang.]

I could not speak a word; I dare say I looked no-how.
Mme. D'Arblay, Diary, I. 161.

Then, struck with the peculiar expression of the young man's face, she added "Ain't Mr. B. so well this morning? you look all nohow."
In Dickens, Dr. Marigold's Prescriptions.

noiance†, n. See noyance.

noie†, v. and n. See noy.

noil (noil), n. [Early mod. E. noyle; < OF. noiel, noyel, nuiel, noel, nouyau, a button, buckle; appar. same as noiel, etc., a kernel (see newel[1], newel[2]), but perhaps dim. of nou, < L. nodus, a knot: see node.] The short fiber that is separated from the long fiber in the process of combing wool or cotton. These are used for felting purposes, or are made into inferior yarns, which are put into cloth to increase its thickness. The name is also given to waste silk.

No person shall put any noyles, thrums, etc., or other deceivable thing, into any broad woolen cloth.
Stat. Jac. I., c. 18, quoted in Notes and Queries, 6th ser., [X. 86.

It is the function of the various forms of combing machine now in use to separate the "top" or long fibre from the noil or short and broken wool. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 660.

noil-yarn (noil′yärn), n. An inferior quality of yarn spun from the combings of waste silk or wool.

nokta (nok'tä), n. A rhomboidal mark in a table of logarithms to mark a change of the figure in a certain place of decimals.

Nola (nō'lä), n. [NL.] The typical genus of Nolidæ, founded by Leach in 1819, by him placed in Pyrales, by others referred to Bombyces. The fore wings are short, much widened behind, with moderately pointed tips and a slightly curved hind border; there are patches of raised scales below the costa, in variable number; the hind wings are short, rounded, and unmarked; nervures 3 and 4, 6 and 7 rise on long stalks, or 4 is wanting; and the male antennæ are strongly ciliated or pectinated. The larvæ are broad and flat, with 14 legs and hairy warts. It is a wide-spread genus, rather northern. N. sorghiella feeds on sorghum in the United States.

Nolana (nō-lā'nä), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1762), < LL. nola, a little bell (for a dog); a doubtful word, occurring but once, with a var. nota, a mark, sign, prob. the right form.] A genus of dicotyledonous sympetalous plants, type of the family Nolanaceæ, characterized by the broadly bell-shaped angled corolla and basilar style. There are about 20 species, of Chile and Peru, mainly maritime. They are prostrate or spreading plants with undivided leaves and bluish flowers in the axils. They are sometimes called Chilean bell-flower. N. atriplicifolia, with sky-blue flowers, having white and yellow center, is the most frequently cultivated.

Nolanaceæ (nō-la-nā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Dumortier, 1829), < Nolana + -aceæ.] A family of dicotyledonous sympetalous plants, typified by the genus Nolana, and distinguished by the plicate corolla and fruit divided into nutlet-like lobes. Three genera and 50 species are known, all natives of South America. They are herbs or shrubs with alternate leaves without stipules. Now regarded as intermediate between the Menthaceæ and Solanaceæ.

nold†. A contraction of ne wolde, would not.

nole†, n. See noll.

nolens volens (nō'lenz vō'lenz). [L.: nolens, ppr. of nolle, be unwilling (see nolition); volens, ppr. of velle, be willing: see volition.] Unwilling (or) willing; willy-nilly.

Nolidæ (nol'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Nola + -idæ.] A family of moths named from the genus Nola.

noli-me-tangere (nō'lī-mē-tan'jē-rē), n. [< L. noli me tangere, touch me not; noli, 2d pers. impv. of nolle, not wish, be unwilling (see nolition); me = E. me; tangere, touch (see tangent). Cf. touch-me-not.] 1. In bot.: (a) A plant, Impatiens Noli-tangere. (b) A plant of the genus Ecballium, the wild or squirting cucumber. —2. In med., a lupus or epithelioma or other eroding ulcer of the face; more especially, lupus of the nose.—3. A picture representing Jesus appearing to St. Mary Magdalene after his resurrection, as related in John xx.

nolition (nō-lish'on), n. [= F. nolition = Sp. nolición = Pg. nolição; < L. nolle (1st pers. sing. pres. ind. nolo), be unwilling (< ne, not, + velle, will), + -ition. Cf. volition. Cf. LL. nolentia, unwillingness.] Unwillingness: the opposite of volition. [Rare.]

There are many that pray against a temptation for a month together, and so long as the prayer is fervent, so long the man hath a nolition, and a direct enmity against the lust. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 640.

noll† (nol), n. [Also nole, nowl, noul, noule; < ME. nol, noll, nolle, the head, neck, < AS. hnol, (hnoll-) = OHG. hnol, nollo = MHG. nol, the top of the head.] 1. The head.

Though this be derklich endited ffor a dull nolle, Miche nede is it not to mwse there-on.
Richard the Redeless, i. 20.

Then came October full of merry glee;
For yet his noule was totty of the must,
Which he was treading in the wine-fats see.
Spenser, F. Q., VII. vii. 39.

2. Head-work; hard study.

Then I would desire Mr. Dean and Mr. Leaver to remit the scholars a day of noule and punishment, that they might remember me.
Ascham, To the Fellows of St. John's, Oct., 1551.

nolle (nol'e), v. i. [< nolle (prosequi).] To enter a nolle prosequi.

nolleity (no-lē'i-ti), n. [< L. nolle, be unwilling (see nolition), + -e-ity.] Unwillingness; nolition. Roget. [Rare.]

nolle prosequi (nol'e pros'e-kwī). [L.: nolle, be unwilling; prosequi, follow after, prosecute: see nolition and prosequi.] In law: (a) in civil actions, an acknowledgment by the plaintiff that he will not further prosecute his suit, as to the whole or a part of the cause of action, or against some or one of several defendants (Bingham); (b) in criminal cases, a declaration of record from the legal representative of the government that he will no further prosecute the particular indictment or some designated part thereof (Bishop). Abbreviated nol. pros.

nolo contendere (nō'lō kon-ten'dē-rē). [L.: nolo, 1st pers. sing. pres. ind. of nolle, be unwilling; contendere, contend: see contend.] In criminal law, a plea equivalent, as against the prosecution, to that of "guilty." It submits to the punishment, but does not admit the facts alleged.

nom[1]†. A preterit of nim[1].

nom[2] (nôn), n. [F., < L. nomen, a name: see nomen.] Name.—Nom de guerre. [F., lit. a war-name.] (a†) Formerly, in France, a name taken by a soldier on entering the service. Hence—(b) A fictitious name temporarily assumed for any purpose.

Jane Clifford was her name, as books aver;
Fair Rosamond was but her nom de guerre.
Dryden, Epil. to Henry II., l. 6.

Nom de plume. [F., lit. a pen-name; a phrase invented in England, in imitation of nom de guerre, and not used in France.] A pseudonym used by a writer instead of his real name; a signature assumed by an author.

nom. An abbreviation of nominative.

noma (nō'mä), n.; pl. nomæ (-mē). [NL., < Gr. νομή, a spreading, a corroding sore: see nome[6].] In med., a gangrenous ulceration of the mouth or of the pudendal labia in children; when affecting the mouth, called also gangrenous stomatitis, or cancrum oris. Also nome.

nomad (nom'ad), a. and n. [Also nomade; = G. Dan. nomade = Sw. nomad = F. nomade = Sp. nómada, nómade = Pg. It. nomade, < L. nomas (nomad-), < Gr. νομάς (νομαδ-), roaming or roving (like herds of cattle), grazing, feeding, < νέμειν, pasture, drive to pasture, distribute: see nome[4].] I. a. Wandering: same as nomadic.

II. n. A wanderer; specifically, one of a wandering tribe; one of a pastoral tribe of people who have no fixed place of abode, but move about from place to place according to the state of the pasturage; hence, a member of any roving race.

The Numidian nomades, so named of chaunging their pasture, who carrie their cottages or sheddes (and those are all their dwelling houses) about with them upon waines.
Holland, tr. of Pliny, v. 3.

Nomada (nom'ą-dä), n. [NL. (Fabricius, 1775), < Gr. νομάς (νομαδ-), nomad: see nomad.] A genus of naked bees or cuckoo-bees of the family Apidæ and the subfamily Cuculinæ. It is of large extent, over 70 species occurring in North America alone. The body is of graceful form, almost entirely naked, and ornamented with pale markings; the abdomen is subsessile; the legs are sparsely pubescent, if at all so; the scutellum is often obtusely bituberculate, but has no lateral teeth; and the stigma is well developed and lanceolate. The female places her eggs in the cells of Andrena.

nomade (nom'ād), a. and n. Same as nomad.

nomadian (nō-mā'di-an), n. [< nomad + -ian.] A nomad. North Brit. Rev. [Rare.]

nomadic (nō-mad'ik), a. [< Gr. νομαδικός, belonging to pasturage or to the life of a herdsman, pastoral, < νομάς (νομαδ-), nomad: see nomad.] 1. Wandering; roving; leading the life of a nomad: specifically applied to pastoral tribes that have no fixed abode, but wander about from place to place according to the state of the pasturage.

The Nomadic races, who wander with their herds and flocks over vast plains.
W. B. Carpenter, Prin. of Physiol. (1853), § 1040.

2. Figuratively, wandering; changeable; unsettled.

The American is nomadic in religion, in ideas, in morals, and leaves his faith and opinions with as much indifference as the house in which he was born.
Lowell, Fireside Travels, p. 97.

nomadically (nō-mad'i-kal-i), adv. [< nomadic + -al + -ly[2].] In a nomadic manner: as, to live nomadically.

nomadise, v. i. See nomadize.

nomadism (nom'ạ-dizm), n. [= F. nomadisme; as nomad + -ism.] The state of being a nomad; nomadic habits or tendencies.

The struggles which anciently arose between nomadism and the immature civilizations exposed to its encroachments. Amer. Anthropologist, I. 17.

nomadize (nom'ạ-dīz), v. i.; pret. and pp. nomadized, ppr. nomadizing. [= F. nomadiser; as nomad + -ize.] To live a nomadic life; wander about from place to place with flocks and herds for the sake of finding pasturage; subsist by the grazing of herds on herbage of natural growth. Also spelled nomadise.

nomancy† (nō'man-si), n. [< F. nomancie (= Sp. nomancia), abbr. from onomancie (see onomancy), appar. by confusion with F. nom, name.] The art or practice of divining the destiny of persons by the letters which form their names. Johnson.

no-man's-land (nō'manz-land), n. 1. A tract or district to which no one can lay a recognized or established claim; a region which is the subject of dispute between two parties; debatable land. See debatable.

Some observers have established an intermediate kingdom, a sort of no-man's-land, for the reception of those debatable organisms which cannot be definitely and positively classed either amongst vegetables or amongst animals. H. A. Nicholson.

2. Same as Jack's land (which see, under Jack[1]).

★—3. A fog-bank.

nomarch (nom'ärk), n. [= F. nomarque, < Gr. νομάρχης, the chief or governor of a province, < νομός, a province, + ἀρχειν, rule.] The governor or prefect of a nome or department in modern Greece.

nomarchy (nom'är-ki), n.; pl. nomarchies (-kiz). [< Gr. νομαρχία, the office or government of a nomarch, < νομάρχης, a nomarch: see nomarch.] A government or department under a nomarch, as in modern Greece; the jurisdiction of a nomarch.

nomarthral (nō-mär'thral), a. [< Gr. νόμος, law, + ἄρθρον, a joint: see arthral.] Normally articulated; not having the dorsolumbar vertebral joints peculiar: applied to the edentates of the Old World, in distinction from those of the New World, which are xenarthral. T. Gill, Stand. Nat. Hist., V. 66.

nombles†, n. See numbles.

nombre†, n. and v. An obsolete form of number.

nombril (nom'bril), n. [< F. nombril, < L. umbilicus, navel: see numbles and umbilicus.] In her., same as navel point (which see, under navel).

E, fesse-point; F, nombril; G, base-point.

nome[1]†, n. An obsolete form of name.

nome[2]†, a. and v. An obsolete form of numb (original past participle of nim[1]).

nome[3] (nōm), n. [< F. nôme (in alg.), < L. nomen, a name: see nomen, name[1].] In alg., a term.

nome[4] (nōm), n. [< F. nome = Pg. nomo, < L. nomus, nomos, < Gr. νομός, a district, department, province, < νέμειν, deal out, distribute, have and hold, use, dwell in, pasture, graze, etc.: see nim[1].] A province or other political division of a country, especially of modern Greece and ancient Egypt.

Coins of the nomes of Egypt were struck only by Trajan, Hadrian, and Antoninus Pius. Encyc. Brit., XVII. 651.

nome[5] (nōm), n. [< F. nome = Pg. nomo; < Gr. νόμος, a usage, custom, law, ordinance, a musical strain, a kind of song or ode, < νέμειν, distribute, have and hold, possess, use, etc.: see nome[4].] In anc. Gr. music, a rule or form of melodic composition; hence, a song or melody conforming to such an artistic standard. Also nomos.

Of the choric songs Westphal held that the real model was the old Terpandrian nome. Quarterly Rev., CLXII. 163.

nome[6] (nō'mē), n. [< L. nome, usually in pl. nomæ, < Gr. νομή, a spreading (νομαὶ ἑλκῶν, spreading sores), lit. grazing, < νέμειν, graze: see nome[4].] In pathol., same as noma.

nomen (nō'men), n.; pl. nomina (nom'i-nạ). [L., a name: see name[1].] A name; specifically, a name distinguishing the gens or clan, being the middle one of the three names generally borne by an ancient Roman of good birth: as, Caius Julius Cæsar, of the gens of the Julii; Marcus Tullius Cicero, of the gens of the Tullii. See name. In natural history nomen has specific uses: (a) The technical name of any organism—that is, the name which is tenable according to recognized laws of zoölogical and botanical nomenclature; an onym. (See onym.) (b) Any word which enters into the usual binomial designation of a species of animals or plants; a generic or specific name. In the Linnean nomenclature, the basis of the present systematic nomenclature in zoölogy and botany, nomina were distinguished as the nomen genericum and the nomen triviale.—Nomen genericum, the generic name. See genus.—Nomen nudum, a bare or mere name, unaccompanied by any description, and therefore not entitled to recognition.—Nomen specificum, nomen triviale, the specific or trivial name which, coupled with and following the nomen genericum, completes the technical designation of an animal or a plant. See species.

nomenclative (nō'men-klā-tiv), a. [< nomenclat(ure) + -ive.] Pertaining to naming. Whitney.

nomenclator (nō'men-klā-tọr), n. [= F. nomenclateur = Sp. nomenclátor = Pg. nomenclador = It. nomenclatore, < L. nomenclator, sometimes nomenculator, one who calls by name, < nomen, a name, + calare, call: see calends.] 1. A person who calls things or persons by their names. In ancient Rome candidates canvassing for office, when appearing in public, were attended each by a nomenclator, who informed the candidate of the names of the persons they met, thus enabling him to address them by name.

What, will Cupid turn nomenclator, and cry them? B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v. 3.

Their names are knowne to the all-knowing power above, and in the meane while doubtlesse they wreck not whether you or your Nomenclator know them or not. Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

2. One who or that which gives names, or applies individual or technical names.

Needs must that Name infallible Success Assert, where God the Nomenclator is.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, iii. 86.

3. A list of names arranged alphabetically or in some other system; a glossary; a vocabulary; especially, a list of scientific names so arranged.

nomenclatorial (nō″men-klā-tō'ri-al), a. [< nomenclator + -ial.] Of or pertaining to a nomenclator or to the act of naming; nomenclatory.

It may be advisable to remark that nomenclatorial purists, objecting to the names Pitta and Philepitta as "barbarous," call the former Coloburis and the latter Paictes. A. Newton, Encyc. Brit., XIX. 149.

nomenclatory (nō'men-klā-tō-ri), a. [< nomenclator + -y.] Of or pertaining to naming; naming.

Every conceptual act is so immediately followed as to seem accompanied by a nomenclatory one. Whitney, Life and Growth of Language, p. 189.

nomenclatress (nō'men-klā-tres), n. [< nomenclator + -ess.] A female nomenclator.

I have a wife who is a Nomenclatress, and will be ready, on any occasion, to attend the ladies. Guardian, No. 107.

nomenclatural (nō'men-klā-tū-rạl), a. [< nomenclature + -al.] Pertaining or according to a nomenclature.

nomenclature (nō'men-klā-tūr), n. [= F. nomenclature = Sp. Pg. It. nomenclatura, < L. nomenclatura, a calling by name, a list of names, < nomen, name, + calare, call: see nomenclator.] 1†. A name.

To say where notions cannot fitly be reconciled, that there wanteth a term or nomenclature for it, is but a shift of ignorance. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. A system of names; the systematic naming of things; specifically, the names of things in any art or science, or the whole vocabulary of names or technical terms which are appropriated to any particular branch of science: as, the nomenclature of botany or of chemistry. Compare terminology.

If I could envy any man for successful ill-nature, I should envy Lord Byron for his skill in satirical nomenclature. Sydney Smith, To Lady Holland,

The purposes of natural science require that its nomenclature shall be capable of exact definition, and that every descriptive technical term be rigorously limited to the expression of the precise quality or mode of action to the designation of which it is applied. Marsh, Lects. on Eng. Lang., viii.

3†. A glossary, vocabulary, or dictionary.

There was at the end of the grammar a little nomenclature, called "The Christian Man's Vocabulary," which gave new appellations or (if you will) Christian names to almost everything in life. Addison, Religions in Waxwork.

Binary, binomial, polynomial nomenclature. See the adjectives.—Syn. 3. Dictionary, Glossary, etc. See vocabulary.

Nomia (nō'mi-ạ), n. [NL. (Latreille, 1804), < Gr. νόμιος, of shepherds, pastoral, < νομεύς, a shepherd, < νέμειν, pasture: see nome[4], nomad.] 1. A genus of bees of the family Andrenidæ. The second submarginal cell is quadrate or nearly so, and not narrowed toward the marginal cell; the body is large; the hind legs of the male are more or less deformed; and the apical antennal joint of the male is elongate and not dilated. The curious curvature, dilatation, and spinosity of the male's hind legs distinguish this genus and Eunomia from all other andrenids. There are five North American species.

2. A genus of tineid moths founded by Clemens in May, 1860, and changed in August of that year to Chrysopora, the only species being now called C. lingulacella.

nomial (nō'mi-ạl), n. [< nome[3] + -ial.] In alg., a single name or term.

nomic[1] (nom'ik), a. and n. [< Gr. νομικός, pertaining to the law, conventional, < νόμος, a law, usage, custom: see nome[4].] I. a. Customary or conventional: applied to the present mode of English spelling: opposed to Glossic or phonetic. A. J. Ellis.

II. n. [cap.] The customary or conventional English spelling. See Glossic. A. J. Ellis.

nomic[2] (nom'ik), a. [< nome[5] + -ic. Cf. nomic[1].] Of or pertaining to a nome. See nome[5].

Prof. Mezger has pointed out many cases in which Pindar thus employs a recurrent word to guide the hearer to the proper apprehension of the nomic march in his poems. Quarterly Rev., CLXII. 167.

nomina, n. Plural of nomen.

nominal (nom'i-nạl), a. and n. [= F. nominal = Sp. Pg. nominal = It. nominale, < L. nominalis, pertaining to a name or to names, < nomen, a name: see nomen, name[1].] I. a. 1. Pertaining to a name or term; giving the meaning of a word; verbal: as, a nominal definition.

The nominal definition or derivation of a word is not sufficient to describe the nature of it. Bp. Pearson.

2. Of or pertaining to a noun or substantive. —3. Existing in name only; not real; ostensible; merely so called: as, a nominal distinction or difference; a nominal Christian; nominal assets; a nominal price.

Thus the mind has three sorts of abstract ideas, or nominal essences. Locke, Human Understanding, II. xxxi. 12.

You must have been long enough in this house to see that I am but a nominal mistress of it, that my real power is nothing. Jane Austen, Northanger Abbey, p. 183.

In numerous savage tribes the judicial function of the chief does not exist, or is nominal. H. Spencer, Man vs. State, p. 46.

4. Nominalistic.—Nominal consideration, a consideration so trivial in comparison with the real value as to be substantially equivalent to nothing, and usually named only as a form, without intending payment, as a consideration of one dollar in a deed of lands.—Nominal damages. See damage.—Nominal division, exchange, horse-power, mode, etc. See the nouns.—Nominal party, in law, one named as a party on the record of an action, but having no interest in the action.

II. n. 1†. A nominalist.

Thomists, Reals, Nominals. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 677.

2. A verb formed from a noun; a denominative.

nominalism (nom'i-nạl-izm), n. [= F. nominalisme; as nominal + -ism.] The doctrine that nothing is general but names; more specifically, the doctrine that common nouns, as man, horse, represent in their generality nothing in the real things, but are mere conveniences for speaking of many things at once, or at most necessities of human thought; individualism. Medieval thinkers, especially those of the twelfth century, are classified as being either nominalists or realists; modern philosophers have generally joined in the condemnation of medieval realism, but have nevertheless been mostly rather realists than nominalists. The following are the most important varieties of nominalism: (a) That of the Stoics, who held that the only sort of thing that is not universal, and indeed the only sort that is not corporeal, is the meaning of a word (Gr. λεκτόν, L. dictio) as something different from the actual thought and distinct for each language. (b) That of Roscellin, condemned by the Church in 1092, which, though regarded as novel doctrine by his contemporaries, so that he has often been called the inventor of nominalism, had in substance been taught for two hundred years without attracting any particular attention. His views, so far as we can gather them from the reports of malicious adversaries, in the light of other nominalistic texts, were as follows. Various relations, usually considered as real, such as the relation of a wall to a house as a part of it, have no existence in the things themselves, but are due to the way we think about the things. Colors are nothing over and above the colored bodies. He held that nothing exists but individuals, and according to St. Anselm was "buried in corporal images." His opinion concerning universals was not called nominalism, but the sententia vocum, or vocalism. Anselm states that he held universals to be nothing but the breath of the voice (flatus vocis). This statement should not be hastily put aside as an enemy's misrepresentation, for the authorities agree that he made universals to be, not words, but vocal sounds; and since the breath was in his time and long after hardly regarded as a material thing, he may quite probably have been so "buried in corporal images" as to have confounded the breath of the voice with an incorporeal form, which agrees with a report that he was a follower of the pantheist

Scotus Erigena. (c) That of Peter Abelard (born 1079, died 1142), which consisted in holding that universality resides only in judgments or predications. Yet he not only admits that general propositions may be true of real things by virtue of the similarities of the latter, but also holds to a Platonist doctrine of ideas. Various other kinds of nominalism are allied to that of Abelard, especially the vague modern doctrine called conceptualism (which see). (d) The terminism of the "Venerable Inceptor," William of Occam (lived in the fourteenth century), who held that nothing except individuals exists, whether in or out of the mind, but that concepts (whether existing substantively or only objectively in the mind he does not decide) are natural signs of many things, and in that sense are universal. (e) That of Thomas Hobbes of Malmesbury (born 1588, died 1679), who added to the doctrine of Occam that there are no general concepts, but only images, so that the only universality lies in the association of ideas. This doctrine, followed by Berkeley, Hume, James Mill, and others, is specifically known as nominalism in modern English philosophy, as contradistinguished from conceptualism. (f) That of modern science, which merely denies the validity of the "substantial forms" of the schoolmen, or abstractions not based on any inductive inquiry; but which, far from regarding the uniformities of nature as mere fortuitous similarities between individual events, maintains that they extend beyond the region of observed facts. Properly speaking, this is not nominalism. (g) That of Kant, who maintained that all unity in thought depends upon the nature of the human mind, not belonging to the thing in itself.

nominalist (nom′i-nal-ist), n. [= F. nominaliste; as nominal + -ist.] A believer in nominalism.

nominalistic (nom′i-na-lis′tik), a. [< nominalist + -ic.] Of, pertaining to, or characteristic of nominalism or the nominalists.

nominalize (nom′i-nal-īz), v. t.; pret. and pp. nominalized, ppr. nominalizing. [< nominal + -ize.] To convert into a noun. Instructions for Orators (1682), p. 32.

nominally (nom′i-nal-i), adv. In a nominal manner; by or as regards name; in name; only in name; ostensibly.

This, nominally no tax, in reality comprehends all taxes.
Burke, Late State of the Nation.

Nominally all powerful, he was really less free than a subject. H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 443.

In another half-century Canada might if she chose stand as a nominally independent, as she is now a really independent, state. N. A. Rev., CXLII. 45.

nominate (nom′i-nāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. nominated, ppr. nominating. [< L. nominatus, pp. of nominare (> It. nominare = Sp. nombrar = Pg. nomear = OF. nomer, nommer, F. nommer), name, call by name, give a name to, < nomen, a name: see nomen, and cf. name[1], v.] 1. To name; mention by name.

Sight may distinguish of colours; but suddenly to nominate them all, it is impossible. Shak., 2 Hen. VI., ii. 1. 130.

I have not doubted to single forth more than once such of them as were thought the chiefe and most nominated opposers on the other side.
Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus.

2†. To call; entitle; denominate.

I spoke it, tender juvenal, as a congruent epitheton appertaining to thy young days, which we may nominate tender. Shak., L. L. L., i. 2. 16.

Boldly nominate a spade a spade.
B. Jonson, Poetaster, v. 1.

3. To name or designate by name for an office or place; appoint: as, to nominate an heir or an executor.

It is not to be thought that he which as it were from heaven hath nominated and designed them unto holiness by special privilege of their very birth will himself deprive them of regeneration and inward grace, only because necessity depriveth them of outward sacraments.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 60.

The Earl of Leicester is nominated by his Majesty to go Ambassador Extraordinary to that King and other Princes of Germany. Howell, Letters, I. v. 40.

4. To name for election, choice, or appointment; propose by name, or offer the name of, as a candidate, especially for an elective office. See nomination.—5†. To set down in express terms; express.

Is it so nominated in the bond?
Shak., M. of V., iv. 1. 259.

In order unto that which I have nominated in this behalf and more principally intend, let us take notice.
N. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 291.

Nominating convention. See convention.

nominate (nom′i-nāt), a. [< L. nominatus, pp. of nominare, name: see the verb.] 1. Nominated; of an executor, appointed by the will.

Executor in Scotch law is a more extensive term than in English. He is either nominate or dative, the latter appointed by the court, and corresponding in most respects to the English administrator. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 573.

2. Possessing a nomen juris or legal name or designation; characterized or distinguished by a particular name.—Nominate right, in Scots law, a right that is known and recognized in law, or possesses a nomen juris, which serves to determine its legal character and consequences. Of this sort are those contracts termed loan, commodate, deposit, pledge, sale, etc. Nominate rights are opposed to innominate rights, or those in which the obligation depends upon the terms of the express agreement of the parties.

nominately (nom′i-nāt-li), adv. By name; particularly. Spelman.

nomination (nom-i-nā′shon), n. [= F. nomination = Sp. nominación = Pg. nominação = It. nominazione, < L. nominatio(n-), a naming, < nominare, pp. nominatus: see nominate.] 1. The act of nominating or naming; the act of proposing by name for an office; specifically, the act or ceremony of bringing forward and submitting the name of a candidate, especially for an elective office, according to certain prescribed forms.

I have so far forborne making nominations to fill these vacancies, for reasons which I will now state.
Lincoln, in Raymond, p. 170.

2. The state of being nominated: as, he is in nomination for the post.—3. The power of nominating or appointing to office.

The nomination of persons to places being so principal and inseparable a flower of his crown, he would reserve to himself. Clarendon, Great Rebellion. (Latham.)

4. In Eng. eccles. law, the appointment or presentation of a clergyman to a benefice by the patron.—5†. Denomination; name.

And as these reioysings tend to diuers effects, so do they also carry diuerse formes and nominations.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 37.

Divers characters are given to several persons, by which they are distinguished from all others of the same common nomination, as Jacob is called Israel, and Abraham the friend of God. Bp. Pearson, Expos. of Creed, iii. 3 § 4.

6†. Mention by name; express mention.

I will look again on the intellect of the letter, for the nomination of the party writing to the person written unto. Shak., L. L. L., iv. 2. 138.

nominatival (nom″i-nā-tī′val or nom′i-nā-ti-val), a. [< nominative + -al.] Of or pertaining to the nominative case.

nominative (nom′i-nā-tiv), a. and n. [= F. nominatif = Sp. Pg. It. nominativo, < L. nominativus, serving to name, of or belonging to naming; casus nominativus or simply nominativus, the nominative case; < nominare, pp. nominatus, name: see nominate.] I. a. Noting the subject: applied to that form of a noun or other word having case-inflection which is used when the word is the subject of a sentence, or to the word itself when it stands in that relation: as, the nominative case of a Latin word; the nominative word in a sentence.

II. n. In gram., the nominative case; also, a nominative word. Abbreviated nom.

The nominative hath no other noat but the particle of determination; as, the peple is a beast with manie heades; a horse serves man to manie uses; men in auctoritie sould be lanternes of light.
A. Hume, Orthographie (E. E. T. S.), p. 29.

Nominative absolute. See absolute, 11.

nominatively (nom′i-nā-tiv-li), adv. In the manner or form of a nominative; as a nominative.

nominator (nom′i-nā-tor), n. [= F. nominateur = Sp. nombrador, nominador = Pg. nomeador = It. nominatore, < L. nominator, one who names, < nominare, name: see nominate.] One who nominates, in any sense of that word; especially, one who has the power of nominating or appointing, as to a church living.

The arrangement actually made in Ireland is that every layman who sits in our synods, or who, as a nominator, takes part in the election of incumbents, must be a communicant. Contemporary Rev., XLIX. 308.

nominee (nom-i-nē′), n. [< L. nominare, name, + -ee[1].] 1. One who is nominated, named, or designated, as to an office.—2. In Eng. common law, the person who is named to receive a copyhold estate on surrender of it to the lord; the cestui que use, sometimes called the surrenderee.—3. A person on whose life an annuity depends.

nominor (nom′i-nor), n. [< L. nominare, name, + -or. Cf. nominator.] In law, one who nominates.

The terms of connection . . . between a nominor and a nominee. Bentham, Works (ed. 1843), X. 229.

nomistic (nō-mis′tik), a. [< Gr. νόμος, a law (see nome[4], nomic[1]), + -ist-ic.] Founded on or acknowledging a law or system of laws embodied in a sacred book: as, nomistic religions or communities.

With regard to the ethical religions the question has been mooted—and a rather puzzling question it is—What right have we to divide them into nomistic or nomothetic communities, founded on a law or Holy Scripture, and universal or world religions, which start from principles and maxims, the latter being only three—Buddhism, Christianity, and Mohammedanism?
Encyc. Brit., XX. 368.

nommert, n. and v. An obsolete form of number.

nomocanon (nō-mok′a-non), n. [< LGr. νομοκάνων (MGr. also νομοκάνονον), < Gr. νόμος, law, + κανών, rule, canon: see canon[1].] In the Eastern Ch., a body of canon law with the addition of imperial laws bearing upon ecclesiastical matters. Such a digest was made from previous collections by Johannes Scholasticus, patriarch of Constantinople (564), and afterward by Photius, patriarch of the same see (883), whose collection consists chiefly of the canons recognized or passed by the Quinisext (692) and subsequent councils, and the ecclesiastical legislation of Justinian. The Quinisext council accepted eighty-five apostolic canons, the decrees of the first Nicene and other councils, and the decisions of a number of Eastern prelates of the third, fourth, and fifth centuries.

nomocracy (nō-mok′rā-si), n. [< Gr. νόμος, law, + κρατία, < κρατεῖν, rule.] A system of government established and carried out in accordance with a code of laws: as, the nomocracy of the ancient Hebrew commonwealth. Milman.

nomogenist (nō-moj′e-nist), n. [< nomogen-y + -ist.] One who upholds or believes in nomogeny: opposed to thaumatogenist. Owen.

To meet the inevitable question of "Whence the first organic matter?" the Nomogenist is reduced to enumerate the existing elements into which the simplest living jelly or sarcode is resolvable.
Owen, Comp. Anat. (1868), III. 817.

nomogeny (nō-moj′e-ni), n. [< Gr. νόμος, law, + -γένεια, < -γενής, producing: see -geny.] The origination of life under the operation of existing natural law, and not by miracle: opposed to thaumatogeny. The word was introduced by Owen in the quotation here given, as nearly synonymous with epigenesis.

§ 428. Nomogeny or Thaumatogeny?—The French Academy of Sciences was the field of discussion and debate from 1861 to 1864, between the "Evolutionists," holding the doctrine of primary life by miracle, and the "Epigenesists," who try to show that the phenomena are due to the operation of existing law.
Owen, Comp. Anat. (1868), III. 814.

nomographer (nō-mog′ra-fėr), n. [< nomograph-y + -er[1].] One who writes on or is versed in the subject of nomography.

nomography (nō-mog′ra-fi), n. [= F. nomographie = Sp. nomografía, < Gr. νομογραφία, writing of laws, written legislation, < νομογράφος, one who writes or gives laws, < νόμος, law, + -γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] Exposition of the proper manner of drawing up laws; that part of the art of legislation which has relation to the form given, or proper to be given, to the matter of a law. Bentham, Nomography, or the Art of Inditing Laws.

nomological (nom-ō-loj′i-kal), a. [< nomolog-y + -ic-al.] Or or pertaining to nomology, in any of its meanings.

It would take too long in this place to analyze in nomological terms this remarkably opaque utterance.
Westminster Rev., CXXVI. 126.

Nomological psychology, the nomology of mind; the science of the laws by which the mental faculties are governed.

nomologist (nō-mol′ō-jist), n. [< nomolog-y + -ist.] A specialist in nomology; one who is versed in the science of law.

nomology (nō-mol′ō-ji), n. [< Gr. νόμος, law, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] 1. The science of law and legislation.

Rather what may be termed nomology, or the inductive science of law. Westminster Rev., CXXVI. 143.

2. The science of the laws of the mind, especially of the fundamental laws of thinking.

It leaves to the proper Nomology of the Presentative Faculties—the Nomology of Perception, the Nomology of the Regulative and Intuitive Faculty—to prescribe the conditions of a perfect cognition of the matter which it appertains to them to apprehend.
H. N. Day, Logic, p. 137.

3. That part of botany which relates to the laws which govern the variations of organs.

nomopelmous (nom-ō-pel′mus), a. [< Gr. νόμος, law, + πέλμα, sole.] In ornith., having the normal or usual arrangement of the flexor tendons of the foot, the tendon of the flexor hallucis being entirely separate from that of the common flexor of the other toes. The arrangement is also called schizopelmous, and is contrasted with the sympelmous, antiopelmous, and heteropelmous dispositions of these tendons.

nomophylax (nō-mof′i-laks), n.; pl. nomophylaces (nom-ō-phil′a-sēz). [< Gr. νομοφύλαξ, a guardian of the laws, < νόμος, law, + φύλαξ, a guardian.] In Gr. antiq., a guardian of the laws; specifically, one of a board of seven magistrates which, during the age of Pericles, sat in presence of the popular assembly of Athens, and adjourned the meeting if it apprehended that the people were about to be carried away into taking unlawful action, and also watched the observance and enforcement of the laws. There were magistrates bearing the same name at Sparta also, and in other Greek states.

nomos[1] (nō′mos), n. [< Gr. νομός, a district, nome: see nome[4].] In modern Greece, a nome; a nomarchy.

It [Ithaca] forms an eparchy of the nomos of Cephalonia in the kingdom of Greece. Encyc. Brit., XIII. 517.

nomos[2] (nō′mos), n. [< Gr. νόμος, usage, custom, law, a musical mode or strain: see nome[5].] In anc. Gr. music, same as nome[5].

nomothesia (nom-ō-thē′si-ä), n. [NL.: see nomothesy.] 1. Law-giving; legislation; a code of laws.—2. The institution, functions, authority, etc., of the nomothetes.

If the foregoing hypotheses be sound, then the permanent institution of the Nomothesia in the archonship of Eukleides was an innovation of cardinal significance. Amer. Jour. Philol., X. 82.

nomothesy (nom′ō-thes-i), n. [< NL. nomothesia, Gr. νομοθεσία, lawgiving, legislation (cf. νομοθέτης, a lawgiver: see nomothete), < νόμος, law, + θετός, verbal adj. of τιθέναι, put: see thesis.] Same as nomothesia. [Rare.]

nomotheta (nō-moth′e-tä), n.; pl. nomothetæ (-tē). [NL.: see nomothete.] Same as nomothete.

If one should choose to suppose that the first and second of the measures just cited were formally ratified by the Nomothetæ, it would be hard to disprove it, though there is nothing in the record to favor the supposition. Amer. Jour. Philol., X. 83.

nomothete (nom′ō-thēt), n. [< NL. nomotheta, < Gr. νομοθέτης, a lawgiver, < νόμος, usage, custom, law, + τιθέναι, place, set, cause: see thesis.] In ancient Athens, after the archonship of Eucl ides (403–2 B. C.), one of a panel of heliasts or jurors intrusted with the decision as to any proposed change in legislation. It was provided that all motions to repeal or amend an existing law should be brought before the ecclesia or general meeting of citizens, at the beginning of the year. They might be then and there rejected; but if a motion was received favorably, the ecclesia appointed a body of nomothetes, sometimes as many as a thousand in number, before whom the proposal was put on trial according to the regular forms of Athenian judicial procedure. A majority vote of the nomothetes was decisive for acceptance or rejection. See ★ quotation under nomotheta.

nomothetic (nom-ō-thet′ik), a. [< Gr. νομοθετικός, pertaining to a lawgiver or to legislation, < νομοθέτης, a lawgiver: see nomothete.] 1. Legislative; enacting laws.—2. Pertaining to a nomothete, or to the body of nomothetes.—3. Founded on a system of law or by a lawgiver; nomistic: as, nomothetic religions.

non-concurrence (non-kọn-kur'ens), n. A refusal to concur.

non-condensing (non-kọn-den'sing), a. Not condensing.—Non-condensing engine, a steam-engine, usually high-pressure, in which the steam on the non-effective side of the piston is allowed to escape into the atmosphere, in contradistinction to a condensing engine, in which the steam in advance of the piston is condensed to create a partial vacuum, and thus add to the mean effective pressure of the steam which impels it.

non-conducting (non-kọn-duk'ting), a. Not conducting; not transmitting: thus, with respect to electricity, wax is a non-conducting substance.

non-conduction (non-kọn-duk'shọn), n. The quality of not conducting or transmitting; failure, on account of the resistance offered to the passage of heat or of the electric current, to transmit: as, the non-conduction of heat.

non-conductor (non-kọn-duk'tọr), n. A substance which does not conduct or transmit a particular form of energy (specifically, heat or electricity), or which transmits it with difficulty: thus, wool is a non-conductor of heat; glass and dry wood are non-conductors of electricity. See conductor, 6, electricity, and heat.

nonconforming (non-kọn-fôr'ming), a. [< non- + conforming.] Failing or refusing to conform; specifically, refusing to comply with the requisitions of the Act of Uniformity, or to conform to the forms and regulations of the Church of England. See nonconformist.

The non-conforming ministers were prohibited, upon a penalty of forty pounds for every offence, to come, unless only in passing upon the road, within five miles of any city, corporation, . . . or place where they had been ministers, or had preached, after the act of uniformity. Locke, Letter from a Person of Quality.

nonconformist (non-kọn-fôr'mist), n. [< non- + conformist.] 1. One who does not conform to some law or usage, especially to some ecclesiastical law.

Whoso would be a man must be a nonconformist. Emerson, Essays, 1st ser., p. 43.

2. Specifically, in Eng. hist., one of those clergymen who refused to subscribe the Act of Uniformity passed in 1662, demanding "assent and consent" to everything contained in the Book of Common Prayer, and by extension any one who refuses to conform to the order and liturgy of the Church of England. See dissenter, 2.

On his death-bed he declared himself a Non-conformist, and had a fanatic preacher to be his spiritual guide. Swift.

A Nonconformist, from the first, was not an opponent of the general system of Uniformity. He was a churchman who differed from other churchmen on certain matters touching Order, though agreeing with them in the rest of the discipline and government of the Church. . . . In the following generation it took wider ground, and came to involve the whole of Church government, and the difference between prelacy and presbyterianism. R. W. Dixon, Hist. Church of Eng., xvii.

3. In entom., the noctuid moth Xylina zinckeni: an English collectors' name, applied in distinction from X. conformis.—Syn. 2. Dissenter, etc. See heretic.

non-conformitancy† (non-kọn-fôr'mi-tạn-si), n. [< non-conformitan(t) + -cy.] Nonconformity.

Oh come, I say now, none of that; that won't do; let 's take a glass together. Scribner's Mag., IV. 728.

3†. Nothing.

True eloquence I find to be none but the serious and hearty love of truth. Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus.

none[1] (nun), adv. [< ME. non, noon, none, etc.; orig. acc. or instr. of the adj. none: see none[1], a. Cf. no[2], adv.] In no respect or degree; to no extent; not a whit; not; no: as, none the better.—None the more, none the less, not the more or not the less on that account.

His eager eye scanned Mr. D.'s downcast face none the less closely. Dickens, Dombey and Son, xlii.

none[2]†, n. A Middle English form of noon[1].

non-effective (non-e-fek'tiv), a. and n. I. a. 1. Having no power to produce an effect; causing no effect.—2. Unfitted for active service: applied to that portion of the personnel of an army or a navy that is not in a condition for active service, as superannuated and half-pay officers, pensioners, and the like.—3. Connected with non-effectives, their maintenance, etc.

The non-effective charge, which is now a heavy part of our public burdens, can hardly be said to have existed. Macaulay.

II. n. A member of a military force who is not in condition for active service, as through age, illness, etc.

non-efficient (non-e-fish'ent), a. and n. I. a. Not efficient, effectual, or competent.

II. n. One who is not efficient; specifically, in Great Britain, a volunteer who has not attended a prescribed number of drills and shown a requisite degree of proficiency in shooting.

non-ego (non-ē'gō), n. In metaph., all that is not the conscious self or ego; the object as opposed to the subject.

The ego, as the subject of thought and knowledge, is now commonly styled by philosophers the subject; and subjective is a familiar expression for what pertains to the mind or thinking principle. In contrast and correlation to these, the terms object and objective are, in like manner, now in general use to denote the non-ego, its affections and properties, and in general the really existent, as opposed to the ideally known. Sir W. Hamilton (in Reid), Supplementary Dissertations, [note B, § i. 6.

non-egoistical (non-ē-gō-is'ti-kạl), a. Pertaining to the non-ego.

This cruder form of egoistical representationism coincides with that finer form of the non-egoistical which views the vicarious object as spiritual. Sir W. Hamilton (in Reid), Supplementary Dissertations, [note C, § 1.

Non-egoistical idea, an idea which has a substantial existence distinct from its existence as a mode of the mind.—Non-egoistical idealism, the doctrine that non-egoistical ideas are concerned in external perception.

non-elastic (non-ē-las'tik), a. Not elastic; without the property of elasticity. Liquids were formerly termed non-elastic fluids, because they differ from gases in being nearly incompressible.

non-elect (non-ē-lekt'), a. and n. I. a. Not elected or chosen.

II. n. One who is not elected or chosen; specifically, in theol., a person not chosen or predestined to eternal life.

non-election (non-ē-lek'shon), n. The state of not being elected.

non-electric (non-ē-lek'trik), a. and n. I. a. Not electric; conducting electricity: now disused.

non-intercourse (non-in'tėr-kōrs), n. A refraining from intercourse.—Non-intercourse Act, an act of the United States Congress of 1809, passed in retaliation for claims made by France and Great Britain affecting the commerce of the United States, and particularly the personal rights of United States seamen, continued 1809 and 1810, and against Great Britain 1811. It prohibited the entry of merchant vessels belonging to those countries into the ports of the United States, and the importation of goods grown or manufactured in those countries.

non-intervention (non-in-tėr-ven'shon), n. The act or policy of not intervening or not interfering; specifically, systematic non-interference by a nation in the affairs of other nations, or in the affairs of its own states, territories, or other parts.

Non-intervention with "Popular Sovereignty" was the original and established Democratic doctrine with regard to Slavery in the Territories. H. Greeley, Amer. Conflict, I. 312.

non-intrusionist (non-in-trō'zhon-ist), n. In Scottish eccles. hist., one who was opposed to the forcible intrusion, by patrons, of unacceptable clergymen upon objecting congregations. The non-intrusionists formulated their doctrine in a resolution presented by Thomas Chalmers to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland in 1833, and in 1843 withdrew in a body from the established church and founded the Free Church of Scotland. See disruption.

non-issuable (non-ish'ö-a-bl), a. 1. Not capable of being issued.—2. Not admitting of issue being taken upon it.—Non-issuable plea, in law, a plea which does not raise or allow an issue on the merits of the case. Wharton.

non-joinder (non-join'dėr), n. In law, the omission to join as party to an action.

nonjurable (non-jö'ra-bl), a. [< L. non, not, + jurabilis,* < jurare, swear: see jurant.] Incapable of being sworn; unfit to take an oath; incapacitated from being a witness on oath.

A nonjurable rogue. Roger North, Examen, p. 264. (Davies.)

nonjurant (non-jö'rant), n. [< non- + jurant.] One of a faction in the Church of Scotland, about 1712, which refused to take the oath of abjuration pledging them to the support of the house of Hanover.

nonjuring (non-jö'ring), a. [< nonjur(ant) + -ing[2].] Not swearing allegiance: an epithet applied to those clergymen and prelates in England who would not swear allegiance to the government after the revolution of 1688.

This objection was offered me by a very pious, learned, and worthy gentleman of the nonjuring party. Swift.

nonjuror (non-jö'ror), n. [< non- + juror.] In Eng. hist., one who refuses to swear allegiance to the sovereign; specifically, one of those clergymen of the Church of England who in 1689 refused to swear allegiance to William, Prince of Orange, and the Princess Mary, as king and queen of England, holding that they were still bound by the former oath to King James II., his heirs and successors. Dr. Sancroft, Archbishop of Canterbury, six bishops (among them Bishop Ken), and about four hundred other clergymen were deprived of their sees and livings by the new civil authority, and others put in their places. An episcopal succession was kept up by the nonjurors in both England and Scotland, but their numbers rapidly diminished, and their last bishop died in 1805. Part of the nonjuring bishops retained the use of the Prayer-book of 1662, others restored the communion office of 1549, and afterward (in 1718) introduced one founded on this, but largely conformed to primitive and Oriental liturgies. This exerted a strong influence on the various forms of the Scottish communion office till that of 1764, from which the prayer of consecration in the American Prayer-book is derived. According to their acceptance or rejection of certain ceremonies, called the usages, the nonjurors were divided into two parties, called usagers and non-usagers. In the years 1716–25 the nonjurors made an attempt to establish intercommunion with the Orthodox Eastern Church, but without success. The nonjurors are noted for the great learning and piety of some of their leaders, such as Ken, Collier, Brett, Nelson, Law, etc. Among the Presbyterians of Scotland there was also a party known as nonjurors or nonjurants, who refused the oath of abjuration (afterward altered) as involving recognition of episcopacy.

Every person refusing the same [oaths of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration] who is properly called a nonjuror shall be adjudged a popish recusant convict. Blackstone, Com., IV. ix.

nonjurorism (non-jö'ror-izm), n. [< nonjuror + -ism.] The principles or practices of nonjurors.

non liquet (non lī'kwet). [L.: non, not; liquet, 3d pers. sing. pres. ind. of liquere, be clear or apparent: see liquid.] In law, a verdict given by a jury in cases of doubt, deferring the matter to another day of trial.

non-luminous (non-lū'mi-nus), a. Not luminous; not accompanied by or not producing incandescence.

In this case we found that, with non-luminous heat, and even with water below the boiling point, the polarizing effect was evident. Whewell.

A non-marrying man, as the slang goes. Kingsley.

non-metallic (non-me-tal'ik), a. Not metallic.

non-moral (non-mor'al), a. Unconnected with morals; having no relation to ethics or morals; not involving ethical or moral considerations.

For morality the world and the self remained both non-moral and immoral, yet each was real; for religion the world is alienated from God, and the self is sunk in sin; and that means that, against the whole reality, they are felt or known as what is not and is contrary to the all and the only real, and yet as things that exist. F. H. Bradley, Ethical Studies, p. 287.

non-mutual (non-mū'tū-al), a. Not mutual.—Non-mutual essential distinction, a distinction between whole and part: originally a Scotistic term.

nonnat (non'at), n. [F. dial.] A fish, Aphia minuta or pellucida, family Gobiidæ, marked by a diaphanous body covered with large and thin deciduous scales, common on some parts of the European coast, especially in the Mediterranean and the Black Sea. It lives in innumerable schools, and serves as food for many fishes and seabirds as well as other animals, and on the borders of the Mediterranean is largely used by man. In the vicinity of Nice it is the object of a special fishery, particularly during the month of March, the small fishes being considered a very dainty dish. The fish rarely exceeds an inch and a half in length. It is believed to complete its cycle of life within a year. Under the name nonnat the young of other fishes, especially of the families Clupeidæ and Atherinidæ, are liable to be confounded.

non-natural (non-naṭ′ū-ral), a. and n. I. a. Not natural; unnatural; strained or forced.

I refer to the doctrine there promulgated touching the subscription of religious articles in a non-natural sense. Sir W. Hamilton.

II. n. That which is not natural; specifically, something which does not enter into the composition of the body, but which is essential to animal life and health, and by accident or abuse often becomes a cause of disease. See the quotation.

The non-naturals, as he [Dr. Jackson] would sometimes call them, after the old physicians — namely, air, meat and drink, sleep and watching, motion and rest, the retentions and excretions, and the affections of the mind. O. W. Holmes, Med. Essays, p. 307.

nonnet, n. A Middle English form of nun.

[L.: non, not; obstante, abl. of obstan(t-)s, ppr. of obstare, stand in the way, oppose: see obstacle.] Notwithstanding; in opposition to what has been stated or admitted or is to be stated or admitted. The most common use of the words is to denote a clause, formerly frequent in English statutes and letters patent, importing a license from the sovereign to do a thing which at common law might be lawfully done, but being restrained by act of Parliament could not be done without such license. — Non obstante veredicto, a judgment sometimes entered by order of the court for the plaintiff, notwithstanding the verdict for the defendant, or vice versa. See judgment.

nonogenarian, a. and n. See nonagenarian.

non-oscine (non-os′in), a. Not oscine; not belonging to the Oscines, or not conforming to normal oscine characters.

nonpairell†, a. See nonpareil.

Non-palliata (non-pal-i-ā′tä), n. pl. [NL., < non- + Palliata.] A suborder of opisthobranchiate euthyneural gastropods having no mantle-flap nor shell in the adult: contrasted with Palliata: synonymous with Nudibranchiata.

nonpareil (non-pa-rel′), a. and n. [Formerly also nonpairell; = Sp. nomparell, n.; < F. nonpareil, nompareil, not equal (fem. nonpareille, a kind of type, ribbon, pear, etc.), < non, not (see non[3]), + pareil, equal: see pareil.] I. a. Having no equal; peerless.

The most nonpareil beauty of the world, beauteous knowledge, standeth unregarded, or cloistered up in mere speculation. Whitlock, Manners of Eng. People.

II. n. A person or thing of peerless excellence; a nonesuch; something regarded as unique in its kind.

O, such love
Could be but recompensed, though you were crown'd
The nonpareil of beauty! Shak., T. N., i. 5. 273.

The paragon, the nonpareil
Of Seville, the most wealthy mine of Spain
For beauty and perfection.
Fletcher (and another), Love's Cure, iii. 2.

Specifically — (a) In ornith.: (1) The painted finch or painted bunting, Passerina or Cyanospiza ciris: so called from its beauty. The top and sides of the head and neck are rich blue, the back golden-green, the rump and under parts vermilion-red. The female is greenish above, yellowish below. The bird is about 5½ inches long, and common in the South Atlantic and Gulf States, especially Louisiana, where it is sometimes called pape or pope. It is a near relative of the indigo-bird and the lazuli-finch. Also called incomparable.

A nonpareil hidden in the branches sat whistling plaintively to its mate. F. R. Goulding, Young Marooners, xxxvi.

(2) The rose- or rosella-parrakeet, Platycercus eximius: so called from its beauty. See cut under rosella. (b) In conch., a gastropod of the genus Clausilia. (c) In printing, a size of type, forming about 12 lines to the inch. In the American system of sizes it is intermediate between minion (larger) and agate (smaller); in the English system it is between the sizes emerald (larger) and ruby (smaller). (The type of this paragraph is nonpareil.)

nonplus (non′plus), n. [< L. non plus, not more: non, not; plus, more: see non[3] and plus.] A state in which one is unable to proceed or decide; a state of perplexity; a puzzled condition; inability to say or do more; puzzle: usually in the phrase at or to a nonplus.

Il y perdit son Latin: He was there gravelled, plunged, or at a Non-plus; he knew not what to make of or what to say unto it. Cotgrave.

If he chance to be at a nonplus, he may help himself with his beard and handkerchief. Shirley, Love Tricks, iii. 5.

They could not, if they would, undertake such a business, without danger of being questioned upon their lives the next parliament. This did put the Lords to a great nonplus. Court and Times of Charles I., I. 118.

nonplus (non′plus), v. t.; pret. and pp. nonplussed, ppr. nonplussing. [< nonplus, n.] To perplex; puzzle; confound; put to a standstill; stop by embarrassment.

Now non-plust, if to re-inforce thy Camp
Thou fly for succour to thine Ayery Damp, Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Ark.

In the Becket correspondence the reader is often nonplussed by finding a provoking etcetera, which marks the point at which the gossip, or even the serious news, was expunged by the editor. Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 128.

non possumus (non pos′ū-mus). [L., we cannot: non, not; possumus, 1st pers. pl. pres. ind. of posse, can.] A plea of inability (to consider or do something): as, he simply interposed a non possumus; a papal non possumus.

non-power† (non-pou′ėr), n. [ME. nonepower, nounpower, < OF. nonpooir, nonpoeir, lack of power, < non, not, + pooir, etc., power: see power.] Lack of power; impotence.

And nat of the nounpower of god that he nys ful of myghte. Piers Plowman (C), xx. 292.

Upon thilke side that power fayleth whych that make th foolk blysful, ryht on that same side nonepower entreth undyrnethe that maketh hem wrechches. Chaucer, Boethius, iii. prose v.

non-proficient (non-prō-fish′ent), n. One who has failed to improve or make progress in any study or pursuit.

non pros. (non pros). An abbreviation of non prosequitur: sometimes used as a verb: to fail to prosecute; let drop: said of a suit.

non prosequitur (non prō-sek′wi-tėr). [L., he does not prosecute: non, not; prosequitur, 3d pers. sing. pres. ind. of prosequi, follow up, prosecute: see prosecute.] In law, a common-law judgment entered against the plaintiff when he does not prosecute his action.

non-recurrent (non-rē-kur′ent), a. 1. Not occurring again. — 2. Not turning back: as, the recurrent and non-recurrent branches of the pneumogastric nerve.

non-recurring (non-rē-kėr′ing), a. Non-recurrent.

non-regardance (non-rē-gär′dans), n. Want of due regard; slight; disregard. Shak., T. N., v. 1. 124.

non-regent (non-rē′jent), n. In a medieval university, a master of arts whose regency has ceased. — House of non-regents. See house[1].

non-residence (non-rez′i-dens), n. 1. The fact of not residing or having one's abode within a particular jurisdiction: as, non-residence stands in the way of his appointment. — 2. Failure to reside where official duties require one to reside; a residing away from the place in which one is required by law or the duties of his office or station to reside, as a clergyman's living away from his pastorate or charge, or a landlord's not living on his own estate or in his own country, etc.

Hating that they who have preach'd out Bishops, Prelats, and Canonists, should, in what serves thir own ends, retain thir fals Opinions, thir Pharisaical Leven, thir Avarice, and closely, thir Ambition, thir Pluralities, thir Non residences, thir odious Fees. Milton, Touching Hirelings.

If the character of persons chosen into the Church had been regarded, there would be fewer complaints of non-residence. Swift.

non-resident (non-rez′i-dent), a. and n. I. a. 1. Not residing within the jurisdiction. — 2. Not residing on one's own estate, in one's pastorate, or in one's proper place: as, a non-resident clergyman or land-owner.

II. n. 1. One who does not reside within the jurisdiction. — 2. One who does not reside on his own lands or in the place where his official duties require, as a clergyman who lives away from his cure.

As soon as the Bishops, and those Clergymen whom they daily inveighed against, and branded with the odious Names of Pluralists and Non-residents, were taken out of their way, they presently jump, some into two, some into three of their best Benefices. Milton, Answer to Salmasius, i. 29.

There are not ten clergymen in the kingdom who . . . can be termed non-residents. Swift, Against the Bishops.

non-resistance (non-rē-zis′tans), n. The absence of resistance; passive obedience; submission to authority, even if unjustly exercised, without physical opposition. In English history, this principle was strenuously upheld by many of the Tory and High-Church party about the end of the seventeenth century.

The slavish principles of passive obedience and non resistance, which had skulked perhaps in some old homily before King James the first. Bolingbroke, Parties, viii.

The church might be awed or cajoled into any practical acceptation of its favourite doctrine of non-resistance. C. Knight.

non-resistant (non-rē-zis′tant), a. and n. I. a. Making no resistance to power or oppression; passively obedient.

This is that Œdipus whose wisdom can reconcile inconsistent opposites, and teach passive obedience and non-resistant principles to despise government, and to fly in the face of sovereign authority. Arbuthnot.

II. n. 1. One who maintains that no resistance should be made to sovereign authority, even when unjustly exercised. — 2. One who holds that violence should never be resisted by force.

non-resisting (non-rē-zis′ting), a. Making no resistance; offering no obstruction: as, a non-resisting medium.

Non-ruminantia (non-rö-mi-nan′shi-ä), n. pl. [NL., < non- + Ruminantia.] Those artiodactyl quadrupeds which do not chew the cud, as swine and hippopotamuses.

non-sane (non-sān′), a. Unsound; not perfect: as, a person of non-sane memory. Blackstone.

nonsense (non′sens), n. [< non- + sense.] 1. Not sense; that which makes no sense or is lacking in sense; language or words without meaning, or conveying absurd or ridiculous ideas; absurd talk or senseless actions.

Away with it rather, because it will bee hardly supply'd with a more unprofitable nonsence then is in some passages of it to be seene. Milton, Animadversions.

I try'd if Books would cure my Love, but found Love made them Nonsense all.
Cowley, The Mistress, The Incurable.

If a Man must endure the noise of Words without Sense, I think the Women have more Musical Voices, and become Nonsense better. Congreve, Double-Dealer, i. 1.

None but a man of extraordinary talents can write first-rate nonsense. De Quincey, Secret Societies, i.

2. Trifles; things of no importance.

What royal Nonsence is a Diadem Abroad, for One who 's not at home supreme!
J. Beaumont, Psyche, v. 1.

You sham stuff, there is an end of you — you must pack off, along with plenty of other nonsense. W. Black.

=Syn. Folly, stuff, twaddle, balderdash.

nonsense-name (non′sens-nām), n. A name having no meaning in itself; a "made" noun having no etymology. The number of such words in zoölogy is very considerable, since many naturalists have coined numerous arbitrary new combinations of letters as names of genera which must be adopted according to accepted rules of zoölogical nomenclature. Anagrams, as Dacelo from Alcedo, and Nilaus from Lanius, are a class of nonsense-names, though they have a sort of etymology.

nonsense-verses (non'sens-vėr″sez), n. pl. Verses made by taking any words which may occur without reference to forming any connected sense — correct meter, pleasing rhythm, or a grotesque effect being all that is aimed at. In English schools Latin verse-composition often begins with nonsense-verses, the object being to familiarize the pupil with the quantity of syllables and the metrical forms on their mechanical side before aiming at expression of thought.

nonsensical (non-sen'si-kal), a. [Irreg. < nonsense + -ic-al.] Of the nature of nonsense; having no sense; unmeaning; absurd; foolish.

This was the second time we had been left together by a parcel of nonsensical contingencies.
Sterne, Sentimental Journey, p. 27.

nonsensicality (non-sen-si-kal'i-ti), n. [< nonsensical + -ity.] The quality of being nonsensical, or without sense or meaning.

nonsensically (non-sen'si-kal-i), adv. In a nonsensical manner; absurdly; without meaning.

nonsensicalness (non-sen'si-kal-nes), n. Lack of meaning; absurdity; that which conveys no proper ideas.

non-sensitive (non-sen'si-tiv), a. and n. I. a. 1. Not sensitive; not keenly alive to impressions from external objects. — 2†. Wanting sense or perception.

II. n. One having no sense or perception.

Undoubtedly, whatsoever we preach of contentedness in want, no precepts can so gain upon nature as to make her a non-sensitive.
Feltham, Resolves, i. 14.

non seq. An abbreviation of Latin non sequitur.
